—Be sure to include our new Superintendent's and Teacher's Quarterlies in your order for Bible school literature. They are America's best.

—Our new Superintendent's and Home Department Quarterlies are superb helps to the understanding of the lessons. The price only is inconsequential.

—Of all those Peloubet's Notes we advertised last week only two are left. Our patrons are learning to take quick advantage of our "specials." We have 54 of the 1907 Dowling's Commentary that we will send postpaid for 50 cents.

—Week by week we publish lists of books printed by us and also by other great publishers. Each of these well merits generous advertising, but space forbids. The prices quoted include postage. Special circulars will be mailed inquirers.

—"The Mountain People of Kentucky," by a Kentuckian, has been reduced to $1, thus placing it within the reach of all. It contains 200 pages and is illustrated with a typical "moonshine still," "mountain school," etc. Handsomely bound in red art cloth and stamped in gold.

—We are selling our third shipment of R. A. Torrey's "Anecdotes and Illustrations." It is one of the most popular of the many specialties we try to secure for our readers. These are almost, without exception, original with the author. In cloth, 75 cents. In paper, 35 cents net.

—The publishers of Edersheim's great "History of the Jewish People" recently advised us that only 1,000 more copies would be sold at reduced price. We immediately secured several sets for our subscribers. The price is $7.50, but while this 1,000 lasts we can furnish them for $3.50. Denominational papers are doubtless advertising these same terms. Our profit is small, but we would like to see the greatest possible number of Disciples have these splendid volumes in their libraries.

—We have had to impress a new clerk into service in our book room. Our installment plan, our free delivery of net books, our quick service and the wide range of our merchandise department are giving us a trade far beyond our most sanguine expectations of a year ago.

—In answer to inquiries, will state we do not have Volume No. 1 of "Johnson's New Testament with Notes" to sell at any discount. We have some odd numbers of Volume No. 2, including the Epistles and Revelation, bound in sheep and half-morocco, that we will sell, postpaid, for $2 and $2.50.

—We can supply both the 1906 and the 1907 Dowling Lesson Commentaries for $1, postpaid. It takes seven volumes to complete the International Sunday-school course through the Bible. This set contains a devout and scholarly interpretation of almost the entire Word. We can match up a few incomplete sets.

—In the death of N. J. Aylsworth our people have lost one of their greatest scholars and writers. His work on the "Moral and Spiritual Aspects of Baptism" is one of the masterpieces of our literature. It is sold for $1.50, and contributes more to popular understanding and helpfulness of this great doctrine than a cart load of ordinary books.

—Our clubs are a general but not an accurate index to the growth of our circulation. Many new names were added last week. Among them we are pleased to note the following clubs:

Mattoon, Ill., D. N. Wetzel, pastor..... 5
Taskee Station, Mo. 5
Bryan, Texas, Jas. A. Challener, pastor..... 6
Sullivan, Ill., J. G. McNutt, pastor.....21

—In this, our Educational Number, the History of Bethany College naturally looms large. One of the great lives connected with it was that of W. K. Pendleton, for many years its honored President. F. D. Power, in his life of W. K. Pendleton ($1.50), not only tells the life-story of the man, but also gives a complete history of Bethany College.

—The composition of our roll blackboards is the new material called neolophite. It is practically indestructible. We will send you one slated on one side, 4x5 feet, for $2.15; slated on both sides, $2.50. We have them in all sizes, from 2x2 feet up to 4x7 feet, with prices ranging from 85 cents to $3.25. The music lines cost $1 extra. We have them in frames also.

—Many of our most influential preachers will ride into the Norfolk convention on THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST Special over the Big Four and the Chesapeake and Ohio. You will greatly enjoy their company. Many of these will take the greater delight in their trip because the expense is not taken from their regular salary account. They will have defrayed the charge by introducing THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST into new homes. How the preacher will enjoy riding down the Potomac! How the subscriber will enjoy the Easy Chair, our new serial in the Home Department, and other delightful features of the paper all the year through!

WHAT OUR FRIENDS ARE SAYING.

We prize THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST very highly. My mother says she does not know how she could get along without it.—Lucy Dazey, Dill, Okla.

"The Bible School To-day," by J. H. Hardin, ought to be in every Sunday-school library and every home. It is splendid.—W. H. Waggoner (evangelist).

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is like some kind of cheese—the older it grows the better it is. I should very much regret missing a single copy.—Mrs. W. S. Harvey, Santa Rosa, Cal.

I have been reading the "Normal Instructor" and find it the best book published for young Sunday-school students. Send me one-half dozen of the first part.—W. A. Lewis, Deanville, Tex.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is growing better all the time. I approve of the conservative course it is pursuing. Enclosed find $1.50 with best wishes for its success.—James M. Beasley, Stamps, Ark.

I think I will be able to send you another subscriber soon. I have loaned my paper to a friend, who was a Methodist until she read your paper. [It converts to the true faith.—S.]—Miss A. E. Williams.

Reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has given me much pleasure and satisfaction during the last twenty-five years. It certainly improves as the years go by. I particularly enjoyed the "Elderburg Association," as well as "With the Children." Breckenridge Ellis is doing a great work and deserves the commendation and support of Christian people.—Mrs. E. M. Burk, Independence, Kan.

The Right Uses of Culture

By Wayland Hoyt

"There are some who seek to know only that they may know, and it is base curiosity; and some who wish to know only that they may be known, and it is base vanity; and some who wish to know only that they may sell their knowledge, and it is base covetousness; but there are also some who wish to know that they may edify, and it is charity; and some who wish to know that they may be edified, and it is heavenly prudence."

And truer words than these of the mediaeval Saint Bernard, as to the wrong use of culture on the one hand and as to the right use of it on the other, I have not found.

There is a famed engraving by Albert Durer. It is the picture of a grand woman, vigorous with health, large in sympathy, with the beautiful radiance of a trained intellect setting its crown upon her brow—the picture of a woman able every way for the endeavors, the ministries, the victories, the joys of life.

Culture this utmost woman means.

About her are strewn the various implements of knowledge and of service—scrolls of ancient lore, books of modern time, also the finely fashioned tools of scientific research; in her left hand she grasps a compass.

But the title of the picture is Melancholia. With chin resting on right hand, this splendid woman sits brooding in sad vacancy. She is mistress of much. She is skillful toward many things. But, instead of being strung with effort, she is limp and captured of despondency—past her the empty hours drift. Her whole attitude and gesture are a kind of despairing questioning as to where and how she shall apply all this she has acquired and has become. To what end?—this is at once her problem and the reason of her sadness. And, until that asking find high and sufficient answer, and until she shall marshal all she has and all she is in glad obedience to that answer, this radiant woman, this embodiment of culture, can be only defeated melancholy; she can never be buoyant and benignant triumph.

"But there are some who also wish to know that they may edify, and it is charity; and some who wish to know that they may be edified, and it is heavenly prudence."

Only, change the order of these words of Saint Bernard as to the right uses of culture. Take the last clause first—"and some who wish to know that they may be edified, and it is heavenly prudence," and I am sure you strike a truer order. First the sun, then the light; first the spring, then the wonder of the flowers; first the clear fountain, then the pellucid stream; first the true soul, then the holy deed; first the being edified, then the building up of others—this is the real order evermore.

A first right use of culture, then, is that one may win a noble development of the self.

And will you keep in mind here a very real and radical distinction, that between an enlightened self-interest and selfishness. If God should ever say to me, "Be sure you enter heaven, because there is only just so much heaven, and if you do not get in somebody else will; seize your chance, therefore, and get in first, and so crowd others out"—that would be an appeal to selfishness. For selfishness is love of self beyond others. But a true and enlightened self-interest is a desire to be the best and to get the best one can and ought, not at cost to others, but without injury to others. Certainly nothing can be truer, nothing can be more right, than that I—a soul weighted with an eternal destiny—should desire and determine to reach the most shining destiny possible for myself. It is not a question as toward others. Nobody will have less of heaven because, by God's good grace, at last I enter it. It is a question for myself. It is a question demanding answer from a true self-interest. And this desire for the best good of the self, that the soul may rise into the glorious realm and possession God means the soul shall rise to, is a desire rightful and legitimate, and one to which our Lord himself appeals when he beseeches me not to make a bad bargain for myself, and, though I may win the world, yet lose myself. And what is true for

"Those shining table-lands Where God Himself is moon and sun" is just as true for culture in

"This dim, low-thoughted spot
Which we call earth."

It is not selfishness to seek it. It is righteous self-interest to be bound to win it. Surely this grand woman in Albert Durer's picture has not been doing wrongly in achieving her large and many-sided culture. Saint Bernard would call it "heavenly prudence," and Saint Bernard would name it rightly.

Whisper this into the ear of your great woman in Albert Durer's picture. Tell her that, like the apostle, she has not yet grasped all that for which God has grasped her; tell her that there is a higher knowledge for her and wider vision, and defter skill, and sympathy more sensitive; bid her gather herself to win all these—and you have broken melancholy, and dissipated a listless and miserable ennui which is forevermore the doom of a culture which, knowing somewhat and being somewhat, will not follow on to further know and be—and you have filled her eye with a fresh light, and made tense her glorious powers with alertness and endeavor.

A right use of culture is for the best and highest development of the self.

"But there are some also who wish to know that they may edify, and it is charity," says Saint Bernard. If I care only to be edified, and not to edify, I miss a further most noble use of culture; it is even possible I change my blessing of culture into blight. For a second use of culture is for service.

Tell this also to your grand woman in Albert Durer's picture: Not only, O grand woman, is there culture for you and for self's sake, but you may not make self the only aim; you may not let a right self-interest pass over into a withering selfishness. By the height of the culture the self has won is to be measured the width of the service the self should do for others. Tell this to her of the famed picture and—how her dull eye shall flash, and every nerve tingle, and every power, grace, gift, range and rank themselves at this high behest of service for other's sake. And how immeasurably worth the living shall life be felt to be!

THE SPIRIT OF HOPE.

Say not past days were best. Believe that God,
Of whom are all the days, hath better things
For those who do His will. His store of good
Exhaustless is, and He but waits to know
His children can receive that best
He yearns still to bestow.

Relations With Japan.

The Japanese war-scare dies as slowly as a decapitated snake, thought it is just as surely lacking in any genuine vitality. The little flurry over the exclusion of Japanese school children from the public schools of San Francisco soon passed. But the jingo papers of Japan are still howling about the inability or unwillingness of our federal government to enforce the treaty rights of Japan, and are throwing out dark hints of what it may be necessary to do if some more satisfactory guarantees are not given. The probability is that this war talk in Japan is intended for home consumption only. Japan, being now a civilized nation, has her own internal party politics, with campaigns, elections, cartoons and all the other paraphernalia of modern politics. She is, like our own country, confronted with a general election next year. The Progressive party in Japan, like at least one important party in this country, is sorely in need of a serviceable and vote-getting issue. The papers of this party are the ones which are clamoring for a fearless maintenance of Japanese rights in the United States. They will have all honor and respect shown to Japan by the United States or, so help them, they will have war-r-r. This is not nearly so serious as it may sound. A group of perplexed politicians may grasp at the threat of war as an issue which may win them votes in an approaching election and enable them to pose as the only simon-pure patriots and defenders of the nation's honor, but the sober sense of Japan realizes that there is nothing to fight about, and is as little desirous of war as we are. It must be realized, of course, that a new nation, one which is just finding itself, is inevitably morbidly self-conscious and ultra-sensitive both to praise and to fancied slight or injury. That was the condition of the United States during a good part of the last century, and it is the condition of Japan now.

"Blatant he bids the world bow down,
Or cringing begs a crumb of praise."

The Spirit of Impatience.

When Governor Hughes, of New York, vetoed the two-cent railroad rate bill passed by his legislature two or three weeks ago, he did a very bold thing. Nineteen state legislatures have passed similar bills during the past three months, and any small politician would have said that the governor who would veto such a measure would be bowing himself hopelessly out of touch with the desires of the people and giving a fatal blow to his own popularity. But, like most of the bold deeds of wise men, this act appears rather to have increased the popularity of Governor Hughes, both in his own state and throughout the country. The reason given for the veto, as stated in the message which accompanied it, was that the action had been taken by the legislature without any investigation to determine whether or not a two-cent rate in New York would be fair and just to the railroads. The recently enacted Public Service Commission law provides for New York a commission whose duty it shall be to make investigations of such matters, and which shall have the power to fix rates after investigation. To rush into the matter of rate-fixing on nothing more than a general belief that the present rates are too high, to be influenced in such a matter by the present popular wave of criticism and indignation against the railroads, is, in the opinion of Governor Hughes, a dangerous exhibition of the "spirit of impatience." He is right in calling this one of the dangers of our form of government and of our national temperament. We vibrate between the extremes of indifference and impatience. We sit still for a generation while the seeds of injustice and greed are being sown and are coming into their harvest. We know all the while that something ought to be done, but we hesitate to make the start. Then some stirring personality or some startling event sets us going, and we want to right all wrongs in a minute without taking the time to investigate the situation calmly and critically. We are in danger of such a panic of reform at the present time. Not that we are likely to get too much reform, but that, being conceived in excitement and executed in haste, it is not apt to be reform of the most effective and enduring type. It is the function of cool, deliberate men like Governor Hughes to remind us that the problems of industrial reform and regulation must be approached with less of passion and more of reliable information if they are to be satisfactorily solved.

A Capitalist Caught.

Mr. E. H. Harriman was arrested the other day, just as any plain citizen with less than a million might have been. Rebates? Oh, no. Combination in restraint of trade? Not at all. Violation of the Sherman antitrust act? By no means. He had wilfully and wantonly disregarded the regulations about keeping out of the course at the Yale-Harvard boat race, and insisted on following the race in his motor boat by the side of the referee's boat. After being duly warned by the naval officer who had charge of the policing of the course, he was arrested and held captive on a revenue cutter until the race was over, and still has to face a prosecution and probably a fine. Mr. Harriman should have had the sagacity to know that, although the American people have great consideration for the feelings of their millionaires, there are some things which they will not allow to be desecrated or tampered with. It is always a more heinous offense to interfere with a favorite amusement than with the most important business. Take, if you will, our railroads. They monopolize the grain-carrying lines, float bonds and pocket the money, and interfere with interstate commerce. But let there be no profane interference with intercollegiate athletics. The ordinary commercial means of transportation may be more or less in the tentacles of the octopus, but know all men by these presents that when the racing-shell is concerned no man is rich enough to enjoy any special privileges. Incidentally, in the same connection, it may be remarked that Yale won the race. The long, slow Yale stroke proved to be, in the long run, just a little bit faster than the fast Harvard stroke.

Is Bryan Out of It?

The Pennsylvania Democratic Convention laid on the table a resolution endorsing the "peerless leader," William J. Bryan, as its chosen candidate for the nomination for the presidency. That fact does not prove anything in particular, however, except that the Pennsylvania Democracy is not at present prepared to commit itself in regard to a nomination which will not in any case be due until next year. It certainly does not prove that Bryan stock has touched the bottom of the market, as some observers are inclined to imagine. It is rather a striking manifestation of the peerless leader's personal popularity and influence that he can be considered even a possibility after his advocacy of government ownership in his Madison Square Garden speech, immediately after his return from Europe. Neither on that notable occasion, when the various factions of the party were fairly waiting for him to speak the word of peace and reunite them, nor in the numerous speeches which he has made during months since then, has he shown the least anxiety to find a popular issue and ride upon it to the position of leadership of a reunited party. He has, on the contrary, found, or rather made, opportunity to say a great many things which he must have known would be distasteful to a large proportion of the people whose support he must have if he ever again becomes even a candidate for the presidency. It looks as though Mr. Bryan was doing the same thing out of office that Governor Hughes is doing in office—namely, saying and doing the thing that he thinks is right and letting the people be for or against him, as they please. It is not bad politics, after all. No man can be quite dead politically who, in times like these, speaks his convictions, whether they are popular or not, and has enough personal force to make people listen to him.

A storm is about to burst upon the so-called umbrella trust. An indictment has been asked for in Philadelphia against a combination of the manufacturers of this article who are charged with having an agreement to maintain prices. The prices are not the only thing about umbrellas that needs to be investigated. When the inquiry is started, we hope it will not be stopped until some light has been shed upon the nature of the paragon frame or until we find out why every dealer in umbrellas solemnly assures every prospective purchaser of an umbrella that it has a "genuine paragon frame."

An Open Door.

A great need is always a great opportunity. An opportunity is an open door. The great crises of history have been open doors of opportunity for the advancement of human rights and of the kingdom of righteousness. Great calamities are thus made opportunities. Famines in India and China have been open doors for the church through which, in the persons of its missionaries, it has passed into larger fields of conquest and of influence. They gave an opportunity to the followers of Christ to show to the heathen world the true, unselfish nature of Christianity, and that is the highest credential which the church can carry to any people.

The great calamity which has befallen our churches in San Francisco and thereabouts is an open door of opportunity for the Disciples of Christ. In the first place, it is an opportunity to start anew with the rest of the churches there on more of an equal footing, and so to grow with the new city's growth. The first opportunity was unimproved. The second one is now upon us. Shall we make better use of this than of that? In the second place, it is an opportunity for our churches to show their solidarity of faith and interest, by their ability to rise up together to meet a great crisis and to respond with a generosity somewhat commensurate with the pressing needs of the situation. If there should be only a few hundred responses to this appeal, approved by all our mission boards, by our churches, and by the consensus of the judgment of the entire brotherhood, it would argue a lack of unity and of cohesive power to move together as a great religious organism for the accomplishment of a common end. As every individual and organization, or religious movement, is tested, by the use it makes of a great opportunity, we are being tried to-day as by fire, as were our churches in San Francisco more than a year ago.

We are hopeful of the outcome. We believe in the generosity of our churches. If they be given an opportunity to respond to this call they will not be found wanting. Let the opportunity be given. Let the open door be entered. Let us so respond to this call that we shall gain a new consciousness of our power to accomplish great undertakings by acting unitedly, each doing what he can. It remains now for the ministers to say the last word to their churches, the churches themselves to act, and then the glad news can be flashed to San Francisco that their brethren have remembered them in their desolation and in their hour of need.

Education and Patriotism.

It has been our custom for many years to issue an educational number the first week in July, and to combine the two thoughts of education and patriotism. The connection between these two ideas is very obvious, but we may be pardoned for pointing out again their vital connection.

The fact that ours is a free representative government in which the people govern themselves and in which the character of the government, therefore, depends upon the intelligence and virtue of the people, makes schools and colleges essential to our continued freedom and prosperity as a nation. We use the term education in its truest and best sense—the drawing out or development of all the normal faculties of man. This means Christian education. Christ stands as the highest ideal of character and the noblest illustration of the possibilities of human development. To take any lower ideal than He as our model in education, therefore, is the highest injustice to those whom we train. Not by any edict or law, but by the irresistible logic of history and of reason, Jesus Christ is the type of man which all true educators must accept as the highest expression of human capabilities and possibilities.

Nor is that the highest type of patriotism which stops short of recognizing all power and authority as inhering in God and as having been vested in Jesus Christ for the world's betterment. Every one who would trace back the liberty of conscience and the personal freedom which we enjoy to-day, to their true source will find that they originated in the teachings of Jesus Christ. He is the true Emancipator of man. Our free, representative government, "of the people, for the people, and by the people," exists only because Jesus Christ exalted the worth of man and taught the sacredness and equality of human rights. It was on these fundamental conceptions that our fathers established this great republic of the new world which has been, and is to-day, a beacon-light to all the struggling nationalities of earth.

We do well, then, to exalt our colleges, especially such as are represented in our columns this week, because their ideal is Christian education in order to the fullest discharge of civic and religious obligations. Not by intellectual development alone, but by Christian education are the people of this country to be made equal to the high privileges and great responsibilities of citizenship in a government like ours. We honor these institutions for what they have done and are doing and promise to do in the future, with the fostering care and cooperation of an appreciative brotherhood. These and kindred institutions are doing the work of developing the conscience as well as the intellect of those who are to occupy places of high responsibility in the future of this nation. It is the element of conscience in many of the men in public life to-day that is behind the widespread movement for the purification of our political and industrial life.

All honor to the flag that floats under every sky to-day where Americans live, and is honored by every nation and in every clime. It is the symbol of civil and religious liberty. It is the ensign of hope to the oppressed of every land. Every star on its shining folds is an evangel of human liberty. Every stripe that borders its field of blue proclaims its gospel of the rights of man.

"Your flag and my flag, and how it flies to-day,
In your land and my land and half a world away;
Rose red and blood red, its stripes forever gleam,
Snow white and soul white, the good forefather's dream;
Sky blue and true blue, with stars that gleam aright,
The gloried guidon of the day, a shelter through the night.

"Your flag and my flag, and, oh, how much it holds!
Your land and my land secure within its folds;
Your heart and my heart beat quicker at the sight,
Sun kissed and wind tossed, the red and blue and white;
The one flag, the great flag, the flag for me and you,
Glorified all else beside, the red and white and blue."

The Marvel of Unbelief.

The one thing that seemed to astonish Jesus, more than anything else he found among men, and especially among his own people, was their unbelief. With a long line of history in which God's hand had been manifest continually, and with present and ever-multiplying evidences of his power and goodness, and of his direction of human events to the furtherance of his purposes, they still doubted! When he went into his own native Nazareth and taught in their synagogue, while the people were astonished at his wisdom and asked, "What is the wisdom that is given unto this man, and what mean such mighty works wrought by his hands?" yet "they were offended in him," and the mighty works which he had done elsewhere he could not do there because of their lack of faith. "And he marveled because of their unbelief."

More than once was Jesus led to exclaim, "O ye of little faith!" How slow were even his immediate disciples to put that complete trust in him which he craved from them, and which he desires from us! The storm on Lake Galilee, which threatened to engulf their little boat, the demon-possessed child which his disciples could not relieve, their anxious thought about what they should eat, drink and wear, and their grief and apparent despair at the announcement of his crucifixion and departure from them, were occasions for his rebuke of their unbelief. They did not seem to see that no human event, however dire, could possibly overthrow the divine purpose, or prevent its glorious fulfillment.

No doubt if Jesus were on earth to-day he would find as frequent occasions for marveling at the unbelief of his own professed followers as when he was here before. How often do we hear men say concerning some measure that is confessedly right and just that it can not succeed; that the opposition against it is too strong; that it is in advance of public sentiment; that it is true, but impracticable; that it ought to be done, but that it can not be done! At this unbelief Jesus must still marvel. And then how common it is to hear Christian people express great fear as to the reputation of some good man, or the safety of some worthy institution, that is unjustly and falsely attacked and misrepresented! As if falsehood or misrepresentation could permanently injure any man, or any cause, or any institution! Jesus would say to those using such expressions, if he were here, "O ye of little faith!" Offenses must needs come. Every man, every church, every institution that follows the light and seeks to be true to that light, is certain to encounter enemies and traducers; but to shrink from following the light because of such inevitable consequences is the very kind of unbelief which excited the wonder of Jesus when he was on earth, and sometimes his indignation. Perhaps there is no form of unbelief that so grieves the heart of God as our doubt that he will protect us in the right which we do, in the truth which we hold, and in the faithful carrying out of his will. The subtlest and most dangerous form of skepticism is probably to doubt the omnipotence of truth and love and the ultimate triumph of right and justice.

"For right is right, since God is God,
And right the day will win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin."

Notes and Comments.

It is gratifying to know, as the newspapers inform us, that Governor Vardaman, of Mississippi, if not fully converted to Christianity, as at first reported, is at least penitent. He has been to the mourners' bench, and it is probable that if the evangelist had pointed out to him in the clear, unmistakable language of the New Testament, just how this faith in Christ might lay hold of the promise of forgiveness, he would have been enrolled at once among those who acknowledge Christ as their Lord and Savior.

There is great need for Christian character and influence in the public men of our country. Governor Folk has illustrated what a Christian governor can do, putting conscience and his duty to the people above mere political aims and ambitions. President Roosevelt, Governor Hughes, of New York, Governor Hanly, of Indiana, and Mr. Bryan, are notable illustrations of public men who are not ashamed to acknowledge Jesus Christ as their Lord and Master, and who do not hesitate to recommend his teaching as the highest rule of our individual and national life. The influence of such men on the masses of the people in favor of Christianity is incalculable.

It is reported of Mr. Lincoln that he once said, "When I find a church as broad as the Bible, I will unite with it." There is abundant evidence that has come out since his death that he was a man of faith in God and of prayer, and that during all the dark struggles of our Civil War he sought divine guidance in all his public acts. At the close of his great proclamation of freedom he invoked upon it "the considerate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God." It is sad to think of such a man being kept out of the church by its sectarian divisions and unauthorized tests of fellowship. Surely we may anticipate the day when such men may not be hindered from enjoying the blessings of church fellowship.

Behind all the investigations into official crookedness and corporate iniquities and the prosecutions of the same now in process, there is a rising moral standard among the people, which Christianity has made necessary. In his address before the Missouri state convention, Hon. Champ Clark called attention to the fact that at a former time in our history three of the candidates for the presidency had fought duels and one or two of them had killed their men. What party would dream of putting forward such candidates at the present time for the high office of president? Even a Wall Street financial journal, bearing the commercial title of "Cent per Cent" says that "the recent panic in Wall Street, taken in connection with political, social and financial developments, brings into visible relief the cheering fact that the nation is in the course of a great moral uplift." It goes on to say that "the corruption in government and in the administration of business affairs is being gradually, but none the less surely, driven out. Betraval of public trust for private gain is no longer condoned. It meets with condemnation in quarters heretofore blind, deaf, and dumb to that sort of plundering." This is notable testimony coming from a purely commercial journal.

Now that the vacation season is on, many pulpits will be filled by temporary supplies, while the regular pastors are recuperating wasted energies and depleted nervous systems in the mountains or by the lakeside or the seaside, and preparing for a more aggressive work in the coming autumn and winter. This plan is good for both churches and preachers. It gives an opportunity to the churches to hear new voices in the pulpit, and, if they do not get new ideas, they will at least get old ideas in new dress and will be profited by the change. The preachers that go away will have the opportunity of reinforcing their stock of ideas as well as recruiting their health, while the preachers who do the supplying will have opportunity of meeting new people, forming new acquaintances and getting some valuable experience in city work. Altogether it seems a wise arrangement from the point of view both of the preacher and the church, and we trust that mutual good will result therefrom.

Dr. W. C. Bitting, writing for the "Central Baptist," says:

> Hundreds of churches are dying because they live for themselves. This is not the spirit of the Cross, and churches that live it ought to die. Our denomination would be far better off if its statistics were not padded by a multitude of dead churches composed of dead members, who do nothing for anybody other than their dead selves. Dead branches add nothing to either the beauty or the vitality of living trees. Our Saviour used some strong words about branches that bore no fruit, and this too applies to churches as well as persons.

Again we are reminded of how much Baptists resemble those who prefer to be known as Christians or Disciples of Christ.

A card from President W. P. Aylsworth, of Cotner University, dated June 25, announces the death of his brother, N. J. Aylsworth, at Auburn, N. Y., on the same date. No particulars have been learned as yet. It is known to the brotherhood generally that Brother Aylsworth had been an invalid, confined to his bed or to his invalid chair for many years. The amount and character of his intellectual work during that time have been a marvel to all his friends. His various series of articles in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, one of which, on the "Moral and Spiritual Aspects of Baptism," was subsequently published in book form, attest the vigor of his mental powers and his remarkable spiritual insight. His pen seemed to shed light on every subject he treated. Affliction had purified his mind and heart from all earthly motives and ambitions and gave him a clear vision of things spiritual and eternal. It is this that makes his book on baptism a monumental work that will long perpetuate his memory in the brotherhood he loved so well and served so faithfully. We do not find it in our heart to mourn his departure. His life here meant continuous pain and increasing helplessness. For him there awaited "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." He has passed from the limitations of his mortal and afflicted body and is now enjoying the freedom of the sons of God, who have come into the inheritance of the saints in light. Blessed is the memory of his life and character.

Editor's Easy Chair.

In a flying trip to the Southwest since the Missouri Convention, the Easy Chair was surprised to find many of the wheat fields harvested and in shocks and most of the others ready for the reaper. As these golden wheat fields waved before the breeze they seemed to vindicate a kind and gracious providence against the lugubrious reports and false prophecies of a complete failure of the wheat crop which we heard only a few weeks ago. Mother Nature understands her business, and she always manages to produce enough food in the aggregate to supply all the wants of man and beast. Prophecy of failure in crops of various kinds has become a trick of the stock market and should always be taken with allowance for that fact. The glorious sun which shines for all, and the generous soil which produces for all, and the rain which falls on the just and the unjust, are in partnership neither with the "bulls" nor "bears" of the stock market, but with the faithful husbandman who plows and sows in the confidence that Nature will do her part.

The new branch railroad of the Missouri Pacific which runs southwest from Springfield directly to Crane, passes through a region of the country that was very familiar to the Easy Chair Editor in his boyhood days. There, nine or ten miles out from Springfield, was the battle-field of Wilson Creek, and the place where Lyon fell, and the little house on the hill where he was laid out, were pointed out by the conductor of the train. The inclined ridge down which it is said General Lyon led his fateful charge was now a golden wheat field, just as if no steeds of war had ever trampled the soil where it grows. A little further on we crossed a clear, rippling stream known as "Wilson Creek," which, on that historic day, must have been reddened with the blood of the brave men who struggled there in deadly conflict. Our boyish ears heard the thundering of the cannon that echoed over this fateful field, on that tenth of August, 1861, and we heard, also, in the eventide of that day, the sobs of strong men who, by the decision of that battle, were exiled from home and family, many of them for years, and some, alas, for all time. Such is war. God save our land from ever again suffering from its awful devastation!

Still the new road carried us on over scenes that were once still more familiar. When the train stopped at a point which we felt must be near the place we once called home, we stepped out to inquire where we were. We saw only strange faces in the group of men that had gathered at the station. "How far from here," we inquired, "is the old Dug Spring place?" "Only about a mile," one of the men replied. "Do you know that place?" he asked. "Yes," we replied, "we dug that spring." Then the name was called for. An old citizen asked, "Which one of the boys are you?" Then he introduced us to a number of people standing about, most of whom were sons or relatives of the men we had known away back in the days "befo' de wah." In a few minutes the train was passing the old Dug Spring place, which a neighbor on board pointed out, or we had scarcely recognized it. In a little grove of what seemed to be locust trees, on a slight elevation, stood a small frame house, and nearby was the spring from which we had carried many a pail of water. And back of the house, over in the meadow, ran the brook with its pools of water, in which we had often gone swimming, and in one of which on a Lord's day afternoon, away back in the fifties, the writer, along with many others, was baptized. Here in these fields we had toiled with plow and hoe in the halcyon days of boyhood. The railroad runs just where the old barn used to stand, south-east of the house, on the opposite side of the "state road." How little did we think in those days of a railroad running through this place! The covered wagons, carrying immigrants to Texas, and an occasional Irish peddler or Italian organ-grinder with his wax figures, served to keep us in touch with the great outside world.

Let's see! That was a half century ago. No wonder things looked strange. Back at the new station called "Clever," just beyond Dug Spring, we had noticed a new church building which some one told us was the Christian church. We felt a strong inclination to stop off and preach in that church. Had we done so, however, we would have addressed an audience of strangers, with possibly here and there one we might have known. Such are the changes of time. And yet what memories cling to the old homestead, and the places and scenes thereabouts! In the brief time the train was passing through, memory was busy with the throng of recollections that came up out of the dim and distant past. Down there at the branch, in one of its pools, we had witnessed the close of a life-and-death race between the hounds and a deer, which was caught by the hounds, assisted by our own dogs, just as he had swam one of the pools and was coming out on the bank, and the hunter came and took his game. At another time we had seen ten deer standing together in a group on a hill near the house. There were no neighbors, nearer than nve miles, in those early days, and deer and wild turkeys and other smaller game abounded in the land. A little south of Dug Spring the train passed near a large frame dwelling with comfortable surroundings, and the neighbor on board said that was "old Uncle Fayette ——'s" place, and he named one of the boyhood friends, and nephew of the Easy Chair Editor. So that little tow-headed boy, whom we used to call "Fayette," has now become "old Uncle Fayette ——!" Some of us went on to meet the railroad, many years ago, but "Uncle Fayette" waited, and it came to him. "All things come to him who waits."

A little further along, our neighbor on the train said, "This is the old Teague place; you remember that?" Didn't we! There in the house just beyond the hill, on the old "state road," a number of wounded men, being hauled from the battle-field of Pea Ridge to Springfield, in army wagons, paused for the night. Among that number was the writer of these lines, and the pain and the fever of that night, and the sympathy of the few old friends that gathered in, are fresh in our memory. The suffering of that journey, where every jolt over a stone meant pain, the arrival at Springfield, and being carried on a stretcher to the home of our parents who had, at that time, removed to Springfield, are among the vivid memories that have come down from that awful struggle which, as we think of it, seems like some horrid dream of the night. In the strange providence of God, grim-visaged war has had its stern mission to perform in the ongoing of civilization; but happy the day when nations shall study the art of peace rather than the science of war, and reason shall take the place of force in settling all difficulties and misunderstandings. It will hasten the arrival of that day if those who own Jesus Christ as Lord will settle their differences on the basis of love, remove the barriers which hinder their fraternal co-operation and join hands and hearts in bringing in the universal reign of righteousness and peace.

Before these paragraphs reach the eyes of our readers, the Easy Chair hopes to be in its summer home by the lakeside, yonder at Pentwater. It has an office up there which contains two windows, one of which looks out westward across Lake Michigan and the setting sun, and the other southward toward the hills and pine woods. We will have our stenographer and typewriter, as here, but no din of street cars nor noise of traffic nor visits of book agents will mar the serenity of our meditations. We shall try to mix work and play in about equal proportions, counting half of the playing time for reading helpful books. We shall try to take as many of our readers with us in thought and imagination as cannot go otherwise. There are many whose work will prevent them from going anywhere. These have our sympathy. Our work would compel us to do the same if we could not take it with us. But many of those who take their vacations at home need no sympathy. Some of them will have a better time than many of us who go away. Sometimes we think that those who live in the hot cities and are compelled to leave home for a summer vacation, are to be commiserated more than those who are permitted to remain at home. But the Easy Chair accepts, with calm resignation, its banishment from the noise and bustle of city life to the cool shades of the Michigan woods, and the pure breezes that sweep over the lake, and will try to make the best of it! We shall strive not to be too much annoyed by the noise of the singing birds, the discords of tumbling billows, and the tangled net-work of sunshine that finds its way through the hemlocks and pines and checkers the ground. Nor will we murmur even at the diet of fresh white fish and lake trout, and perch and black bass, and the fresh young strawberries that will be just coming in, and which, together with wild blackberries, grow in the hills and vales about Pentwater. But right here we stop, lest we draw a greater number of our readers to Pentwater than all the hotels and boarding houses of the village and the cottages on the lakeside can accommodate!

Bethany Revisited

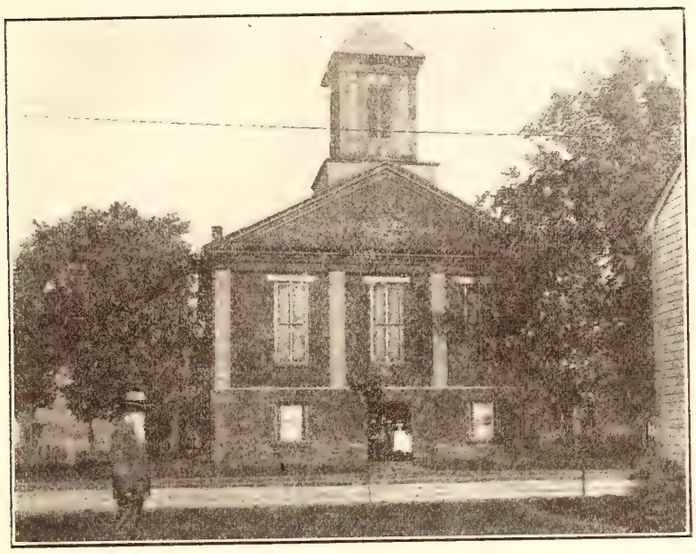
By W. T. Moore

Thirty-seven years make some difference in human life. They make also some difference in the progress of things. I had not visited Bethany for thirty-seven years, and when I approached the sacred old town on the banks of the Buffalo to attend the recent commencement exercises, it all seemed like a dream to me, though many of the views were as familiar as if I had been looking at them every day during the whole period of my absence. Really, my recent visit to Bethany did much to emphasize my utter indifference to time. I did not even remember that it was the forty-ninth anniversary of my graduation at the old college. If I had thought of this, I might have delayed my visit until next year, though I am now very glad I did not do this, even though I should be spared until that time.

Perhaps few men would be affected as I was during my recent stay there. I practically lived my life over again. When I reached Wellsburg I went to the old church (which is the second church founded by the Campbells) where I held my first protracted meeting. I had been preaching some for a few years, but had never attempted to hold a protracted meeting before. This meeting grew; it was not planned. I went to Wellsburg to fill an appointment for Mr. Campbell, and at the close of both services there were confessions. I was urged to continue the meeting. I got permission from the college authorities to do so, and continued to preach every day for over two weeks, with the result of eighty-two additions to the church. At this time this was regarded as a great triumph, as few meetings yielded more additions for the same length of time. Scarcely any change has been made in the old building, and as I stood in its pulpit, looking over the empty benches, memory was busy in recalling the names and faces of men and women who were then living members of the congregation. But how changed is all now! I could not even hear of a single person living who was present at that meeting. That was about fifty-two years ago.

The road from Wellsburg to Bethany has been somewhat changed by the building of a trolley which, when finished, is to run between the two places. The work on this has been suspended for a time, but I learn that it will be resumed shortly, and when finished will be a great help to Bethany College. The beautiful scenery, however, is still there. No more picturesque road can be found anywhere than that which keeps in sight of the Buffalo between Wellsburg and Bethany. The road is seven miles long, but the Buffalo is twenty-two miles long. A crooked stream is the Buffalo.

We arrived at Bethany just in time for the morning service at the church, and we went at once to attend this service. As I entered the old church I was almost overwhelmed with thoughts of the past. Mrs. Decima Barclay, the youngest daughter of Alexander Campbell, saw me as I approached and came out to meet me, and conducted me to a seat. This only added to the train of memories which had already begun to dawn. Decima was one of my first wife's bridesmaids, and was one of her most intimate friends. The old church was as familiar to my eyes as if I had never been absent from it, but the faces I once saw there and the voices I once heard from its pulpit were no more! A most excellent sermon was delivered, but I fear I did not hear very much of it. I was in a reminiscent mood. I saw Mr. Campbell in the pulpit where I had so frequently seen him and heard him. I remembered, too, how sometimes the students would rejoice when a distinguished preacher was announced to fill the pulpit, and how almost universally these students would equally rejoice when the distinguished visitor had taken his departure. We all thought we would like a change now and then, but when the change came we very heartily welcomed the "Old Man Eloquent" back to his pulpit. Really no one could fill his place, and it was a shame for any one to try to fill it. Though we heard him every day in the lecture room, his Sunday sermons were so far above even the greatest preachers who visited Bethany that we were always glad when the "Old Bishop," as we called him, was "on deck" again.



Bethany Church.

I need not recount the different scenes I visited. My home was with President Cramblet, who lives in the beautiful mansion which was the residence of Prof. Pendleton when I was a student at Bethany. This handsome home for all the presidents of Bethany College, was generously donated by President Pendleton in his last will and testament. Much of my time was spent in studying historic things. During one of my addresses I held in my hand the proof sheets of the celebrated "Declaration and Address," prepared by Thomas Campbell. The type of this had been set for some time, but its final publication had been delayed, as I believe providentially, for had it been published according to program, it would have appeared before the arrival of the son, Alexander, who was on his way from the old country. These proof sheets have marked on their margin the corrections which Alexander made when they were submitted to him by his father. Most of these are of a literary character. Only one is of any special importance, a postscript, in which it is announced that a periodical will soon be published, entitled the "Christian Monitor"; and, furthermore, that a catechetical exposition of the Scripture will be made and published for the benefit of those who are seeking to study the Scriptures with a view to the better understanding of them. This latter suggestion had in it a sort of embryonic creed, and this, no doubt, was one reason why Alexander struck it out of the "Declaration and Address." In other respects the address is, in spirit and in matter, the product of Thomas Campbell, but evidently heartily approved by his son Alexander, who made in it no material change, though he had the privilege of doing so after his arrival from the old country. In my address at the college banquet, I stated that the three greatest documents which had ever been published in America were: First, the Declaration of Independence, written by Thomas Jefferson; second, the Declaration and Address, written by Thomas Campbell; and, third, the Charter of Bethany College, which was the first institution of learning in the United States that made the study of the Bible, unbiased by human creeds, as fundamental in its educational system. I believe this statement can be demonstrated to be true beyond the possibility of successful denial.

I spent one afternoon at Bethpage, the home of Dr. Richardson, one of Mr. Campbell's faithful lieutenants, and, indeed, the man on whom he depended most for help in many important things. I was allowed to go into his library room, which is kept locked up and remains practically just as he left it. It was, indeed, a great privilege to look upon the books that had been Dr. Richardson's companions during his useful life. The manuscript of his life of Campbell is sacredly preserved in this library, while numerous historical documents are classified with that care which always characterized Dr. Richardson's work, no matter what this work was. Not the least interesting thing about this old place was the barn which the doctor erected during his [illegible]. It indicates how far he was in advance of the farmers of his period. It is really much in advance of the barns of even the present in both its convenience and its up-to-date arrangements. While looking through it I felt that, after all, the progress of the present time is only a little more general than it was forty or fifty years ago, but that some people then knew nearly as much as anybody does now.

I must not now occupy space with my impressions of Bethany as it is to-day. I will have something to say about that shortly in a very definite way. At the present I can only remark that the outlook for Bethany was never brighter, and that the past session has been one of the best in its history. The commencement exercises were very delightful, and as I met a number of the old students (though none of my old class) the reunion was very pleasant, as well as full of interest, in view of the great plea for which Bethany College stands as the most representative college in the United States.

INFANT CONSECRATION

By W. L. Hayden

Infant baptism is passing into desuetude. It is well known that there is neither precept nor precedent for it in the Holy Scriptures. It is no longer defended on the old ground of identity of covenants and the faith of the parent. Original sin, inherited guilt and baptismal regeneration are not now plead as the necessity for it. It is generally conceded that sin is personal transgression of law, guilt is non-transmissible, and all men are bad enough for all practical purposes of redemption.

The first heresy charged against Luther by papal priest was that he taught that "faith is essential to the validity of the sacraments," i. e., the ordinances. This is the impassable gulf between Baptist and papist—immersionist and pedobaptist. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." Hence Christian baptism cannot be administered to a subject of non-faith, whether infant or infidel. The so-called baptism of infants is of men, not of God. It belongs to papal Rome, and should have no place among Protestant pilgrims facing toward Jerusalem.

Around this practice, though without divine warrant, there has grown a powerful Christian sentiment that must be reckoned with in the reuniting of believers in Christ. It must not be rudely spurned, for it springs from the most tender and sacred affections of the human soul,—the undying love of parents for their offspring. It ought to be cherished and encouraged in every way that Christian love can devise and loyalty to Christ can approve.

This pious, parental sentiment protests against the exclusion of the precious little ones,—the lambs of the flock,—from the fold of Christ. It seems cruel to leave the tender lambs out in the cold world to be chilled to death or snatched up by wolves or other beasts or birds of prey that are prowling around, seeking whom they may devour. It must be displeasing to our Lord to treat them with neglect or indifference to their highest spiritual welfare. In behalf of the little children two things are urged with much force:

First, Jesus was pleased to have infants brought to him for his blessing.

Second, infants are in a gracious condition before God. (Matt. 19:13, 14), etc.

This is the attitude of Jesus toward infants. It is full of infinite tenderness and encouragement to parents.

It does not substitute flesh for faith, as the condition of entrance into the church, but it does recognize infants as objects of peculiar interst to our Saviour and of special solicitude to their parents. They were included in the charge to the primate among the apostles: "Feed my lambs." Surely, in all these words of our Lord concerning little children there is fullest warrant for the church to meet this Christly demand of consecrated parents for some definite way of bringing their children to Christ for his blessing, while they are growing to years of personal responsibility when they will publicly enjoy the privilege of committing themselves to his service in being "buried with him in baptism."

In what way can this be done more satisfactorily than by what is called infant consecration?

It is only necessary to make it clear that this is a parental privilege in bringing up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, as in the case of Hannah, who vowed a vow to give her child Samuel "unto the Lord all the days of his life." With entire propriety and Christian faith, parents may invite their pastor to come into the home and lay his hands on their children and pray for the blessing of the Lord to attend them. No priestly touch nor ecclesiastical ceremony is needed. A hand of pastorly love and simple prayer of faith will impress the child-heart and incline it toward Christ.

The Bible school is the church reaching out the hand of love toward the little children as well as giving instruction to older people. It is a welcome aid to Christian parents in training their little ones in the way of the Lord. The home department in our advanced schools, with its "Cradle Roll," is a distinct recognition of infants and extends fostering care wherever it is needed and welcomed.

COFFEE COMPLEXION.

Many Ladies Have Poor Complexions from Coffee.

"Coffee caused dark colored blotches on my face and body. I had been drinking it for a long while and these blotches gradually appeared, until finally they became permanent and were about as dark as coffee itself.

"I formerly had as fine a complexion as one could ask for.

"When I became convinced that coffee was the cause of my trouble, I changed and took to using Postum Food Coffee, and as I made it well, according to directions, I liked it very much, and have since that time used it in the place of coffee.

"I am thankful to say I am not nervous any more, as I was when I was drinking coffee, and my complexion is now as fair and good as it was years ago. It is very plain that coffee caused the trouble."

Most bad complexions are caused by some disturbance of the stomach and coffee is the greatest disturber of digestion known. Almost any woman can have a fair complexion if she will leave off coffee and use Postum Food Coffee and nutritious, healthy food in proper quantity. Postum furnishes certain elements from the natural grains from the field that Nature uses to rebuild the nervous system and when that is in good condition, one can depend upon a good complexion as well as a good, healthy body. How the Churches are Starving Preachers and why there are not more Students for the Ministry.

The Preacher Problem

BY CEPHAS SHELBURNE

When we consider the demand for preachers, the number of churches with vacant pulpits, and the inability of the Church to supply this demand and fill these vacancies, we must confess that there is such a thing as a preacher-problem. Three prominent state workers have recently said to me that they never knew a time when so many pulpits were vacant, and that they could not find the men to fill them. This is not only the case with our people, but with other religious bodies as well. The Presbyterian General Assembly at Columbus recently reported that in thirty theological assemblies the church is short 400 men studying for the ministry, compared with ten years ago. The report of the Board of Education showed one-third fewer men studying for the ministry of the Presbyterian Church than ten years ago. This despite the fact that the population of the country has increased 8,000,000, and the membership of the Presbyterian Church 300,000.

"Ten years ago," says this report, "there was one candidate in every 640 church members; to-day there is one candidate for every 1,240 members." In the great Eastern colleges the decrease in the number studying for the ministry compared with what it once was, is so remarkable as to be commented on whenever ministers get together. In Yale fifty years ago there were twenty men out of 120 in the theological class who entered the ministry after graduation; to-day in a class of 300 only three find their way into the ministry.

What is the reason of this alarming state? It cannot be that young men entering colleges are not as good as in former days. We know that a much larger per cent of them are interested in the church and are church members. The moral standard both for our schools and young men is higher. Moral standards have risen since 1899. In an editorial in The Christian-Evangelist a few weeks ago, "Why more young men are not entering the ministry," we have this reason given, among others:

"We must believe, however, that a far more potent reason is the commercialism of the times and the large rewards which business callings now offer to young men of character and capacity. The remedy, however, for this evil is an appeal to the consciences of Christian young men to give their lives to the service most needed, and which would be most pleasing to him whom they own as Master."

But is "this reason in the commercialism of our times" in the young men who fail to enter the church, or in the churches who employ them? The cost of living has greatly increased, wages in all other lines have increased; but the minister is expected to live on the same salary. The Bureau of Labor at Washington has recently investigated the cost of living. The investigation, just completed, showed by an examination of the cost of 258 commodities that the cost of living to-day is 36 per cent higher than for the year 1904. Have the salaries of preachers been advanced to meet this increased demand upon their pocket books? Recently a preacher was asked to visit a church with a view to becoming their pastor. He was a man of considerable pulpit ability, a good pastor, had done a splendid work, and was an educated man and student. The church was delighted with his visit and preaching. He was the man they wanted. When asked what he would take the work for, he named a certain figure. They replied, "Oh, that is $200 more than we have ever given." That settled the matter, and yet these wise men in that church could have paid the salary and then lived far better than the preacher's family. Recently a pulpit supply committee wrote me to the effect that they were going to lose their dear preacher, and they were all broken up over it. The reason assigned was that they could not pay him as much as another church that wanted him. The preacher did not want to go and the church did not want to give him up. But a difference of $300 salary; that was the rub. There are men in congregations that spend as much on automobiles as the entire church spends on the preacher's salary, yet an advance of $300 would be out of the question and more than they could stand. The preacher is expected to live in a style equal to the best in his flock; but consult the best livers and they will tell you that they can not begin to live on what they are paying their preachers, and they own their own property and the preacher must rent. This is why young men are not entering the ministry. They see a poor living for their families, the problem confronts them as to how the boys are to be educated, and the prospect of an early old age when he must be placed on charity.

Another problem, the outcome of this scarcity of men, is the problem of misfits in the pulpit. Good men are scarce. They are leaving pulpits for other callings, the evangelistic field and some to churches that pay better salaries. Their place is being supplied by men who can not hold the audiences, and the work goes down. One of our oldest Indiana preachers told me that quite a number of our pulpits were being filled by men who could not hold them. All of this simply means one thing: If our colleges are to turn out more preachers, and if our churches are to be filled with educated, competent men who are worthy the name of teachers and leaders, the churches must pay their preachers more money—at least living wages.

One of our best men in northern Indiana—a young man—for several years a teacher in one of our best colleges, a good preacher, told me he had a letter from a church telling the kind of a preacher, pastor and man they wanted, and closed by saying: "We will pay such a man $800." Yet this man was well worth $1,800, and this church could easily pay it. The ambitious high school boy will, during his summer vacation, enter a machine or railroad shop, or some enterprising business, and earn as much as his wise father, who has been in the business of preaching for twenty years. He will not likely turn his attention to the ministry. The Northern Indiana M. E. Conference met a few weeks ago. They could not supply their pulpits—they had not enough men to go round. The bishop said to the churches: "If you want more men and better preaching, you must pay better salaries; you must put up more money." These churches were paying from $600 to $1,500, an average of $850 probably. When the professions and specialties are calling for young men at large salaries, can you wonder why so many pulpits are vacant? Six hundred dollar pulpits? Or why the colleges are not turning out more preachers? More money! This is the solution of this vexed problem of pulpit demand and supply.

FAITH.

Within four solid walls a man there dwelt;
Denied the light, he groped a weary round,
Receiving from rough contact many a wound,
Yet deeming all hemmed by the walls he felt.

A winged steed lighted in that dwelling pent;
The prisoner, mounting, to the sunlight soared.
Wonder, joy, life through his shrunk being poured,— Deliverance to the captive had been sent.

GETTING READY

Feeding Ahead of Hot Weather.

"Not quite so much meat in springtime; use the cereals, as they heat the blood less." Seasonable advice from an old practitioner.

If one uses some care as to food, the hot weather will be passed as comfortably as any season. In fact, a person possessed of a perfectly balanced set of nerves can be happy and comfortable under most any conditions.

The truest food for building up the nervous system to a perfect condition is Grape-Nuts. The makers are skilled in their art, and knowing that nature fills the brain and nerve centers with a soft gray matter which is used up more or less each day and must be replaced (or nervous prostration sets in), and also knowing that this gray matter is made by the combination of albumen and phosphate of potash, they select the parts of the field grains that contain the needed materials, manufacture them into a delicious food, ready cooked, predigested, and of a fascinating flavour.

The use of Grape-Nuts quickly proves that it really does rebuild and strengthen the nervous system in a most certain manner. Sold by all first-class grocers and in daily use in hundreds of thousands of the best families all over the world. "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

A SYMPOSIUM

HOW CAN WE AROUSE OUR PEOPLE TO THEIR DUTY TO OUR COLLEGES?

By Better Education.

That educated men have always been the leaders in the development of the race is plain. It was decisively true in the great days of Erasmus, Luther and Melanchthon, college men. It is even more true in this age, more complex and of finer knowledge, though not so manifestly seen because of the many educated. One way we may "arouse our people to do their duty to our colleges" is by better educating those who attend. By better educating them I do not merely mean developing their brains more and giving them more information, but giving them better conceptions of human life and the human mission and instilling in them a determination that will cause them to work it out for themselves and others. Though this be a strenuous, hard-working age, yet, strange, it is certainly one that is seeking its own ease. Let us educate college students so they will both see conditions and not be dominated by them, but themselves serve personally, sacrificingly and unto the end. This may not immediately "arouse" people to their duty of supporting our colleges, but when it does it will be an interest that will be steadfast and permanent.

DANIEL E. MOTLEY.

Washington, D. C.

Two Things to be Recognized.

People will not be aroused to their duty toward our schools and colleges until they recognize two things: First, the paramount value of education; second, the necessity of the co-operation of mental and religious training.

A great commercial organization in the East recently investigated the history of successful men and women in America, and made the following report: A good school education increases one's chances in life 50 per cent; a High school education 100 per cent; a college education 300 per cent. This, be it understood, is not the estimate of educators, but of commercial men.

Now as to the second point. Our church people should remember that our colleges and schools are preparing the men and women who are to mold the future policies of church, state and society. It would be well to ask ourselves these two questions: Where should our young people be educated? To what influences should they be subjected in the most impressionable years of their life? A negative answer comes to us from our unendowed or meagerly endowed educational institutions. A second negative answer comes from the great stream of our young men and women who are entering educational institutions other than our own.

Like the ancient Egyptians, we educators of to-day cannot make brick without straw. With money and students, our schools and colleges may achieve their fondest hopes and be enabled to answer the most fervent prayers on their behalf.

LUELLA WILCOX ST. CLAIR.

Remove Selfishness.

1. Make our colleges worthy of the support of our people.

2. A college must give evidence of vitality and usefulness before it will receive very hearty support in a financial way. Money is the most sensitive thing in the world, and it always feels every vibration in the success or failure of any enterprise.

3. There are many reasons why our colleges should receive a much more hearty support than they are now receiving. The fundamental cause of indifference seems to be selfishness. Every worthy college we have would be liberally endowed within the next year, if our Christian men and women could be made to realize that their first duty is to seek the kingdom of God rather than the selfish interests of the flesh, which flesh is always demanding that family relationships and worldly interests shall first be provided for, and then, if there is a scanty remainder, this may go into the Lord's treasury. Right here is where the whole difficulty centers, and I do not know any way to capture this citadel except by pressing earnestly the great Gospel message in all of its fullness from both its theoretical and practical sides. If this fails, I know of no means by which our brethren can be aroused; but to make this effective, we must simply keep hammering it in, for the selfishness of the human heart makes it a difficult citadel to conquer.

MRS. W. T. MOORE.

Printer's Ink, Work, Prayer.

Our people have done their duty by the School of the Evangelists, and here is how we got them to do it: We sounded out the Old Jerusalem gospel with no uncertain sound: we asked God and we asked his people, and they did what we asked them to do. In other words, we used printer's ink as if everything depended on it, and we worked as if everything depended upon work; then we prayed as if everything depended upon prayer. That's all.

ASHLEY S. JOHNSON.

A Voice from Canada.

As to having our people do their duty to our colleges, I can only speak for Canada. The first thing necessary is a fuller realization of their need. Too many of our people here are satisfied with any sort of man who poses as a preacher. There is little demand for a higher standard, and consequently there is none. This is the root of the trouble. Growing out of this we have poor salaries, because any one will do to preach, and little aid to educational work. Following this we have the singular situation of homes being saved and refusing to give their young men to the ministry to save others. These are the cardinal features of negligence in Canada.

Sinclair College. F. E. LUMLEY.

Get the Ministers Aroused.

I make a single suggestion. Whatever the preachers unitedly and persistently urge upon the people they are sure to do, sooner or later. I think, therefore, that those who take the lead in the proposed arousement should make their appeals directly to their brethren in the ministry. Get them aroused on the subject, and they will soon arouse their hearers. And I think the strongest appeal to arouse the preachers is to be found in the loud and increasing cry for more preachers. Every one who hears this cry and is stirred by it, will immediately be stirred in behalf of the colleges where preachers are trained, and in behalf of young men in the churches who are morally and religiously fitted for such training. Fill the colleges with young men fired with the desire for such training; fill them to overflowing. Then turn to men with much money and with little money, and call mightily for the help the need of which they can plainly see. But while you are doing this, let the colleges understand that only as they do their work effectively and faithfully can they hope for the needed help. This, I believe, is the pathway to the great and enduring success which will bless the world and be blessed of God.

Another Step.

Nothing stimulates interest in a worthy cause so much as an investment in it. We have made advancement along the line of talking about our educational needs. Our papers are doing loyal service. We even have a hope that education may be granted a fit representation on the platform of our great conventions. But are we not ready for another step? Our interest will be weak and vapid, no matter how eloquent our words, until we actually do for this cause. What a spur to our self-respect if, instead of waiting for Mr. Rockefeller or Mr. Carnegie to come to our aid, our own brethren, of both small and large means, would open their hearts to this great cause. We are abundantly able to endow and sustain our colleges. We shall never have the proper interest in them until we do. Just as our zeal for missions has grown with our giving, so it will be in the cause of education. We love and appreciate that for which we sacrifice. Such interest grows upon what it feeds.

Because of——

Because of the constantly increasing interest in world wide missions; because of the growing enthusiasm for city evangelization; because of the ever increasing demands made upon the old established churches for service; because of the on-stepping progress of the age in which we live; because of the peculiar fitness of this great plea of ours to meet the requirements of all these demands, every Disciple should make the enlarged endowment and better equipment of all our colleges and universities a matter of deepest concern.

Our Schools to Equal Others.

How to arouse the interest of our people to do their duty toward our colleges is an ever present problem with the trustees and presidents of these institutions. A few years ago it was thought that an appeal to the churches as to the importance to the schools of our missionary work would be successful. So, many institutions asked the churches to make large or small contributions to the work of Christian education, and especially to assist in developing our Bible colleges. It can not be said that this movement has been a success. Too often those who have been urging the importance of this work to the Church have, in order to gain a sympathetic hearing, overemphasized the needs of the schools, so that, while many people were willing to make a small contribution toward sustaining the school, they were so impressed with the statements of lack of equipment in our own institutions that they were inclined to send their sons and daughters elsewhere. Our church schools, it is evident, can not hope to attract our own young people unless they maintain high standards, and are well equipped to do the best work. The strongest appeal to our people must contain in it several elements. The schools must show that the men in their faculties are strong and well trained for the work, that the equipment is ample, that the standards of scholarship are high, and that the moral and religious training is kept constantly to the front. In order to have such a school, men of wealth must furnish the means, for small collections will not avail.

Our Budget

—Help San Francisco!

—Do it next Lord's day!

—Pray for the stricken city and churches. Make your appeal, and leave the rest to God.

—Here's to the birthday of the Republic! Long may it be cherished and honored in every land as the inauguration of the noblest experiment in self-government the world has ever seen. All honor to the hand that penned the Declaration of Independence, and to the great minds who embodied its principles in the forms of constitutional law.

—And here's to our colleges, dedicated to that intelligence, morality and religion which are the sheet-anchor of our liberty and the foundation and perpetuity of our government. Give them students and endowment, suitable buildings and equipment, and they will do a great work for Church and State.

—Claude L. Hill, our national superintendent of Christian Endeavor, was due in St. Louis at the time of our going to press, and arrangements were made for a rally of St. Louis Endeavorers at the Union Avenue Church. Brother Hill is on his way to the International Convention of Christian Endeavor at Seattle. A program of the Disciples of Christ rally of that convention is given elsewhere.

—We begin this week a new serial story entitled, "Not As the World." Many of our readers are already prepared for a most interesting serial. All should begin reading it with the first chapter. Through it may be found some of the experiences suggested by the writer's own experience in making his way from denominationalism to the simple platform of the primitive Christian churches. At the same time we start the first chapter of an interesting travel serial by J. Breckenridge Ellis. Readers will find this an unique account of a trip to Old Mexico. When this serial is concluded we shall have other things from Brother Ellis' pen. Will our friends pass on their copies of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to others who may, through this means, become regular subscribers of the paper?

—E. G. Merrill reports that the brethren of the East Side Christian Church, Moberly, Mo., have adopted plans for the remodeling of their building, and the work will be pushed forward as rapidly as possible. The Bible school now numbers 250, with an average attendance of 165. All departments of work are in a prosperous condition.

—The Cedar Avenue Church and the Crawford Mission, at Cleveland, Ohio, have consolidated and will soon erect a new building on Crawford Road. J. Tisdall is the pastor. Manton Scott, late of St. Louis, is the superintendent of the Bible school at the Crawford Mission.

—E. C. McDougle, at the recent commencement of the Georgia Robertson College, Henderson, Tenn., announced his resignation of the presidency to accept a position in the Kentucky State Normal, at Richmond, Ky. There has been trouble at the college and it will suspend this year.

—Lee H. Barnum, who has just visited the brethren at Sharon, Kan., reports that the mortgage on the building there has been burned and that the congregation is now free from debt. Brother Barnum visits them twice a month in the afternoons, as they are not having regular preaching.

—We are glad to learn that the Christian church at Medicine Lodge, Kan., escaped destruction in the cyclone that wrecked a large part of the northern portion of the city. Only a few windows in our building were broken and a few trees around it demolished. Lee H. Barnum is the minister there.

—J. D. McBrian, chaplain of the Kansas state penitentiary, sends us a strong commendation of J. F. Palmer, of Topeka, Kan., who recently closed his work at Lansing, Kan. The church there, by a unanimous vote, expressed its confidence in Brother Palmer, who is now open to take up work elsewhere.

—"You do not expect others to settle your gas or grocery bills. Why should you repudiate your church obligations and enjoy what others have provided?" We find this in the weekly bulletin of the Central Christian Church, Jacksonville, Ill. It is a pertinent question to put to church members all over the country.

—Our congratulations go to William J. Shelburne, who has just been united in marriage to Miss Clara Steagall, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Steagall, of Tullahoma, Tenn. The groom was formerly pastor of the church there, but now leads the Vine Street Church, Nashville, Tenn. The ceremony was performed by A. I. Myhr.

—Every week we receive many news items that might just as well have been sent several days earlier. Then the writers wonder why their communications have not appeared, and write us about them. It frequently takes time for us to inform them that their communications were received after our forms were made up and the paper gone to press.

—The last service in the old church at Cairo, Ill., was held last Lord's day, and next week worship will be held at Safford Hall, while building is proceeding. The Sunday-school rally begins July 10. The school here has increased since the first of January from thirty-nine to eighty-two in attendance, while the collection has risen from 96 cents to over $9.

—Miss Ann B. Haley, a daughter of J. J. Haley, of Richmond, Va., has just finished a course in library science in the state library of that city, and would like to locate as librarian or teacher. She is a graduate of Hamilton College and has had two years' experience in teaching. She may be addressed in care of the Seventh Street Christian Church, Richmond, Va.

—Many wild statements have recently been made about the Bible College of Missouri. C. E. Burgess, who is a student of that institution, calls our attention to the fact that one of these statements is that the students there have not made a dozen converts. Brother Burgess alone reports sixty-seven added to the churches in the past twelve months in his own work.

—C. R. L. Vawter, who has just held a good meeting at Carnegie, Okla., is now, with his singer, J. W. Wood, in a meeting with W. L. Dalton at Perry. This is the third meeting Brother Vawter has held for Brother Dalton, and one of its fruits is the renunciation of a Baptist minister who desires to become a Christian only.

—The time is rapidly coming when preachers and church officers will be taking a vacation, but they should make their plans for an active winter campaign in the church work before they go on a holiday. We shall be glad to hear from all churches planning evangelistic meetings, and would like to know the time set for these to begin, as well as the evangelists and singers engaged.

—H. M. Gillmore will close his work at Pawnee Rock, Kan., July 15, and take charge of the church at Marion. He has been in his present field nineteen months, and has seen the work there grow from half-time to full-time preaching, while the number of additions, from all sources, has been fifty-nine. He reports the work well organized and the people loyal and ready to uphold their minister's hands.

—We regret to learn of the death of J. A. Cunningham, who was suddenly killed by being thrown from a heavily-laden wagon which passed over his body. He was in the Christian ministry, although he earned his livelihood also as a traveling man. Brother Cunningham had some views that would usually be considered peculiar, but was a man of great sincerity of purpose. His home was at Tupelo, Miss.

—E. R. Clarkson, of Red Bluff, Cal., has decided to enter the evangelistic field, and has resigned his pastorate, to become effective August 1. His church regrets the decision, but while he believes he is leaving the best church that it has ever been his privilege to serve, he feels the call to a wider field. His permanent address will be Citronelle, Ala., though he is to labor for a while under the Georgia Missionary Society as evangelist.

—He who has been treasurer of a church for twenty years deserves some public recognition, and we are glad to note that the board of officers of the First Christian Church, Philadelphia, recently honored its treasurer, Mr. Thomas E. Ferguson, by giving him a complimentary dinner at the Hotel Majestic. During the twenty years the church has raised and disbursed $152,000. L. G. Batman is the present minister.

—Under the direction of its minister, J. W. Allen, steady advance is being made at the Dean Avenue Christian Church, Spokane, Wash. This congregation was organized only a few years ago, but is free from debt and has had wonderful success. A new building is being contemplated. N. M. Field, singing evangelist, late of St. Louis, is now the leader of music and assistant pastor. He has organized one of the largest chorus choirs in the city.

—We are constantly receiving notices of marriages for insertion in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, but they are unaccompanied by the fifty cents which we think we are entitled to for announcing such happy events just as much as a minister is his fee for marrying the couple. Space is valuable in our paper, brethren, and many of the people marrying are not readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST nor even members of the Christian church.

—A reception was given to O. F. Jordan, the retiring pastor at Rockford, Ill., last Friday evening. On this occasion the church mortgage was burned. Brother Jordan preached his farewell sermons last Lord's day, and will be succeeded in the ministry of this church by W. D. Ward, of Evanston, Ill. He takes charge next Sunday. Brother Jordan, as has already been announced in these columns, is to take up work under the F. C. M. S. in Cuba.

—Milo Atkinson has had six months' successful work with the First Church, Covington, Ky. Thirty-five additions are reported and for many weeks the Bible school has been the largest in the state. J. W. Hagin, of the Fourth Street Church in the same city, according to Brother Atkinson, seems to have a firmer hold upon his people than at any time during his ministry. The Bible school there has also had a splendid growth. The work prospers in Covington.

—The editor of the "Central Baptist," Rev. J. C. Armstrong, of this city, is enjoying a trip to the East, being in Japan when last heard from. His brethren in St. Louis sent him on his journey, and they seem to be taking good care of his paper in his absence. They are serving Brother Armstrong right. He deserves it. "Some sweet day" the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is going to become a globe trotter for a few months and give his readers a rest!

—The Magnolia Avenue Church, Los Angeles, has called J. Leslie Lobingier to become the assistant pastor. He recently graduated at the College of the Bible, Lexington, and expects to begin his work with the church the last week in June. The new church at Budlong Avenue, Los Angeles, has a most promising future. J. I. West has recently taken charge of it, George Ringo having resigned to devote himself to building up the mission on West Jefferson street.

—The corner stone of the Third Christian Church has been laid at Twenty-third and Chestnut streets, Louisville, Ky. Addresses were made by E. L. Powell, W. N. Briney, T. S. Tinsley, E. B. Ritchey and D. F. Stafford, pastor of the congregation. The church has a history of twenty-five years. It first met in a little hall. The new building is to cost $25,000, most of which is already raised. It will be of brick, with stone trimmings, and will seat over 1,000 people.

—On the eve of their departure for Europe, Earl Wilfley and wife, of Crawfordsville, Ind., were given a notable testimonial. The large church, including Sunday-school room and balcony, was packed in every part, aisles and vestibules being in demand. The occasion indicates the esteem in which the pastor and his wife are held. Brother Wilfley has been in much demand recently for special addresses. He expects to spend three months abroad, going to many out-of-the-way places.

—The dominant characteristic of the Sacramento (Cal.) district convention was its interest in district evangelization. The secretary reported that the Disciples have worked at thirty-three places in the district. There are sixteen ministers located in the Sacramento Valley. There are 23,095 members. About 400 additions were reported for the year. The church property for the district is valued at $134,600, with only one church with indebtedness, but there are some half a dozen church buildings unused.

—J. A. Tabor has been having a good time with J. Crockett Mullins, pastor of our church at McAlester, I. T. Their meeting was a very successful one in view of the bad weather conditions. Brother Mullins has done a good work at McAlester, the membership having increased about 40 per cent, while the Sunday-school has more than doubled in attendance. All financial obligations have been met and the church supports its own evangelist in the Indian Territory. Its pastor and Brother Tabor were born in the same town and in the same month. They spent their boyhood together and the opportunity to work together in these later days has been a great joy to each of them.

—William Remfry Hunt, one of our pioneer missionaries to China, is at his home in England on a furlough. He has just preached at the West London Tabernacle where, many years ago, he was in W. T. Moore's training class, to deeply interested audiences. His evening lecture on "The New Asia" was a presentation of the awakening of China and Japan. Brother Hunt will be in the United States after a visit to his home folk. His life and experiences for eighteen years in China have been unusually interesting. His book on "A Chinese Story Teller," which is published by the Christian Publishing Company, is one which all interested in the mission field should read.

PIMPLES AND BLACKHEADS

Are Caused by Clogging of the Pores or Mouths of the Sebaceous Glands.

The plug of sebum in the center of the pimple is called a blackhead, grub, or comedone. Nature will not allow the clogging of the pores to continue long, hence inflammation, pain, swelling, and redness; later pus or matter forms, breaks, or is opened, the plug comes out, and the pore is once more free. Treatment: Gently smear the face with Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure, but do not rub. Wash off the Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water, and bathe freely for some minutes. Repeat this treatment morning and evening. At other times use Cuticura Soap for bathing the face as often as agreeable.

—The removal of the debt on the Maplewood (Mo.) Christian Church, and the anniversary of its pastor, F. A. Mayhall, were celebrated by a basket dinner last Lord's day and all day meetings. Champ Clark and John L. Brandt were speakers at the afternoon gathering.

—During a meeting held by Evangelist James Sharrat at Fairfax, Mo., B. W. Knight was ordained to the ministry of the Word. The church was properly organized and is in condition to employ a preacher who may do an effective work. We are glad to know that the Methodist and Presbyterian ministers assisted in making the meeting a success. Brother Sharrat has open dates for July, or could take regular work for the summer months. He may be addressed at 813 West Twenty-first street, Kansas City, Mo.

—A correspondent writes that he likes the Christian Publishing Company for its steadfastness, but of the stuckfastness of the envelopes which are sometimes sent out he can not approve, as they are often stuckfast to the other matter enclosed. He says: "It is a good thing to be steadfast but not in a stuckfast envelope." We accept our correspondent's application of our own editorial, "Steadfast or Stuckfast—Which?" but he must not allow the envelopes to lie around so long unused as to become stuckfast.

—N. M. Ragland writes concerning his reception by the First Church in Springfield, Mo., saying that "the pastors and members of the churches in this town have given us a warm welcome to our new home. The people whom we have come to serve are hopeful and enthusiastic. This gives promise of success." The church at Fayetteville, Ark., by a unanimous vote, elected him pastor emeritus and made him, also, a director in the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. These are certainly high tokens of esteem.

—The brethren at Fowler, Cal., after careful consideration, have unanimously decided to erect a new church building to cost something over $5,000, $3,000 having already been pledged. It is expected that the construction work will begin about October 1. It was also unanimously decided to extend a call to the present minister, W. W. Pew, to remain indefinitely. He has agreed to do this. The seating capacity of the new church auditorium is to be about 500. The Sunday-school department will be in the basement.

—A question concerning ordination comes to our desk: (1) Who? (2) By whom? (3) How? Persons possessing the scriptural qualifications for elders, deacons or preachers, and called to such work by their brethren, may be ordained by an evangelist, or by the local minister, assisted by the elders of the churches interested. Prayer and the imposition of hands, preceded by fasting on the part of those participating, and others feeling disposed thereto, seems to have been the scriptural order. (See Acts 6:1-6; Acts 13:1-3).

—A writer in the "Outlook" says:

"Universal peace is the dream which the world hopes to see realized. The second peace conference to be held at The Hague will no doubt be a step ahead towards this ultimate ideal, but that it will prove more than a step not even the most confirmed optimist can believe."

According to the logic of some, then, "the second Peace Conference at The Hague" should not be held. If it is only a "step" toward universal peace, and not the universal peace itself, full-fledged, let's away with it and fight on until we can get universal peace!

—We have received an announcement of the meeting of the Committee on Education of the International Sunday-school Association, to be held at Sunday-school camp, on Lake Geneva, Wis., beginning at 8 p. m., August 24, and closing at 9 p. m., August 28. A program of special interest to all Sunday-school workers is arranged, and many of our own workers should be present. For further information concerning accommodations, rates, etc., address Lake Geneva Sunday-school Association Camp, Hartford Bldg., Chicago.

—J. W. Reynolds recently completed a six months work with the Christian Church, Clinton, Ill., during which time the congregation paid off a debt of $800 and met all the current expenses. The church expects to secure one of our best evangelists for a protracted meeting during the coming autumn. Twenty-two accessions were reported at regular services since November 1. More than twelve baskets full were gathered up from a free dinner given by the members in celebration of clearing the church of all indebtedness.

San Francisco's Mighty Appeal.

The brethren around San Francisco Bay are asking for help to rebuild the churches that were destroyed by the earthquake. No worthier appeal has been made to the brotherhood in our time. These brethren have been stripped of all they possessed. They lost their property and lost their business. Had their earning capacity remained intact, they would have rebuilt their houses of worship without any outside help.

It is to the credit of these good people that they did not give up in despair after the earthquake. They might have gone elsewhere and have found honorable and profitable employment; they might have left the stricken city to its fate. The Lord put it into their hearts to stay and to rebuild what had been destroyed. They have done marvelously well. It can be said of them as it was said of the Macedonians: "They have given to the extent of their power, yea, and beyond their power." Having done their utmost, they come to those who have been wondrously prospered in recent years for assistance.

Our Lord taught his followers to do to others as they would that others should do to them. He said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if he have love one to another." He showed his love by giving himself for the world's redemption. His disciples are to show their love by giving of what they possess. The Apostle John says, "But whoso hath the world's goods and beholdeth his brother in need and shutteth up his compassion from him, how doth the love of God abide in him?"

It will be an easy matter for the brotherhood to give $100,000 to aid San Francisco in her time of need. At another time the conditions may be reversed. Then the San Francisco brethren will gladly relieve those who help them now. Churches and individuals that have not given anything for any of our great general causes should respond to this appeal. They will be enriched and not impoverished by having fellowship with their brethren in their time of need. Their gift will be an odor of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God.

For many years the missionaries leaving for the Orient, and those returning from the Orient, have been entertained and cheered by the brethren in San Francisco and around the Bay. It would be a great misfortune if the churches there were blotted out, so that there would be no brethren to speed the missionaries as they left the shores of America, and none to welcome them on their return. Help given them now will have a bearing upon the work of missions in all parts of the world.

—D. J. McCanne, writing from Fort Sumner, N. M., and referring to our correspondence while in New Mexico concerning the Estancia Valley, wishes to call the attention of our readers to what he calls "our historic valley (the Pecos), where we have 5,000 acres of fine fruit land under irrigation, and being rapidly settled up and put into apples and alfalfa." He says: "We are doing missionary work in Pecos Valley, helping the Lord make of this an ideal place for a colony of Disciples. Already we have quite a number from Dr. Tyler's South Broadway Church, Denver, and we want about 500 of the best in the country to come and locate here." He offers to send illustrated literature to those interested.

—Our readers, and especially those who contributed for the meeting held in Manchester, N. H., by Brother Yeuell, will be glad to learn that Bro. E. M. Todd, of North Tonawanda, N. Y., has been employed by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions to remove to Manchester and take charge of that work until it is permanently established there. Brother Todd is pre-eminently qualified for the work in a New England field, and we regard his acceptance as a guarantee of the permanent success of the enterprise. That the Christian Woman's Board of Missions is behind it makes it doubly sure of success.

—"The contest has been a good thing for us even though we were defeated." This is the message which has reached us from a number of Bible schools that were losers so far as the actual competition and the number of points were concerned, but the testimony is that the contest has not been a defeat as regards the original and main purpose. Take, for instance, this report from the First Church, Springfield, Ill.: "Better attendance and promptness on the part of teachers and officers has been attained. The proportion of those regularly contributing has been raised. New enthusiasm has been generated. Several classes have doubled their enrollment, and several indifferent classes have been aroused to activity. The school is doing better work."

—The Christian Publishing Company has been making some changes in the past few weeks in the personnel of its business department. R. P. Crow, who has been for many years business manager, resigned in the spring to accept the position of cashier in an Illinois bank. His place has been filled by Reuben Butchart, of Toronto, Can., who has for many years been associated with the publishing business and comes highly recommended. He began his work with us July 1. H. F. Davis, of the book department, has resigned to carry on another line of business in the city, and his place has been filled by G. W. Bauer, who was formerly connected with one of the largest wholesale book stores of this city. The brethren who have left us were excellent men, and we wish them success in their new business. The changes look in the direction of more special training in the publishing business, and the company was never so well organized for aggressive work as at present.

—A note from Brother Tyler, written in London June 7, says: "I spoke in Gloucester the afternoon of June 4. We are having a glorious time with the brethren in old England. I may have something to say in The Christian-Evangelist. Spoke to a fine audience in the West London Tabernacle last night." A newspaper clipping gives an outline of his talk at Gloucester, wherein he gave some particulars of the Sunday-school convention at Rome and of his experiences among the Disciples of Christ. He thanked God for the great movement in which he was taking a part and appealed to his hearers to stand foursquare in upholding the great principles for which the churches of Christ are contending, namely, a return to the primitive Christianity in creed, ordinances and life. In another column will be found later details of Brother Tyler's visit to England. He was to sail on the steamship "Arabic" and speak last Lord's day at Decatur, Ill. We expect him to visit the office of The Christian-Evangelist about the time this week's issue of the paper goes to press.

—In a letter from G. W. Muckley, who has been for some time in the West, he says: "I have spent two weeks investigating the needs of that work in and around San Francisco. I want to say advisedly that no man can understand the needs except he is on the ground. The cause is a common cause. The San Francisco brethren and all the afflicted towns have been bearing burdens that we know nothing about. Our cause everywhere is the cause of a united people, and we simply must answer this call the first Sunday of July or hang our heads." This testimony from one who has been on the ground, and whose judgment is formed on the basis of the general interest of the brotherhood, is exceedingly important. There is no question but that we are face to face not only with a great duty, but with a great opportunity, and it would be to our everlasting discredit if we should not avail ourselves of it. Remember July 7.

—The little monthly paper issued by the Dudley Street Baptist Church, contains an article on the Yeuell meeting at Boston. It says that the Christian Church is united in every sense. "There could have been no more genial spirit of union asked; no better co-operation with pastor or people desired. Pastor Ward and his flock won our highest esteem and the mutual fellowship was a large feature of the blessing experienced." The article goes on to say that the methods of Mr. Yeuell in leading people to public confession, were new to this Baptist congregation. "To walk from one's seat in the gallery, or on the floor, to the front of a crowded church; to arise and verbally confess faith in Christ as the Son of God and one's own Saviour, requires a positive moving of souls." The whole trend of the article is one of enthusiasm and thankfulness to the evangelist and the Christian Church in Boston. We can not forbear quoting one other expression: "The mission went on for the most part steadily leading people of all ages to the kind of confession of Christ not to be forgotten." We venture to say that this union meeting will do a very great deal in strengthening the sentiment towards Christian union between Baptists and Disciples.

—Victor Dorris has decided to resign at Pendleton, Ore., and devote himself exclusively to evangelistic work, and he asks us to announce to his many friends of other days, and to all that may be interested, that for some time in the future, and possible as long as he may live, he will devote himself to the proclamation of the great evangel. In his letter he says: "My time will expire July 1, after which time I am ready to make and fill engagements. I have contemplated this step for several years and have often been advised to do so by many choice spirits, and now I am fully decided." He can supply during July or August, or conduct rally meetings or Bible institutes. He is open for engagements for February and March of 1908, and will be glad to make engagements for dates further ahead. After July 1 he may be addressed at North Yakima, Wash., R. R. No. 4. We take pleasure in making this announcement for Brother Dorris, whose faithfulness and whose ability as an evangelist are so widely known that he needs no commendation from us. He has been trying to combine the pastoral and evangelistic work, but the demands upon him are such as to make him feel that his work lies in the evangelistic field. In a personal letter, from which we take the liberty of quoting, occurs this admirable statement: "I want to preach the message just as my Lord would have it preached, regardless of 'our' custom or usages, just as will best represent his truth, Spirit and purpose." That kind of an evangelist will never lack for engagements nor for fruit from his labors. We wish him Godspeed in proclaiming the great message of salvation to sinful men.

Alexander Campbell and Instrumental Music.

A brother asks what was Alexander Campbell's position on the use of instrumental music in the churches. We referred the matter to W. T. Moore, who knew Mr. Campbell personally, and he answers thus:

"Mr. Campbell never discussed that question as it has been discussed by many of our brethren. With him it was a matter of very little importance. In only a few instances did he refer to it at all, and then only to emphasize the importance of spiritual worship rather than a mere formal exhibition. In no case, so far as I am able to find, did he regard the organ itself as in any way unscriptural. With him everything depended upon the use made of it, and it is my opinion that, where the organ is not abused, he would make no objection to it at all, were he living at this time. However, the organ question was not specially a live question among us during the active period of his life, and consequently there was no special need for his discussing it, except in a general way. He himself had no musical talent. I am not sure that he knew one tune from another, but he was deeply interested in the words that are sung. Indeed, Mr. Campbell was too great a man and had too much important work to do to spend his time in discussing such a question as has been made out of the use of the organ in the churches. I suppose that he looked at the matter somewhat as I do, namely: with instrumental music in the worship of the old institution, and with instrumental music in heaven, as we have it presented in the book of Revelation, I have always felt that if there was a little of this music between these two periods, it would not hurt any one, if conducted in the right spirit."

INFANT CONSECRATION.

pastor should conduct a service for the young people,—a service of consecration, when children of an age to be sensibly impressed with child-like songs, prayers and talks, may be brought to receive lessons and impressions that will be very helpful in turning their thoughts and feet into the right way and throw around them the sympathy of Christ's people and the protection of the fold of Christ.

More than thirty years ago a widowed mother in Philadelphia was going down to death with consumption. She was burdened with anxiety for her two little boys,—one nine, the other five years of age. She well knew she must soon leave them motherless in this unfriendly world. Upon consultation with her near relatives, it was decided that Willie, the older one, should be placed in Girard College until he was sixteen, if his life was spared, when it was expected he would be fitted to get on in the world. The younger one was left in the care of Christian relatives.

On the day Willie was to leave home, the pastor of the church, by invitation dined with the family, and the grandmother was present. After dinner, the mother, with breaking heart and streaming eyes, said to her pastor: "This afternoon I give Willie away and put him in Girard College until he is sixteen. I want you to put your hands on his head and pray for God's blessing upon him that he may be a good boy and grow up to be a Christian and a useful man."

With deep humility and tenderness, the request was complied with, and it was the most touching and impressive service this writer was ever asked to lead.

Willie left his mother's care followed with her undying love, passed the years in college with great credit, went to another eastern city, learned the printing business, became a member of the Church of Christ, and, at a proper age, married a charming lady of that city, and they are faithful in the service of the Lord.

Who can measure the influence for good in Willie's life of that consecration service in his mother's home? Who can imagine the immense possibilities for extending the kingdom of God over the young by a similar service of consecration once or twice a year in special session of our Bible schools?

Romanists have been saying for a century: "Give us the children the first seven years of their education, and you may have them the rest of their lives."

We commend their wisdom, and neglect the children in these tender years.

The Psalmist says: "As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man, so are children of the youth."

While in the hand, direction is given to the arrow's flight, so children must be given the right direction in their course in life. Why not consecrate them to holy service all the days of their life in this plastic age of their growth? And why should not the church take the children in its arms, as Jesus did, and in its activities have a specific purpose in impressing the hearts and minds of the lambs of the flock by an occasional service for their consecration? It will deepen the sense of parents' responsibility and help them to train up their children in the house of the Lord.

Such practical recognition of the home by the church is the restoration of family religion upon which God has set the seal of his favor and blessing in all dispensations. "God setteth the solitary in families."

To the St. Louis Disciples.

A lecture which no one can well afford to miss will be given on Friday evening at the Compton Avenue Presbyterian Church, Compton and Washington avenues, St. Louis. It is to be on a vital subject, by a lecturer who has obtained a national fame. Although upon a purely legal question, the lecture is anything but dry or tedious. The theme is new and timely and the ammunition that will be given for the fighting of the saloon will be helpful to every man and woman interested in this question. "The Unconstitutionality of Saloon Licenses" is the subject, and the lecturer is Judge Samuel R. Artman, of Indiana, who has won the approval not only of the leaders of temperance reform but even of many politicians. He has been heard by large audiences in his own state. He was induced by a number of business men to make a tour of the country during his vacation. He begins his tour at St. Louis next Friday. He is not on the lecture platform for money considerations. Judge Artman is a devoted member of the Christian church.

A Union and a Debt Cleared.

The union attempted some time ago between the Disciples of Battle Creek, Mich., and a Baptist church was fully completed last spring when the church reorganized itself into a Church of Christ on the Scriptural basis. The new organization assumed all obligations incurred by the old one. Among these obligations were old debts amounting in all to $961. F. P. Arthur, the corresponding secretary of the Michigan Christian Missionary Society, came to Battle Creek June 16, to help raise the amount necessary to pay off the debts mentioned above. After the most heroic and persistent work of a week he secured $1,000 in cash and good pledges. In this work he was ably assisted by different members of the congregation. There was rejoicing in all hearts Sunday night, June 23, when we knew the old debts could be paid. The state board is standing nobly by this work in Battle Creek. I began work with this church June 23. We are all hopeful and the congregation is full of courage.

Brother Tyler in England.

I feel I must send The Christian-Evangelist a note concerning what I feel should be called Dr. and Mrs. Tyler's triumph in England.

On our way home from the world's Sunday-school convention which recently concluded its sessions in Rome, we are completing the tour with a visit to our churches in England. It has been my pleasure to join Brother Tyler in some of the meetings we have attended. He is in demand everywhere we have a church. What time he was not engaged in attending the sessions of the world's international Sunday-school lesson committee has been spent in continuous travel interspersed with speeches, sermons and addresses. He has spoken at Southampton, Gloucester, Cheltenham, Chester, Birkenhead, Liverpool, Southport and London and environs, making in all sixteen addresses. It is the universal opinion that he has done a great amount of good by his words of cheer and telling common sense way of giving advice and instruction. The climax was the London meetings. Last week a reception was tendered Brother and Sister Tyler at the West London Tabernacle. Nine of our preachers were present, as well as a large number of brethren and sisters. Yesterday was an high day at the West London Tabernacle. The choir celebrated its anniversary of organization. The music rendered by the sixty well-trained voices was very attractive and inspiring. Brother Tyler delivered four addresses during the day to large and delighted audiences. His closing sermon on the "Pre-eminence of Christ" was an especially strong discourse. At the conclusion of the service in the evening we bade our brethren good-by. As we sail for America early in the week we may never see them again, but we shall carry away with us a delightful remembrance of the kindness of our brethren across the sea who are contending for the faith once delivered to the saints.

A Good Word for Kansas.

The first district missionary convention at Nortonville, Kan., was a decided success. A lady who has attended many of them says it is the best yet. Of the four which I have attended, this was by far the best, both in interest, attendance, and program. Brethren Lyon and Settle are competent men, and missions in Kansas promise to be worthy of this great state.

Northeast Colorado.

The fourteenth annual convention of the Christian churches of Northeastern Colorado was held in Greeley, June 12 and 13, and was conceded by all present to be the best ever held in the district, not only in attendance but also in work accomplished and general interest taken. There were 62 visiting delegates, while the majority of the home congregation was present at each session. J. F. Findley, of Fort Collins, presided.

California State Convention.

The annual convention of the Christian churches of California will be in session at Garfield Park, Santa Cruz, from July 23 to August 4. An unusual amount of the best home talent has been secured and several of our ablest brethren from the East will deliver addresses, among them W. R. Warren and J. J. Haley.

A Christian Hospital.

The hospital hitherto known as the Association Hospital, located on the northeast corner of Pine and Thirty-fifth street, has been undergoing a quiet evolution during the past few months, by which its financial basis has been reconstructed, its methods modified, its stockholders and directors changed so that it has come under the complete control of members of the Christian church in St. Louis. The latest change was to elect Dr. C. M. Riley, for many years a professor in the Barnes Medical College as house physician in the hospital. Dr. Riley is a faithful and honored member of the Union Avenue Christian Church. J. Q. McCanne, an elder in the same church, is manager of the hospital, and J. H. Garrison, George L. Snively, J. Q. McCanne and W. L. Coley, all members of the Christian church, are directors. The hospital is finely located, is well fitted up for making patients comfortable, and its rates are so much more reasonable than many others as to make it possible for many to enjoy its benefits who would not be able to go to other hospitals. Members of the Christian churches in states adjacent to St. Louis will find a comfortable hospital in which they will be under Christian care and influence, with the best medical treatment. See advertisement elsewhere.

A Union Move in Washington.

On May 12, 1907, thirty-four months from the time of the first meeting of fourteen members of the Christian Church in Hoquiam, Wash., the new house of worship was dedicated. The property is valued at $7,000 and pledges were secured on dedication day sufficient to clear it of indebtedness except for $1,000 carried by the Board of Church Extension.

Morton L. Rose, of North Yakima, was master of ceremonies. The writer's long acquaintance with him in Eugene, Ore., while the former was a student and the latter pastor, made us anxious to secure him and the church at North Yakima and Brother Rose have our heartiest thanks for his services.

There was the usual or unusual fear before the services began that we should be unable to reach our goal of $1,500, but during the day $1,560 was raised. A most pleasant feature of the day was the liberal gifts from brethren of other city churches, the Presbyterian and the Baptist being especially generous, both of their Christian Endeavor societies making small pledges as well.

The church was organized by A. C. Vail in 1904 and has been ministered to by the beloved patriarch, R. M. Messick, J. M. Harris and the writer, Evangelists who have served are D. E. Olson, G. A. Webb and wife, and A. C. Vail. The present membership is about 75. Like all Western churches there is a constant succession of removals which makes the building up of such a work without aid from missionary funds, except Church Extension, an arduous undertaking.

We are just now entering into a union revival, five churches participating—Christian, Baptist, Swedish Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian. An auditorium costing, with the site, $3,800, has been erected for present and future use. It is a tabernacle of witness to the spirit of union which is abroad in the land which is especially strong in Hoquiam, and a tabernacle of prophecy of the day when the place of meeting for all Christians of a given place shall not be a rough, unpainted structure, but the best the city can afford. Rev. J. I. A. Henry, formerly of Portland, Ore., San Francisco and Chicago, but more recently from a five years' evangelistic campaign in the British Isles, and his singer, Mr. J. R. Hemminger, are leading us. For some months the pastor of the Baptist church, Rev. G. A. Bale, and I have been in frequent consultation as to the uniting of our congregations. Finally, at Brother Bale's suggestion, we issued a call, Mr. Carlson, the pastor of the Swedish Baptist church, also signing it. It was an invitation to attend a conference looking toward closer fellowship in union. We expressed our belief that conditions were favorable for such a movement and that nothing but good could come from a frank discussion.

In response to the invitation there came together members of six congregations—Christian, Baptist and Swedish Baptist of Hoquiam; Baptist and Christian of Aberdeen and Christian of Elma, represented by Brother Jones, the pastor. I was never in a meeting so thoroughly charged with the spirit of Christian love.

The meeting did much to bring the congregations nearer together, especially by showing how much we are alike now in teaching and practice, and the question is being frequently asked, "What is the difference between us?" and the answer often given, "I don't know. Do you?"

One word from Brother Carlson's address on "Preparations for Union" deserves repetition. The preparation he insisted upon is that we should know Christ, know each other, know our own love for the truth and know our brother's love for the truth. He said that he had been greatly surprised to hear one of our evangelists preaching Baptist doctrine, but it was Baptist doctrine, without which we could not expect to hold our converts. The particular form of Baptist teaching which he taught was that conversion must precede baptism! That baptism is worthless unless there has been a change of heart, unless faith and repentance have preceded it! The evangelist's name? Charles Reign Scoville.

The next day in talking with a prominent Baptist who had not been to the conference and who held the ancient idea that we are baptismal regenerationists, I was able to quote Brother Carlson as authority that at least one man among us does not hold to that idea.

A second conference was held May 10, addressed by Rev. G. W. Watson, pastor of the Aberdeen Baptist Church, and by Brother Rose, each speaking on the contribution the church with which he was identified had made to religious progress. Again it was found that the lines were parallel and often identical.

May 19, by invitation of Mr. Watson, I preached to a united congregation in his church, the Christian church at Aberdeen being temporarily without a pastor, B. H. Allen, of Montesano, having since been called. A most excellent feeling was manifest throughout the evening and it was a service at which I rejoiced to be. The Baptist ministers here are much in earnest in the matter and we are trying not to fall short.

There is a measure of indifference to the question on the part of some and I fear some opposition. I pray God we may not be found wanting, though some developments lead me to wonder if our claims to a desire for union will stand the test of experience.

Our union revival is occupying all our time and thought now and nothing more will be done, at least for a time. JOHN J. HANDSAKER.

College Work and Plans

Add-Ran.

I have just returned from a visit to the picturesque town of Thorp Springs, Texas, where I went to preach the baccalaureate sermon for Add-Ran-Jarvis College. This institution was founded by the two Clark brothers, Addison and Randolph, in 1873. At that time Hood County had just been organized. On the distant hill could be seen the signal fires of the Indians, who inhabited the fertile valley of the Brazos River. It was not long until these two brothers, with their father, had a flourishing school with an attendance reaching as high as five hundred. They continued this work until 1895, when they established Texas Christian University at Waco, to which they turned all the influence of Add-Ran College.

After putting T. C. U. on a firm basis, President Addison Clark resigned as president and became pastor of the church in Waco. In 1004 the old building at Add-Ran College burned down. It had been purchased by Major J. J. Jarvis, of Fort Worth. It was decided to rebuild and open the institution under the name of Add-Ran-Jarvis, with Addison Clark as president and Randolph as vice-president. Major Jarvis deeded the property to a board of trustees, and with a fine building and boarding halls, the school opened two years ago. They have enrolled something over two hundred this session—as fine a class of young men and young women as can be found in any school in America.

Special attention is given to ethics and Bible study. The religious part of the training is carefully provided for. The whole atmosphere of this college and the rural surroundings is exceptionally well-suited to the development of the nobler qualities of the student. Add to this the influence of the Christian culture of the two men who stand at the head of the school, with the high ideals of all the members of the faculty, and you have almost ideal conditions for the education of young people.

Fort Worth, Tex. J. J. MORGAN.

Bethany College.

The sixty-sixth year of Bethany College closed with the annual commencement, June 20. Not in recent years, if at all, in the institution's history have we had a session so satisfactory. The character of the student body could scarcely be excelled. Of the 280 students enrolled ninety were preparing for the ministry or the mission field. The faculty of the college is thoroughly competent. Every member has been re-elected and will remain during the coming year. Our engineering department, inaugurated a year ago, had twenty students enrolled. The new Carnegie library is almost completed. The college has a library of 9,000 volumes. Mr. Charles E. Filson and E. J. Doley, two of next year's graduates, are in the field in an effort to raise $5,000 for new books. One-third of this amount has already been secured. The trolley line from Wellsburg to Bethany is well on the way and it is hoped that it may be completed in the early fall. The lookout for next session is unanimously bright. T. E. CRAMBLET.

Bible College of Missouri.

This institution has just closed its most prosperous year. Its adjustment to the University of Missouri has been completed by the granting of credits, and the system of credits has been so far tried as to assure large classes in the future. During the year sixty-two University men and women took credits from the Bible College toward their A. B. degrees in the University of Missouri. This is very encouraging in view of the fact that the system was not fully established at the beginning of the first semester, and during that semester we received but few students from the University body. We feel sure of large classes in the future.

Our young men who are preparing for the ministry are now serving about twenty-five churches within reach of Columbia. They are all men of strong faith, and are doing good work. The number of our ministerial students increases, and as the advantages of Columbia for ministerial students becomes known and the churches in Central Missouri become better acquainted with their good work, we are confident the number will continue to increase.

Prof. C. M. Sharpe will be in Columbia again in September, and enter actively on the work. Prof. Richard Gentry will act during the first semester as student visitor. George D. Edwards, of Honolulu, will be with the college in September as its financial agent. Practically he has been called to a chair in the college. Brother Edwards has the reputation of having been one of the best students ever graduated from the University of Missouri. He has great influence over men and will make a very strong teacher. During the year, Dr. W. T. Moore will deliver lectures on Homiletics, or "Preacher Problems." George H. Combs, of Kansas City, Mo., will give a series of lectures, also, on the general theme, "The Christ in English Literature." J. H. Hardin, State Superintendent of Bible Schools, will conduct, with the help of the faculty, a Bible School Normal.

In addition to the above, our students have all the advantages of a great university with its libraries, museums, gymnasium, etc., etc. Every preacher who has been with us any length of time, even one semester, is doing good work in the ministry. We believe there is no better place to prepare for this great work than in Columbia.

Columbia, Mo. W. J. LHAMON, Dean.

Butler College.

Situated in the heart of a great agricultural and industrial population, in a city which has within the last twenty years more than tripled the number of inhabitants and which, in easy communication through steam roads and interurbans with the whole Middle West, is now the center of great movements, Butler College had for nearly two decades barely held its own. The churches with which it has been connected have advanced by leaps and bounds, but we seemed to stand still. How long could this last? This year has given the answer. We have secured pledges for a new endowment of $250,000, and payments on these pledges are coming in nearly every day. Before college opens next fall there is every reason to expect that from $20,000 to $25,000 will have already been paid in. And now, too, we are reaping the fruit of one work to which through all these years of dearth the college has been true. A high standard of entrance requirements, comparatively strict requirements in work, maintained in the face of loss of numbers and attraction of students to other places from which they could graduate more easily, has to a large extent earned recognition and the respect of those from whom respect is most respectable. An honorable past is not without weight in the hopes for a larger future that comes with increased endowment.

Aside from the completion of the subscription of $250,000 to the endowment the year has been a quiet one. Old names are missed in the faculty, notably those of Demarchus C. Brown, who instead of teaching Greek, has taken the position of librarian of the state of Indiana; and W. D. Howe, who is now professor of English at Bloomington, Ind. During the year came also the announcement that President Scot Butler had, upon representation by friends to the Carnegie pension board of his long and honorable service, been granted a pension from the Carnegie foundation, to take effect this summer. With the close of the college year Friday, June 28, President Butler permanently severed his connection as professor and administrative officer of Butler College. Other changes in the faculty have been accompanied by great regret, but this will seem to many to be almost a loss of identity in the college itself.

A far-reaching change has been made in another connection also. By a change in its policy, occasioned by the death of President Harper and the creation of the national educational board with its heavy endowment, enabling the board to give more vigorous support to the small colleges than any single university could do, the University of Chicago has decided to abandon the plan of affiliation with all the schools and colleges, of which Butler is one, connected with it. The interests of students who have already entered college have been safeguarded, but for future students, after 1910 therefore in toto, there will be no connection between Butler and Chicago. The affiliation has beyond question been of great help to Butler, and doubtless to the University of Chicago it has also been advantageous, but it is a matter of congratulation, I think, in many respects, that Butler, in its new career and larger endowment, is to stand on its own bottom.

The commencement season brought its usual ceremonies and inspiration. The baccalaureate sermon was preached by Prof. H. C. Calhoun, of Lexington, and the commencement address by Prof. W. D. Howe, of Bloomington, Ind. Seventeen took the A. B. degree and two the degree of A. M.

The summer school opens July 1, Monday, under the direction of Prof. J. D. Forrest, with a stronger faculty than we have ever had. The board of directors has made no announcement of progress in the election of a president or of a professor for the theological department, or of a head of the department of pedagogy. Miss Graydon will next year assume charge of the department of Greek and Professor Payne will have the Latin department. Prof. R. B. Moore, whose work in radio-activity has this year given him recognition not only in the highest scientific bodies of America, but in Europe as well, will be absent for a year for special work in chemistry with Sir William Ramsey and perhaps in France also. In this connection, perhaps, mention should be made of two notable books which have appeared this year from the pens of Butler professors, Prof. J. D. Forrest's "Development of Western Civilization," and Prof. A. K. Rogers' "The Religious Conception of the World." The favorable reviews of these books in technical journals and in the general press have been an unmistakable sign of their worth.

The catalog for the year, delayed by the many changes referred to, is now in press. It is hoped that definite announcements may be made on many important matters after July 10, when the board of directors meets, and a pamphlet embodying them may be expected shortly after that date.

Christian College.

The past year has been one of quiet, solid work and prosperity at Christian College. The health, morals and manners of the large body of students have never been better in the history of the institution. The excellent work done also has been eminently satisfactory. Upon the whole it has been one of the best years in the history of the college.

But we are planning for better things in the years to come. Ten years ago, when Christian College added laboratories and apparatus and raised the course of study so as to articulate with the State University, this was a great step in the right direction. This was among the first of our Western colleges to take this important step. Each succeeding year has seen steady improvement until finally something like the ideal has been reached. A full four years' course of real college work is now provided, leading to the A. B. degree. This places Christian College on a real college basis and offers all the advantages of a comprehensive college course, such as may be obtained at Eastern colleges for women, or in our State Universities. This course, however, is made as flexible as possible, so as to meet the case of those who may wish to attend the college. To this end, the studies are made elective, in many respects, so that the student is not confined to hard and fast lines as regards studies in which she feels no interest, and which may not be of any special value in view of her plans of life. The only thing required is, the student must, in electing studies, take what is equivalent to the whole course, while certain studies cannot be omitted in any case, such as the full course of English, etc. In short, the whole curriculum has been arranged to meet, in the best manner, the conditions of our Western and Southern life, and to provide an education commensurate with the highest development of American womanhood.

At the same time the College Preparatory department, which provides for four years of excellent work, not only leads up to the real college work, but also qualifies to enter the State University and all other first-class institutions of learning. Graduates in this department receive the College Preparatory Certificate. It is also further provided that young ladies who cannot take the whole four years college work in order to secure the A. B. degree, will receive a diploma for work done, as far as they have gone, and this will secure their entrance to any other college, and also credit for all the diploma calls for. All this is explained fully in the new catalog which can be had by those who have daughters to educate, on application to the President.

The faculty of the college has to some extent been reorganized in order to meet the new conditions involved in this new departure, though most of the old tried teachers (some of whom have been with the college for many years) are still retained.

The departments of Music, Art, Elocution, Domestic Science, Physical Culture, etc., are already equal to any similar institution in the United States, while it is believed that the Department of Music excels that of even the best colleges for women in the East. A new and distinguished member of the faculty has been added to the Voice Department in the person of the Dean, Prof. J. Emory Shaw, who has a national reputation. Prof. Buddeus, who has an international reputation, and who undoubtedly has no superior as a pianist in the United States, will continue at the head of the Piano Department. In both of these departments these gentlemen will have experienced and able lieutenants to assist them.

While Christian College is already, in most respects, well equipped as regards building accommodations, at the same time a much-needed new Academic Hall has been planned, and it is hoped that this building will be completed within the near future. Mr. Carnegie has subscribed $25,000 for the erection of this Hall, provided $25,000 shall be raised by the friends of the college, for an endowment fund. Owing to pressing duties in other directions, it has not been possible to push this matter during the past year, but arrangements are being perfected by which it is believed this $25,000 will be secured during the coming year. When this building is completed, Christian College will be unique in its building equipment, and will then be ready to go forward in the great work of educating the young women of our country in harmony with all the best interests of our advancing Western civilization.

It may be interesting to some of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to know that the missionary spirit is at a very high level in Christian College. Several young ladies have been in preparation for missionary work during the past year, and two were graduated who expect to enter the foreign missionary field. One is already in India, and one goes to Japan in September. It is also interesting to know that two of our foreign missionaries are sending their daughters to Christian College next year in order to complete their education. In connection with the College there is a Christian League which meets once a week for worship and conference, and that is regularly attended by a large number of our Christian girls.

Already the outlook for the College, during the next year, is very encouraging as the number of rooms engaged up to the present time exceeds any other year in the history of the College. W. T. Moore.

Columbia, Mo.

Christian Temple Seminary.

The third annual commencement exercises of the Christian Temple Seminary was held June 9-13. The baccalaureate sermon was preached on Lord's day. Monday was field day, Wednesday was class day and Thursday was the commencement, when the class of six received their diplomas and a most excellent address was delivered by Dr. Henry A. Griesmer. The Temple was beautifully decorated with flowers and the seminary colors. One of the graduates becomes pastor of one of our city churches and another is employed as the secretary of the Temple.

Last session was the best in our history. There were 68 matriculates and the interest has so grown in this work that we look for that number to be doubled next session. This course is a study in the Scriptures covering three years, followed by a four years' reading course. In September, a correspondence department will be opened and every effort possible will be made to quicken the interest in the study of the word of God and deeper spiritual life. Peter Ainslie.

Baltimore Md.

Christian University.

The Forty-ninth Session of Christian University was most satisfactory to all the friends of the school. The course of study, which has been considerably lengthened during the last few years, now comprises four years of Preparatory work, and four years of College work, leading to the degree of A. B. In addition to this there is a three years Ministerial Course leading to the degree of B. D. No one can now obtain the degree of B. D. without first having obtained the degree of A. B.

The faculty consists of fourteen members, all of whom are specialists in their respective lines of work. Of the students in attendance last session, two-fifths were ladies and three-fifths gentlemen. The best of feeling exists between faculty and students, and the work done is high-class.

Financially, the year has also been satisfactory. The mortgage of $15,000 which was placed on our new building because of the fire of March 23, 1903, has been paid in full and the University is now entirely out of debt. The Endowment is growing, but not as rapidly as it should.

The greatest problem which confronts Christian University is her inability to prepare all the ministers of the Gospel that are called for. If we could graduate ten times as many ministerial students as we do, all of them could be readily located. Almost daily I receive letters from church officials asking me to recommend to them a competent and consecrated young man, able to minister to the wants of their congregation. In nine cases out of ten, I am obliged to reply that the demand is far greater than the supply and that I can not do anything for them. These letters do not come from Missouri alone, but from all the States West and South of us, which shows that there are to-day hundreds of congregations, abundantly able to support a minister handsomely, but unable to find one.

Cotner University.

We have closed a strenuous and successful year—several things have happened looking to permanent advancement. The long expected connection with Lincoln by electric transit has been realized. An extension to Omaha is promised within a year. This helps the school and builds up the suburb. Through the liberality of Brother Teachout a department of education has been established, connecting the work with the public school system of Nebraska. Grade and professional certificates are granted our students the same as in the state schools. This insures enlarged attendance and influence.

Cotner has taken high rank in oratorical and scholarly competition. In the former she won first place in the prohibition oratorical contest of the state and second place in the interstate. In the latter she furnished one of three who were able to pass the Oxford examinations and qualify for the Cecil Rhodes scholarship. Bro. Joe Smith, who won the honor, is preparing for missionary work. He has done all his work here.

A gymnasium has been enclosed at a cost of about $3,000 and paid for as far as completed. It will be up to date when finished. It is hoped to complete it this year. A correspondingly new interest has grown in physical culture and athletics.

The student body has increased healthily. There have been 312 enrolled (no names repeated) in the college of arts and associated departments. This means a growth of nearly 25 percent over last year. We hope that an equal growth will be made next year.

The medical college, owing to a stiffening of entrance requirements, turned away a number of students, but gained in influence and strength. It is looking to a better location in the city and substantial improvements. The enrollment for the year was 54 with 12 graduates. Total attendance of the university for the year 366.

The teaching force remains practically the same. One was added to the department of music, making six teachers in that school.

J. W. Hilton resigned as pastor of the University church to take a place in the faculty. He is to be professor of ethics and sociology and associate in sacred literature. This is an enlargement of these departments. Brother Hilton is ripe in scholarship and consecration.

Our financial policy to keep our of debt has been adhered to. A resolution was adopted by the board of trustees to place the mark for permanent endowment for 1909 at $100,000. All effort will be made to reach this at least. We ask the sympathy and fellowship of all our brethren in this great work.

We thank God, take courage and press on.

W. P. Aylsworth, President.

Drake University.

Drake University just closed one of the most successful years in her history, enrolling a total of 1,764 students. The additions to endowment and building funds during the year amounted to more than $100,000. The reports indicate that within the last five years the University has doubled its assets. A new Carnegie Library, to cost $50,000, is now in course of construction. It is hoped that it may be ready for use by January, 1908. A new central heating plant, to cost $15,000, is also in course of erection.

The growth of the College of Liberal Arts has been most marked in the past few years, enrolling during the year 1906-7, 515 different students. In order that this department might receive such attention as is demanded, Dr. Frederick Owen Norton was recently elected Dean. Dr. Norton has been teaching Biblical Greek in the University during the past year. He comes to this new work unusually well qualified both by experience and training. Professor R. E. Conklin, of Eureka College, has been elected head of the Department of Geology and Botany, and Professor Alfred J. Pearson, of Gustavus Adolphus College, has been chosen as head of the Department of Modern Languages.

The attendance in the Bible College during the past year was largely in excess of any previous record. Students were enrolled in this school from Australia, Canada, England, Japan, China and New Zealand. The foreign colony is becoming larger each year. Plans have been made for a larger attendance and greater work next year.

The Law, Medical, Normal and Music Schools have been most prosperous and show continuous and healthy growth. In each of these schools the faculty has been strengthened for next year, and added equipment is contemplated.

Hill M. Bell, President.

Des Moines, Ia.

Hamilton College.

During the past year the college has enrolled 295 students from sixteen States and three foreign countries, the number of day students being 147 and boarders 148. The increase in the total enrollment during the past four years has been one hundred per cent, the total enrollment for 1902-3 being 147. The health of the student body has been remarkable for its excellence. Not a serious illness has occurred.

The library has been catalogued by the Dewey System and thus made efficient for the use of the students. The availability of the library has been further increased by the engagement of a trained librarian, who conducts the library upon the most modern methods. A number of much needed reference books have been added, but with the many demands made by the up-to-date class-room methods at Hamilton, there is great need of enlargement of its library facilities. It is hoped that friends and alumnae of the college will help in this direction.

Among the faculty changes Miss Marianna Mayers is the new director of the School of Art. She is an honor graduate from the Massachusetts Normal School, a student for several years at Pratt Institute, New York, and a pupil of Albert Lache in Arts and Crafts. Fraulein Ida P. Scudo, of Gotha, Germany, comes to the headship of the Piano Department of the School of Music. Fraulein Scudo is a graduate of the Royal Conservatory of Leipzic. She has been a pupil of Dr. Carl Reinecke, Dr. Jadassohn, and Herr Martin Krause, and has had a successful teaching experience. The increase of piano pupils has been so great that it has been found necessary to add another teacher, making five piano teachers in all. The new addition is Miss Virginia M. Brewer, who has had the best training in this country and abroad. Miss Ethel Agnes Hill will be a new member of the Music Faculty, receiving pupils in the violin department.

The graduating class this year was the largest, numbering thirty-eight. The policy of the present administration is to foster in every way possible the spirit of moral responsibility among the students. Toward this end an Honor Roll has been established, and it is a creditable record that fifty-four of the resident students last year attained this cherished ambition.

An active membership of the Young Women's Christian Association and an Auxiliary to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions have done valuable work in the stimulation of a healthful religious life among the students. In all the financial contributions have amounted to $175.

Over seventy of the old students have booked rooms for the coming school year, and in view of the demand for rooms the past year the Trustees are formulating plans for a new building. This new building will occupy the site of the corner lot adjoining the Hamilton grounds, and will contain a handsome and adequate Auditorium, a gymnasium, and additional dormitory and class rooms.

Luella W. St. Clair, President.

Lexington, Ky.

Eureka College.

The college rejoiced in the middle of the year to send another of its graduates to the foreign field. Miss Ella Ewing went to Bolengi, Africa, as the living link of the Eureka church. Her sudden death in May of the dreaded fever cast a gloom over the college and the community. The presence during commencement week of three of our missionaries seemed an appropriate home-coming. Mr. and Mrs. Weaver came from Japan and Mrs. Waggoner-Menges from Cuba. Mr. and Mrs. Hagin were detained at the last moment, though they were expected.

the Bible school and that department has been enlarged. A number of new courses have been added, and an additional teacher secured, Edward E. Boyer. Mr. Boyer is one of the most studious and scholarly of the graduates of Eureka College, and will devote his whole time to courses in the Bible department. Prof. Silas Jones will give some new courses of intensive study in certain periods of church history, which are usually inadequately treated or neglected altogether. There is also a course in Sunday-school work. It is believed that the History of our own Movement for the Restoration of Primitive Christianity will be both profitable and popular with young men preparing for the ministry. A course will also be given in contemporaneous religious history. A number of our most successful pastors and evangelists will visit the college during the year and deliver addresses and hold round-tables on various phases of our religious work.

Miss Elizabeth Baxter, of New Harmony, Ind., comes to the college as teacher in history and pedagogy. She is a graduate of the State Normal School and of the University of Indiana. She is a woman of strong personality and wide experience. Miss Rowena Praty, who formerly taught in the college, has resigned her position in New York city and returns next year as assistant in Latin and teacher of shorthand and typewriting. Mr. Lee Cannon, who has spent the last year in Europe in study and travel, returns in September to take up the work in French and German. Prof. Clyde Lyon is spending the summer in doing special work in English and public speaking at the University of Chicago. Prof. J. S. Compton went last week to the biological laboratory in the University of Wisconsin, where he will do special work during the summer quarter. Summer classes are conducted here at the college in mathematics, science and modern languages. The board has directed that steps be taken to introduce manual training and domestic science.

During the past year the Eureka Chautauqua Association has been organized, with 100 stockholders. The meeting will be held Aug. 1-11, on the college campus. It is expected, however, that permanent grounds will be selected before another year. The program for this year is a strong one.

The McKinley interurban system has been extending its lines rapidly throughout Central Illinois, and the great advantages of this to Eureka are evident to all.

The Illinois Christian Education Association is the organization through which the colleges and the churches of the state are brought into closer touch. A larger number of churches co-operated on education day than in any previous year.

The state convention at Paris set as the Centennial aims for Eureka College:

1. Increasing the attendance to 400.
2. Enlarging the membership of the Illinois Christian Education Association to 5,000.
3. Adding $250,000 to the endowment fund.

The student body has a committee of five to aid the Centennial committee and the I. C. E. A. committee in accomplishing their purpose. All the friends of the college are asked to join in helping reach the goal by the time we meet in Pittsburg.

Kentucky University.

Notwithstanding the great loss sustained at the beginning of the college year, through the enforced resignation of President Jenkins, on account of ill health, one of the most successful sessions in the history of Kentucky University has just closed. There were enrolled in the several colleges of the University 1,109 students, representing thirty States and seven foreign countries. Exclusive of the Commercial and Medical Colleges, there were eighty-three graduates, twenty-three of whom are preachers.

Upon the resignation of President Jenkins, the Executive Committee selected as Acting President, Dr. Thomas Benton McCartney, Jr., who has proven himself most efficient and satisfactory to all concerned.

The most important addition to our equipment during the coming year will be the splendid new Science Hall now under course of construction. This building is located on the east side of the campus, facing Broadway, forming another side of the contemplated quadrangle of Greek structures, similar to the present Morrison College. The new building will consist of three stories and attic over a deep basement. A portico supported on six columns of Doric type will bring it into yet more perfect harmony with the present architectural scheme.

Another matter of considerable importance regarding the future of the institution is the new entrance requirements. The College of Liberal Arts of Kentucky University has always held and deserved an excellent reputation for the high standard of graduation maintained, and for the nature and scope of its requirements for the baccalaureate degrees. In common with practically all of the colleges of the South, however, the thoroughness of the work of the College has been for several years impaired to some extent by inability to set and maintain adequate entrance requirements, and by the consequent admission of students whose preparation too often proved insufficient for the grade of work here required. Hence it has been the policy of the University for the past four or five years to add by degrees to the entrance requirements until the high standard desired could be reached and maintained. It

School of the Evangelists.

We date this letter the 22d day of June, and, while it leaves this postoffice, the new bell in the tower of the new college building rings out its note of rejoicing because all of the bills for the rebuilding have been paid or amply provided for. We have now a magnificent up-to-date equipment. This has all been brought about practically since our fire on December 1, 1904. We have added W. H. Trainum, A. M., B. D., to our faculty.

The outlook now is that we shall have the largest opening September 18 in the history of our effort. We had students from thirty-one States and countries last year. We expect even a wider representation the coming year.

We have no plans for the future, immediate or remote, but to offer the young man of purpose and muscle a first-class opportunity to get an education for the ministry of the word of God. I attribute the remarkable success which has attended our efforts in rebuilding to the fact that it is widely known that we stand for the Old Book.

We shall be pleased to furnish a catalogue to any young man who desires to become a preacher of the Gospel.

ASHLEY S. JOHNSON, President.

Sinclair College.

The writer has been in connection with this institution only one year and can only report in a limited manner. The work has been much hampered by a long-standing division over the cause of Christian education in Canada and the indifference resulting therefrom. The income then has been very small. The enthusiasm was almost zero. The college was little known. In the last year, however, every effort has been made to put the matter of our educational need before the people with the result that there is a keener interest and the financial response last year was greater than ever. The student body was small but had some excellent men in its ranks. There were four teachers giving full time.

As to the future, we have in view permanent funds for Christian education, the securing of a stated annual income, one student from every church at least for the Christian ministry, and above all things, union on some definite educational policy. This will be probably our greatest work because the basic plank in our progress generally. In Canada the work has gone so far and can make no decided advance until the educational question is settled in favor of more education. The unspeakably great needs, not only of Ontario but of the maritime provinces and the great Northwest, are upon us. We have been taken unawares. All these years no preparation has been made for this vast awakening and now we are humiliated beyond comparison by seeing others going in to occupy the ground. The brotherhood are rubbing their eyes, however, and there are satisfying signs of regaining consciousness. The failure to solve the educational question has crippled our progress for the last fifteen or twenty years. There is no other problem so imperative now. We are all hopeful.

University of Virginia Bible Chair.

For the first time in its history the Bible Chair was during the past year a part of the university. This is the more noteworthy because it is something entirely new in the history of state universities. A class, not large, but most encouraging for a beginning, studied throughout the year a course in Old Testament History the same number of hours, and with the same tests and credit as applied to other subjects. The contrast with the former method with its one hour a week lecture, no outside work on the part of students, irregular attendance, no examinations, and constant interruptions, was most refreshing. While the work thus came to have a distinct intellectual and educational value the religious interest and purpose were not lost sight of at any time.

To meet the needs of other students, not willing or able to do such work, other classes and lectures were held as formerly, and had their place and value in the religious life of the university.

Next session a course will be given in the History and Literature of the English Bible. There is every reason to expect a greatly enlarged class. If the work proves its value in the next few years it will undoubtedly be extended and adjusted so that larger numbers of men can fit it into their undergraduate and graduate courses. With such growth there should be an increased endowment, and a bountiful supply of necessary biblical books. W. M. FORREST.

Texas Christian University.

Texas Christian University has discerned the vastness of its territory and the future greatness of the population to which it must minister, and has enlarged itself by correlation with other colleges in various parts of the state. The entire combination of colleges thus formed attempts to meet the demands for learning that grows greater day by day.

Outside of the university proper, one female college at Bonham and one mixed college at Hereford are the properties of the university. Another college mainly for boys at Thorp Springs is closely affiliated in course of study and co-operation of work, though under separate management. In connection with the Hereford College, plans are being laid for the purchase of a farm and the establishment of industrial courses, both for boys and girls, which will widen the scope of our educational work.

The main university at Waco has property valued at $250,000, by conservative estimates; and, both by the growth of the city and by additional buildings its valuation is constantly increasing. During the past year a very important addition to the practical value of the plant was made by the construction of a new gymnasium and natatorium.

The university has strengthened its courses of study to the first rank of Western institutions and has accordingly added much to the strength of its general faculty. The College of the Bible, newly organized, has established a course of study second to none in the brotherhood, requiring all of the time of three professors and part of the time of four others. The College of Music, which recently has had the benefit of a new music hall, furnished with twenty-five pianos and other instruments, and supplemented with a pipe organ in the college chapel, has just added to its faculty one of the best pianists in the West. The school of oratory has been fortunate in the election of a teacher whose reputation in the Southwest has become so worthy as to reflect large honor on the department. The university carries a business college, the students of which enjoy, not only as fine a course in business studies as they can secure in any other college of business, but also access to liberal branches of a literary character and a very valuable training that grows out of intimate association with university people and participation in university life.

A very large step is believed to have been taken during the past year in the organization of a business men's association in the interest of the finances of the university. The general plan of this association has been heartily approved by the leading business men in the church throughout the state and the work of the organization will be vigorously pushed forward with a view to a larger endowment of the university in a form far more attractive than the usual plan of securing funds for such a purpose. The friends of the university have every reason to look toward its future with hope and confidence.

CLINTON LOCKHART, President.

Waco, Texas.

The College of the Bible.

The work of this college goes on with a steadily increasing momentum. The attendance of Bible students in the session just closed was 205, of whom six were women. The latter are preparing themselves for foreign missions or for usefulness in the churches at home. About thirty of the students were married men, and nearly half of the whole number are already preachers filling regular appointments. More than a hundred weak churches within reach of Lexington have been supplied with preaching by our students for several years past. Twenty-five preachers were graduated at the recent Commencement, nine with the classical diploma, and sixteen with English. The latter represents four years of college work, the former, six. These graduates came from thirteen States and foreign lands, and return to about the same number. We have had calls from churches for two or three times the number. The cash addition to our endowment fund made during the year was $10,000; and the whole of this fund now invested and bearing interest is $140,000, lacking thirty or forty. Many promissory notes not bearing interest will add materially to this when they fall due. Our six professors have all continued their work without interruption through the session, except Prof. Grubbs, who lost a few weeks by sickness. On account of extreme debility, he now conducts only the class in Exegesis, which is and has been his forte.

Our plans for the future may be briefly summed up in the one desire to make this college, in the course of time, the greatest seat of Biblical learning in the world. To this end our efficient financial agent, Bro. W. T. Donaldson, is to continue his work of adding to the endowment, our courses of Biblical study are to be enlarged, and the number of professors is to be increased according to demand. Already many men who have graduated at colleges with limited courses in the Bible are coming to us for more, and we expect this number to steadily increase; for our generation is waking up as no previous generation has done, to the importance of both knowing and preaching the contents of the Bible.

The Bible School Association of Kentucky has proposed to endow with $25,000 a chair of Sunday-school Pedagogy in our college as its Centennial task, and more than $20,000 of that sum has been already secured in reliable pledges. This will enable the college to organize a Sunday-school department, with a two years course for the training of teachers. All students, as well as those especially entered in this department, will be required to take it, and thus we shall expect all of our graduates to be expert teachers of Sunday-school teachers. In this ever-growing field of usefulness we hope to do our full share of labor. J. W. McGARVEY.

Lexington, Ky.

Virginia Christian College.

The fourth school year has closed. The first year's enrollment was 155, the second 180, the third 208, and this last year 221. The average age of the students is 18 years.

The situation of the school is near the center of Virginia, and in the suburbs of the city of Lynchburg, which is a railroad center, giving the school an excellent opportunity for prompt introduction to the public.

The brethren of the state as a body have been liberal of their gifts and helpful in the encouragements in every way. A great opportunity is here for the development of a center of Christian education.

Up to this time, the actual cost, including purchase and equipment, has been less than $35,000. The house itself cost more than $50,000, while the eighty-six acres of land, situated as it is, could be sold for more than the original purchase price of both house and land.

Prof. G. O. Davis, the financial secretary, has been working two years to secure means for the erection of two new buildings to cost $50,000, and reports that he is now within $5,000 of assured success. This will give us our present elegant building for girls alone, a handsome college building and a boy's dormitory. We have full faith that these buildings will be ready for the session of 1908.

We ask friends to read the advertisement in this issue and note the stand which the school has taken. If you have criticisms, write us; if you approve of our position, encourage us.

The world is growing better—the Christ is conquering, why should not college students take the lead in all things that make for righteousness? They are the pick of the land, the most promising forces of our race, and ought to be educated in all that is best and noblest.

The experience of the last two years has confirmed the position then taken that we would not enroll students who indulge the habits of strong drink and tobacco, and such vices as undermine character.

While the faculty and the student body fully concur in the demand thus taken for the same standard of ethics for young men and young women, if God himself sets up this standard, who can speak against it?

Lynchburg, Va. J. HOPWOOD, President.

Washington Christian College.

This college completed five years of work last month. It is celebrating by moving into new brick buildings on Columbia, one of the best avenues of the national capital. The buildings are now practically completed and are of the most substantial nature. They are heated throughout by steam and lighted by both gas and electricity. The location is in the best part of Washington, being in the northwestern upland residential section. While the school has done good work from the beginning it will open this fall enabled to accommodate a larger number of students and do better work. All its friends rejoice in this, and prominent among those who have made it possible are T. W. Phillips, O. A. Hawkins, Geo. H. Grone and B. A. Abbott. The only new thing in educational work worth mentioning is that there will be an increased number of Bible courses. The outlook for the coming session is unusually good. DANIEL E. MOTLEY.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

The Best Fishing.

Topic July 10, Mark 1:17.

"Now as he walked by the sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and Andrew, his brother, casting a net into the sea, for they were fishers. And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me and I will make you to become fishers of men. And straightway they forsook their nets and followed him." The succeeding verses tell us of the call of John and James, the sons of Zebedee, who also were fishermen, and were in the boat mending their net when the Master came. It is a beautiful narrative, striking in its simplicity. There must have been something compelling, masterful in the presence and voice of the prophet of Galilee to thus win these rugged fishermen, while at their hearty outdoor employment. They were not sentimentalists. Fishermen are a hardy race everywhere. They do not leave their nets at the beck and call of ordinary men and circumstances. The call of the sea is in their hearts. The love of the little lake of Gennesaret was in the very souls of the sun-browned fishers, with boat and tackle, representing about all they had of value in the world, before the Christ came into their lives, with his simple yet sublime call. That they had heard of the new prophet, knew him indeed, and were ready to answer his appeal is evidenced by the quick response. And yet it was not an easy thing to do to thus leave their old occupation and associations for an untried experiment. It was the venture of faith—a very imperfect, a very ignorant sort of faith, doubtless; yet faith of that venturesome and victorious kind that has moved men such as these in the world's great work, in all ages. Call it blind impulse, call it credulity, superstition, if you will. These fishermen, and such as they, have "turned the world upside down" by the simplicity and sincerity of devotion, to the call of duty, to the call of the Divine, which is much the same to men of this stamp. Such God chooses.

To become fishers of men meant the giving up of everything incident to their old life. Peter afterwards recalls this, in his answer to the Lord's questioning: "We have left all and followed thee." Perhaps they did not realize the full meaning of this summons. It meant hardship, loneliness, disappointment, death itself. It meant obscurity for most of them, the loss of friends, the shadow of the Cross athwart their earthly pathways. And something of this it means to the fishers of men even to-day. It is still God's challenge to the heroic soul. The call of the Christ is a summons to all that is noblest in our natures, the most unselfish, the holiest instincts of our beings. It is a call to service. Not ease nor self-seeking, not a summer day picnic, not a life of loitering along sunny streams, or sitting beside the placid waters of inland lakes—it is a call to the "strenuous life," as it found illustration in the life of Christ, of Peter, of Paul. But to the heroic of soul it is still the summons to supreme conquest. To catch men is the mightiest conquest that can inspire the spirit of man. It becomes an absorbing passion, once it comes to possess the springs of the soul. And men have freely given up all else for this noblest of occupations. The great apostle to the Gentiles says that he counted all things but refuse for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus the Lord, for whom he suffered the loss of all things, yet counted it gain.

No loss there is to him that gives nor vain
The effort: eyes are dim to highest gain;
Then give and giving find
Thy heart more tender and the world more kind!
They are the true refined
Whose lives are all entwined
With kindly deeds and merry cheer
Through all the ladened year.
And these have nought to fear
Who hold as friends and dear
The neighbors who are near!

The Bible School at Work

Conducted by J. H. HARDIN,
State Bible School Superintendent of Missouri, 311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

The following letter was received just before the adjournment of our state convention at Sedalia. As it refers broadly to our Bible school work in Missouri and in Texas and everywhere, I waive the question of taste involved in its compliments to me, personally, and give it to the public. The reader will note that the same desire for an advance movement which has been felt so generally in Missouri is being felt very deeply in Texas. And the movement is on. Texas will be heard from. Mark this and watch Texas.

Dallas, Texas, June 15, 1907.

Dear Brother Hardin:

As chairman of the Bible school committee of the state of Texas I desire to thank you, and through you, to thank the Missouri Bible school board for your acceptance of our invitation to attend our state convention and speak in behalf of the work so dear to both of us. Our committee believes most firmly that your coming has greatly advanced the interest of this work and has aided us to place it upon a foundation upon which we hope to build from year to year until we have an institution in Texas worthy somewhat of its character and the great domain in which it is to operate.

To put it mildly, the convention was delighted with your presentation of the various phases of the work called for at the different sessions. Embodied in the committee's report was a statement of the fact of your coming at our invitation and by the courtesy of the Missouri state board, and the convention gladly and unanimously adopted a resolution formally returning its thanks. We are sure that the philosophical investigation of the nature and problems of the Bible school work which you have made, and the practical solutions and suggestions which come from your vast experience in the pulpit and school room and in your superintendency work, account for the advanced position of Missouri, ahead, we think, of that of any other state in the union. We look to your state, now that you are upon a firm footing and have the work well in hand, to make marvelous strides toward the ideal development and use of the Bible school. We trust that 1907 and 1908 may see an extensive appropriation and application of your teaching concerning the apostolic church and school, and that the churches may show such a growth in the study of the Scriptures and in the thoroughness of their knowledge thereof, that your example may be followed throughout the country.

In conveying our thanks to your board, please say to them that we hope that we may "borrow" you again, for we are sure to need you, and to want you. Yours fraternally,

Jas. Johnson Collins.

Let this be Our Best Year.—The next thing after the benediction with which our convention closed was to actively take up arrangements for the new year. Thursday morning found the office humming with activity and the work is still being pushed. I hereby ask all the workers throughout the state to join with our board in its efforts to carry our state Bible school work this year to the highest point of efficiency it has ever reached.

The Pledges.—Many schools made their pledges at Sedalia, but we want the pledges of our schools which were not represented there. When you receive a card on this subject, fill it out and drop it in the postoffice at once.

Here is a letter which helps the brethren to know how our field workers spend their time:

Ash Grove, Mo., June 22, 1907.

Dear Brother Hardin:

I write to let you know how things are going. I have been on the "bounce" for a few days putting in teacher-training classes. On June 8 I went to Green Ridge and started a class of eight; from there I went to Walkers, but utterly failed; had two bad nights and sickness in some of our families, so we went to El Dorado. I spent Lord's day with Brother Giddens, preached to large audiences, both morning and evening; presented our work and started a class of thirteen; from there to Sheldon, where Bro. William Funderburk gives half time; had a very pleasant visit, a hearty co-operation and started a class of sixteen. Spent one night at Kenoma, where we have a very small congregation, but as true as steel, but scattered over so much territory that they could not take up the work; went to Golden City where Brother Biggs has very recently taken up the work and found him away filling his appointment at Avilla, but was so kindly received by his people that we could work with a will and succeeded in getting twenty-three to take up the work. Had a short visit with Brother Biggs Monday afternoon and left Golden City feeling glad. Our next stop was Everton and in two nights we, by the help of the faithful workers, started a class of twenty-seven; they were delighted to have the opportunity of getting this work at home. Brother Pontius, of Fordland, will give them one-half time the remainder of the year and we look for something to "be doing." I am now at Ash Grove and hope to do a good work here; and from here I go in home for a few days' rest and on to Callaway county to get ready for the dedication.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucuous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address: F. J. S. Topic.

If you care to thoroughly understand this prayer-meeting topic you will read Hebrews 8, 9, 10, and also Galatians 3 and 4. These scriptures emphasize a truth very familiar to us, namely, that we are in the New Covenant and not the Old, we are not "under the law" but under the gospel of God's grace.

This indisputable fact has led some among us to strongly affirm that there is nothing of obligation to us in the Ten Commandments. We may assent in so far as these commandments belong to the code of the Old Covenant of Sinai which was done away at the cross.

Let us examine the first four commandments anew, however, to see if in principle there are not obligations in them for us who are under the New Covenant of grace in Christ through the gospel.

Shall we not claim the opening statement, "I am Jehovah thy God, who brought thee out of Egypt, out of the house of bondage"? Our bondage in sin in spiritual Egypt was as terrible a reality as what befell Israel. Our deliverance is more wonderful. Is Jehovah not "our God" in a more marvelous sense? What a satisfying and strength-giving consciousness in the personal apprehension of Jehovah as "our God!" We can not do without the opening words.

What about the "other Gods" and "bowing down and serving them"? Is there no need for us in such a warning? Does not John warn his "little children" to "guard themselves from idols"? 1 John 5:21. The idolatry which allures us is more dangerous and seductive than the gross image worship from which this commandment guarded Israel. There are idols of society, of the market place,—modern life is as essentially idolatrous where Christ does not reign as it was centuries ago. Does not Jesus warn the citizens of the kingdom of heaven against mammon worship? Mammon is the great modern idol. We need the admonition, if not the statutory restraint, of the spirit of this command.

We may also fear and rejoice as well, because our God is "a jealous God." Jealousy implies ardent affection. Such is God's love for us. It also infers a danger of rejection if we do not reciprocate. Can we live well or worthily without the help of this thought of God?

The Israelite was to consider the relation of his conduct to "the children of the third and fourth generation." Are we not distinctly admonished that "none of us liveth unto himself"? We who are under the New Covenant can not afford to disregard the meaning of this ancient warning. Nor would we wish to be deprived of the mercy from on high which comes to us because of some faithful one in preceding generations.

What about "taking the name of God in vain"? That professed Christians should be guilty of profanity as popularly defined is unthinkable. But we are of those who have taken "the Name" upon ourselves. We live "in the Name," and suffer "in the Name," and hope "in the Name." Apart from "the Name" there is nothing for us. Suppose we so live as to virtually deny it! Suppose observers of our lives "blaspheme the Name" because of us? Have we not taken "the Name in vain"? Will God hold us guiltless because the ancient statute of Sinai is nailed to the Cross of Calvary?

What about one day in seven for the Lord? We are sure that there is no moral or scriptural obligation to observe the seventh day of the week. Christian liberty and Christian discernment have long ago accepted the liberty which Paul argues and have transferred their ideas of sanctity to another day. And even in relation to that day we are left at liberty to observe it or not, as we will. Read here Romans 14. But in granting us this liberty Paul clearly implies that we will choose one of the seven days to observe, as he says, "unto the Lord." He believes we will give God one day. Thus he has transferred the spirit of this ancient commandment.

Do we set aside one day and make it different? Is it a day "unto the Lord"? What do you put into the day you observe? These are some of the present day applications of the first four commandments.

The Ten Commandments.—Duties Toward God.—Exod. 20:1-11.

Memory verses, 1-11.

Golden Text.—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.—Deut. 6:5.

The Ten Commandments form one of the most remarkable and important documents in the history of religion. Taken in connection with the book of the covenant which follows (Exod. 21:1-23:19), they give a clear and sufficient statement both of the general principles and of the details of a system of ethical religion, based on the worship of one God whose most prominent characteristics are justice toward men and the love of justice in men, and issuing in a series of provisions to insure the maintenance of equitable relations among men. The Decalogue states, in the main, the foundation principles of the Hebrew monotheism, most of which are permanent principles of all true religion, and gives only enough details to make the meaning unmistakably clear. The Book of the Covenant deals entirely with the minutiae of social and industrial life in a pastoral and agricultural community such as Israel was to be in its new home.

The principles laid down in the Ten Commandments properly include two general elements, relations Godward and relations manward. "Perpendicular religion," as it is sometimes called, which takes into account only the relation between God and the individual, is barrenly formal and theological. "Horizontal religion," which recognizes no lines of duty except those between man and man, is amiable and often useful but lacks spirituality and the inspiring power of the loftiest motive. Both elements are needed.

Some persons come to the knowledge and worship of God through love and service to men; some come to the service of men through the knowledge and love of God. That is largely a matter of temperament. To the man of strong practical impulses, the former method is the natural one; to the born mystic, the latter.

The first four commandments specify four duties toward God: to worship one God alone; to worship Him without the use of any material image designed to represent him or any of his attributes in terms of natural objects or creatures; to refrain from any profanation of his name; and to devote to his worship a definite portion of time.

The worship of one God only, to the exclusion of all others, was not easy to a people who believed in the real existence of the manifold deities of their heathen neighbors. And Israel at this period evidently did so believe. If there were many spirits, more or less powerful, giving aid to their enemies, might it not be the safe course to pay some respect to them so that, if they could not secure their help, they might at least avoid their hostility? A strong argument could be framed along these lines. But no, this tempting policy must be rejected. Let the power of the other gods be what it might, Israel must worship Jehovah only. Through the practice of monotheism, the nation finally came to the belief of it. Israel first learned not to worship the other gods, then learned that they did not exist.

To forbid the use of images was to take away a prop which weak faith has used in every age—and a prop which has always made weak faith still weaker by fastening it upon the wrong thing. The problem is to make the object of faith so definite and concrete that faith can grasp it vividly and certainly, but at the same time not to degrade and undeify the object of faith in the process. The use of images accomplishes the first desideratum but sacrifices the second. It makes the object of worship definite and presents it vividly to the mind of the worshipper; but meanwhile that object has ceased to be God. In Israel's case the prohibition of the use of images was at once followed by the establishment of a system of holy places—Sinai, the tabernacle, later various shrines, and finally the temple. God was localized, though he could not be visualized. It was a compromise method, designed to secure a maximum of vividness in the sense of God's reality and presence and a minimum of materialism in the conception of Him.

The third commandment was doubtless primarily intended to prohibit the use of the name of God as a witness to false oaths. It applies equally to any use of the divine name for any purpose or in any connection inconsistent with the divine majesty. No decent man will use the name of his wife or mother or sister except respectfully. So no good man can use the name of God except religiously.

The setting aside of a definite time for worship has been recognized as necessary by every great religious system. It can not be left to spasmodic impulse. To have one day of religious rest in every week is to lay the foundation for the establishment of a habit of religion. Abstaining from work is not worship, but it gives the opportunity for worship.

"James has a very morbid mind. He does not seem to enjoy life like the rest of the children," said Mrs. Hinman to his mother one day.

"Why, he came over to our house last Sunday afternoon after the Bible readings for which you sent him, and our children were playing a harmless little game of parlor billiards, and he could not be persuaded to take part in the game at all. And when we pressed him for a reason, he said that he did not think it would please God to have his day used for such things. Now, I do not think that you ought to allow him to go on in that strain of mind, for it will unman him for future influence upon the world. The Bible says, 'If we would have friends, we must show ourselves friendly,' you know. Our children felt very much put out at what seemed to them a very unfriendly attitude on James' part. Of course, they can not understand these hard questions on theological points, and I do not intend that they shall puzzle themselves over them. They are going to have a good time while they are young and innocent, and I wish that James could think as they do, so that they could have him for a playmate. He even refuses to play marbles for keeps, and the school children call him 'Preacher Gordon,' and Jessie tells me that they run on him terribly. I am sorry that I can not encourage my children to take his part more than they do, but he puts himself in such unnecessary opposition to their harmless little frolics that they would incur the unpopular opinion of the school if they seemed to sympathize with him."

Mr. Gordon sat silently knitting until her neighbor had finished these unwelcome remarks. And yet she was glad to have the subject opened that she might say a few kind words to her about her children, whose conduct had come to her ears through James' confessions, which he had made at her knee. At such times he told her faithfully the proceedings of each day, his temptations and trials, reverses and triumphs.

"Yes, I know James is a very conscientious boy, and I am devoutly thankful that he is," she replied. "I should feel very uneasy about his future if he had loose ideas about the Lord's day or games of chance, which lead to excesses beyond control in later years. I am sure, Mrs. Hinman, that it would be much better for the men that are to be and the influence that ought to be exercised upon the world, if there were more such boys with a thought about how God regards their conduct, than there are. I entertain great fears for children who are not taught God's Word, and who are permitted to pass through the tender age without having their consciences trained in Christian conduct. I am satisfied that any one can better afford to be unpopular with the world, while conforming to the teachings of God's Word, than to run the great risk of displeasing him and losing all at last. All the examples of the worthies set before us in the Word were those who, like their Master, even Christ, suffered more or less of persecution from the world, and the reproach of the cross is to be the glory of the Church until the King comes to reward his faithful ones."

Thus was revealed the secret of the boy's conscientiousness. Like Timothy, whose unfeigned faith had its beginnings in the heart of a grandmother, Lois, and a faithful mother, Eunice, so James Gordon drank in from his earliest remembrance those principles which a godly mother drew from the Bible and taught him with faithful care. Not that he was perfect, nor a model in every particular, for he was not; but his training and his own decision to make the will of God his aim, led him into a hopeful, Christian life, which grew upon him as he grew in years and experience in the teachings of the Book which his mother loved.

When James went to college he found many new opportunities to exercise this grace and faith. The genuine article is not as a rule despised there, but it is often put to a severer test than one finds in less active life.

One day, after about three years of college life, he found himself face to face with a condition which caused him a great struggle. The decision in favor of what he deemed to be the will of God would place him, beyond a question, in an unfavorable light with his colleagues and also his professors. It was the time-honored custom of an oratorical contest for a moneyed prize in the junior class. Two of his professors had won the prize in their day, and it was considered a special honor worthy of all who might be eligible for the contest.

James had prepared for it, but as he thought over the matter, it seemed to him that he could not enter it and yet feel that he had fulfilled his highest duty as a Christian. While at first it did not seem positively wrong, yet somehow it did not correspond to that sense within him that approved of the things excellent, the things lovely and of good report.

The more he studied the matter, the clearer it came to him that God did not approve. And as he came to know of some of the bitternesses that were springing up between his fellows over the contest, he saw the evil nature of it.

The day of the evening set for the affair, James came upon a set of boys excitedly huddled over a paper, making bets and staking money upon the chances of the contestants. "Five to one in favor of Gordon" seemed to be the prevailing talk as he hurried past. His first impulse was to stop and remonstrate with them, but remembering that such a course had met a rebuff and misrepresentation which nearly cost him his standing with the students once before, and not having time anyhow, for he was due at Science Hall, 400 feet away, for class work in just fifty seconds, he hastened on. But the words stuck in his mind: "Five to one in favor of Gordon." He had attended the county fair while on the farm, and remembered hearing and seeing a similar betting contest over some fast horses that were to race for a purse of just the amount that had been posted for the junior class to contest for.

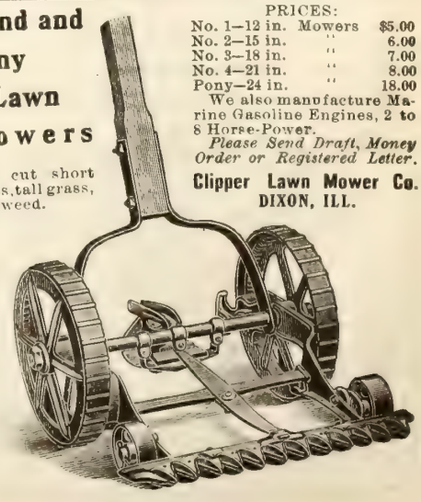
The subject of the recitation was Moral Philosophy. "Reputation" was the topic assigned to James.

"I can not just agree with your views, professor," said James, in a courteous tone, as he got up to recite. "You make virtuous character of less import than intellectual attainment, in reputation, as I understand you. Then your side remarks on the coming contest as being a good opportunity for making a worthy reputation seems to me to be true only in a superficial and worldly sense. While those who fail to impress the judges must necessarily take a second or last place, and be accounted as less reputable than their more fortunate fellow who gets the judges' approval.

"I am more and more inclined to regard the whole thing as on a level with horse racing and other forms of gambling. Here the boys are now making 'books' and betting on the contestants, just as I have seen them do at the county fair in the race track. I also come to know that the judges have been appointed with reference to some of these who are making the bets, and they are their personal friends. I will venture to estimate that there is now over $5,000 staked upon the contest, and, as for my part, I am unwilling to go on the platform knowing these things as I do."

As these words were spoken all eyes were turned upon him and a volume of whispered exclamation burst forth, showing intense excitement in the class room.

"I hope, James, that you will consider your reputation for good sense as too valuable capital to be thrown away in a hasty decision like that. You know too well the value of esteem of personal excellence, I am sure, to blast your prospects with the student body and the faculty alike, by such a rash act.



"We are in great expectation over your effort this evening, and I trust that you will not disappoint us. As for the gambling tendency, that can not be evaded, so far as I know. They cast lots upon the seamless robe of our Savior, you know, as he hung upon the cross, for which he did not come down from the cross and thwart the plan of redemption, did he? No, indeed. 'It is impossible but that offences come,'" quoted the professor, as he closed these remarks and dismissed the class.

"But woe unto him by whom the offence cometh," came to James as a completion of the passage which the professor had begun to quote in support of his position, but he had no chance to defend the position, since the tumult would drown his voice and he did not care to make a spectacle of himself unnecessarily; so he hastened to his room. The spring lock closed behind him and he buried his face in the sofa pillow and prayed. Knock after knock followed in hasty succession, but he did not answer them. He wanted to talk with his mother's God just then more than with his fellows, for he had learned that if he would know the Will, which he had made the rule of his life, he must put himself in position to hear and do, not as interpreted by man, but as revealed by the operation of the Word and the action of the Spirit upon the soul, shut in with God alone. "Not as the world," came to him as if flashed upon the inner ear of the soul by an unseen messenger and an unheard voice. "Not as the world," he whispered in response, "so let it be, Lord Jesus."

Just then the mail carrier thrust a letter under his door, which he reached from where he was kneeling. "From mother's blessed hand," he whispered, as he tore it open and read:

"MY DEAR SON: I received your letter and announcement of the contest, which I have made a special matter of prayer, and somehow I do not feel easy about it, but I think I can trust you to do right. I opened the Word for you, as has been my custom, and this is the passage that I came upon: 'Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes and the pride of life is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God, abideth forever.'

"I trust that you will not be conformed to the world in any way that will be displeasing to our Heavenly Father. You will remember that Jesus taught his disciples that their expectations, manner of life, conversation, peace and maxims were to be, 'NOT AS THE WORLD,' under all circumstances.

"Do not, my son, expect to have the praise of men who do not know the true God and Jesus Christ his Son, as the Saviour from sin. If it comes as a result of right doing, accept it as you do other privileges honestly earned. But if it is withheld, consider that God sees and does not withhold from those who walk uprightly, neither does he forget to recompense in his own good time and way.

"I confess to having felt uneasy, since you went away, lest through the philosophies of men and science falsely so called, you might be led away from the simplicity which is in Christ. But you belong to God, and I can trust you in his care. Should you come on the contest, it is my advice that you refrain from competing on the division that will seek to win the money prize. And if there is but one division, it will please your mother (and I believe that I have the mind of the Lord in the matter) to have you withdraw your name entirely from the list.

"You will find enclosed the amount which the prize would bring, which you can spend as you would the prize money, if you obtained it. May God bless you, is my constant prayer. MOTHER."

Chapter II.—A Modern Martyr.

I count life just the stuff to try the soul's strength on.—Robert Browning.

His strength is as the strength of ten,
Because his heart is pure. —Tennyson.

As he finished reading the letter he heard a step and a knock at his door, which he knew to be that of President Brown. Brushing his hair into shape, he stepped to the door and the President walked in, saying: "Well, James, what has happened to you? Professor Haberton tells me that you made some strange remarks in his class this morning, and the students are all upset over the coming contest. They fear that you are going to disappoint them by pulling off at this late hour. I hope that you do not consider such a rash act with any seriousness."

"It is certainly true, President Brown, that I can not conscientiously go on that contest for a money prize, or any other so far as that is concerned. I am willing to speak in a friendly, social contest for the sake of the exercise and the entertainment of the fellows and the people, who wish to hear it, but so far as competing for the prize, I am led to think that it is all wrong and conducive of evil to the contestants and to the student body in general, and demoralizing to the public in more ways than one can probably see at first sight, and I can not lend myself to such things.

"I respect you, President, and the faculty, for your years of experience and knowledge above my own limited vision and wisdom, but there is one whom I respect above all others, that is my mother. I accept her conclusions and reasoning wrought out by prayer and the study of God's Word as they are, as I can no other."

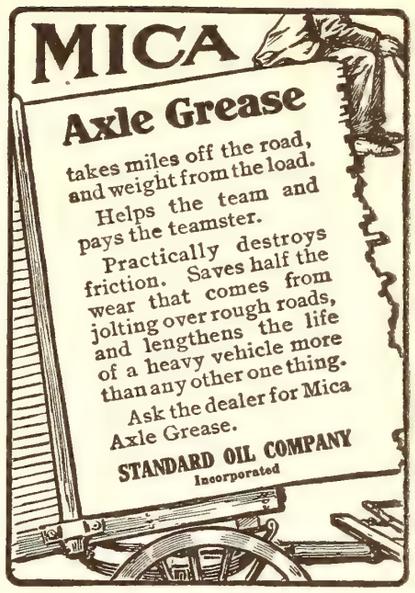
"I am always glad to see a young man who respects his mother," said the President, "but why did you not come to this conclusion before, James? It would have saved you immensely in the estimation of the school, and your standing with the public would have been undisturbed.

"All were expecting you to win, and people have come in from long distances to witness the contest, and I hate to have it marred by having the best speaker drop off thus. Besides, it is contrary to the rules of the school, subjecting the offender to a liability of expulsion to drop out without the consent of the faculty and we have just decided to hold you to the contest."

"I did not know before this morning that I was being made an object for the boys to gamble on. Nor did I get this letter from my mother until a few moments ago," said James, handing his mother's letter to the President; "and yet I have had a growing sense that it was not the thing to do for several days past. But owing to the considerations which have been mentioned, I had not come to any full decision until I saw the boys making up the 'book' for a gambling contest this morning, and I said what I did in the classroom, and now mother's letter, which you have read, explains itself. But aside from all these considerations, I feel that I should not do as my Lord and Master would like to have me do, if I took part in this contest, and I am sure that you can not expect me to go contrary to my conscience and my mother's request in the matter, notwithstanding others may not like it."

The President stood thinking a moment, and then turned about, saying: "Well, James, I am sorry, but it can not be helped now. You will lose immensely, and yet I can not blame you under the circumstances for taking just the course that you have taken. I wish that more of the young men had such mothers and such consciences. The administration of this college would be reduced to a much easier task, and the world would be immensely better off in the long run—and yet, my boy, I fear that a martyr's fate awaits you in the end, if you persist with this course in life.

"You might rank high with men if you could use a little more policy in your work. There is not a young man in college with better prospects. But," continued the President with a far-away look in his eye, "it was not the way our Savior taught, and I am often led to reproach myself that I have not taken a more decided stand for what I saw to be in full accord with the teachings of God's Word. I have regaled my conscience by the prospects of the good I could do as a man in position and prominence. Yet I confess, James, that I suffer more than the death of a martyr every year, through annoyances of conscience over these things. Our trustees are men of the world largely, and our patrons are people of various types of mind and peculiar beliefs. So I must smoothe things over and please all in order to keep harmony and peace or things would go to pieces in a hurry.



"This necessitates a very volatile conscience, and mine often rebels at the violence which I must do to it in these cases. These very boys, who are gambling your chances, are sons of our patrons and trustees, and if we undertook to deal with them as they ought to be dealt with, it would cause us great trouble.

"You have my deepest sympathy, James, for I know what it will cost you to take this stand. May God bless and guide you is my prayer." Thus speaking, he stepped out into the hall and back into the faculty meeting, where the professors sat in counsel over the coming contest.

"It is of no use, ladies and gentlemen," he said as he called the meeting to order, "our systems are at fault and not the conscience of the young man whom we are sitting upon. I wish that the whole prize system in our college was abolished. I also wish that our systems were more simple and less complicated with the world and worldliness. As they are, we are at the mercy of worldly-minded men and a perverted public conscience, and must cater to the wrong side continually.

"It is my judgment that this matter had better be dismissed without censure or disability to Mr. Gordon, since a large majority of the school is more deeply involved in a greater misdemeanor than he is for refusing to become a pawn to their gambling greed, and all know the result of trying to deal with that evil in this school."

All were silent until Professor Haberton arose and said: "I think that it would have a better moral effect upon the school to dismiss one refractory student, than to allow the other fifteen hundred students to think that one young man can with impunity override the rules of the institution and throw us into the confusion that this affair has. However, since no overt act has been committed as yet, I move that the matter be laid upon the table until further developments."

This was carried, and the contest came off, but James was not in his place nor in the opera house where it was held. The president of the junior class explained that "owing to indisposition and other complications, the name of James Gordon had been dropped from the program, and that of Professor Haberton's son placed in its stead."

All seemed to go off beautifully. To the spectators there was not a hitch to mar the harmony. But President Smith's heart was heavy. There were others who were in bitterness also, but their sorrow was not that of conscience nor of concern for principle. Some were vexed at the judges' decision to confer the prize upon an unexpected and obscure member of the class, whom James had been training quietly and unbeknown to the rest, or to the faculty.

This, of course, threw all the gamblers into confusion again, and they were bitter toward James for his double offense, and then they were out of patience with the judges all around.

The class was all upset amongst themselves, and this last departure only made them less inclined to be reconciled with anything or anybody, and they could not conceal their disappointment. And many did not try to do so. This created enmities which were carried by some through life, and was by no means a promoter of grace to any thus exercised.

James went to class the next morning, but found things wonderfully changed. All seemed to be strangers to him. None greeted him with the familiarities that he had been accustomed to see and hear, but instead a crowd of boys groaned as he passed. Another company stood gazing at him as if he was an entire stranger, or some freak that had suddenly appeared in their midst.

The professors did not call upon him to recite in any class that morning, no more than if he had not been there, and as he passed the bulletin board, he saw a caricature pinned up with the announcement: "Rev. James Gordon, lately from Grass Holler Haystack, will lecture in Professor Haberton's room on 'Gambling.' Seats free. A prize will be given for the largest collection of poker chips in the crowd."

As he passed on to the societies' frames he saw that a pencil mark had been drawn across his name, indicating that he had been dropped from the debate to take place that evening, and as he reached his room the mail had been delivered, and he found a number of drop-letters, in which some of the most insulting representations from his classmates had been sent to him.

President Brown came in soon after, saying: "James, the faculty are in favor of suspending you, and I have come to grant you a week's absence to forestall their action. I have tried to carry the matter in your favor, but am not able, owing to the intense feeling among the students, and it has its influence upon the faculty, to such an extent, that I am unable to withstand the action by any other means.

"Here is my written leave (handing him an envelope), and I would advise you to go at once to another college and enter upon the recommendation which I can give you, otherwise you will probably lose your standing and be barred out from college work for the coming year.

"You will not probably be able to come back here on the conditions which they impose (that is, an apology to the school, which I could not make, and do not think you would do it), so you had better pack your things at once, before they know the plans we have entered into, and get away on the afternoon train.

"I have not signed the decision of the faculty and will not. If it becomes a law, it must be made so by the trustees, who do not meet until next month. By that time you can have your standing transferred to another college, and there will be no one to suspend, for you will have escaped their grasp. May the God of your mother bless you, my boy, good bye."

The President turned away, wiping his eyes vigorously with his handkerchief. James sat down and buried his face in his hands, as the whole situation dawned upon him. The pleasant associations and familiar surroundings, which he had come to enjoy very much, all suddenly changed, and he must now be counted an outcast and unworthy of fellowship longer in these halls, and upon the beautiful campus, or in the classrooms with the students that he had learned to love as he loved his own brothers and sisters.

It was too much for him to bear, and he burst into a flood of tears as wave after wave of the reality went over his soul. Just then he heard the piano. Some one was playing, "I must tell Jesus all of my sorrows, I can not bear these burdens alone." He fell upon his knees and poured out his soul to God, in prayer.

When he arose a sweet peace filled his heart such as he had not felt before, and in quick succession these passages of scripture came to him:

"If ye were of the world, the world would love his own. But because ye are not of the world, therefore the world hateth you.

"Remember the word that I said unto you: the servant is not greater than his Lord.

"If they have persecuted me, they will persecute you. If they have kept my sayings, they will keep yours also. But all these things will they do unto you for my name's sake, because they know not him that sent me."

"Not Greater than His Lord." He stopped and thought how they had treated his Master. Even in the town where he had lived they tried to cast him over the precipice. Also, how suddenly his great popularity had changed in a day from "Hozanna to the Son of David" to "Crucify Him" from the same throng.

His mind ran on to the life of Paul, who had held high authority from the hands of his countrymen: how that, while upon a mission to do their bidding he had seen a great light from heaven and had hearkened to the voice from thence, and when he acted upon that higher authority, he had to flee from the same countrymen that had honored him; that from city to city he was driven by their fury, and counted as the offal, when, in fact, he was God's chosen vessel to bear the Gospel to those who persecuted him.

His thoughts ran down the line of martyrs, reformers and missionaries of the cross, and he could recall similar conflicts in their lives. This caused him to rejoice that he, too, was counted worthy to suffer shame for the cause of right and conscience.

He began to pick up his belongings and pack for his journey home, when it occurred to him that he would need to gather a number of his books from various persons of the school, settle some bills and bid adieu to some of his once close friends, whom he supposed would like to say good bye, at least, if they knew that he was going away for good.

So, passing down the stairway, he started by a short cut across the campus, toward the dormitory, where some of these were located. As he was passing the coalsheds that were located on the river bank, he saw the company of boys, whom he had overheard making the "book" for bets on his chances the day before, coming toward him with clenched hands and angry faces. "Hold up here, Mr. Preacher," said the leader, "we have a little account of about five thousand to settle with you. Your fool action of yesterday caused us to drop about that figure, and now we are going to take it out of your skin." Before James could collect himself, they had him down upon the ground, bucked and gagged and dragged into the coal house, out of sight of other passers-by. "Let's dump him into the river," said one. "No, not yet," said the leader; "we are going to whale some of that —— foolishness out of him." So saying, he began to kick James in the back with brutal thuds that caused him to swoon. Thinking that they had killed him, as he did not come to, they piled some coal sacks over him, and fled.

That night was a bitterly cold one, and Carter, the janitor of the dormitory, had to bring extra coal for his furnaces. So, providing himself with a wheelbarrow, he began to load it with the sacks of coal nearest at hand. And to his horror he came upon a face, which seemed to move, but did not speak. Being timid and superstitious, he ran out of the coal house, and started up the path full force, when he ran into President Brown.

"O, your Reverence! Come quick! Come quick! To the coal house. A face hid in the coal, sir. A face! A living, moving face!"

"O, Carter, the boys are putting up a joke on you," said the President.

"No, no, no, sir! Come and see for yourself, sir!"

The president followed Carter back to the coal house and both stopped at the door and listened, when a low groan came distinctly from within. The president, being a strong, well-poised man, flung the door wide open, and, with the aid of the lantern, looked in. Sure enough there was a face, bruised and blackened with the coal and brutal treatment of some one. Stepping in, he removed the other coal sacks from him, and, taking him in his strong arms, he carried the limp form to the dormitory.

Here, as he removed the bandages from his mouth, and wiped the coal dust from his eyes, he beheld to his horror, the face of James Gordon. "Great heavens, Carter! Get the doctor, quick. It is Gordon!"

Carter sprang to the telephone, and summoned the college physician, and then turned his attention to assist the president. One of James' friends (the one whom he had trained, and to whom the prize had been awarded) came down for fuel, and seeing who it was, insisted on having him taken into his room. This done, the president began to ask questions. But no one had seen him since he left the classroom.

The doctor came and found his hands badly frozen, and his body bruised by the coal, under which he had evidently struggled to release himself. Three of his ribs were stove in from the backbone, causing serious internal injuries in the region of the heart.

"It is my opinion that he can not recover," said the doctor, seriously; the exposure has been too long and severe. His hands are badly frozen, and would probably have to be amputated anyhow if his other injuries would permit of it. But they are too severe to allow of that. We will put him into as comfortable condition as possible, and send for his friends, if he has any."

The president went to the telephone and wired at central for a through connection on the long distance to Gordon's home town, and arranged for his mother to come to the telephone that night. The president stood ready to talk with her.

"My dear madam," he began, "I am President Brown. Your son James has been faithful, and that unto death, I fear. Having taken a bold stand against wrong, and refusing to become a party in that which he considered evil, he has incurred the enmity of certain base fellows, who have treated him in a shameful manner. He is yet alive. I have arranged for a special train to bring you and any other members of your family that may wish to come to this place, to-night. I am informed that it will be ready in a few minutes, and will await your convenience. I do not need to urge you further, but will meet your party at 12 o'clock, to-night, with carriages and bring you to your son's side. We are doing all that can be done for him under the conditions."

That night at 12 a swift special sped into the college town, bearing Mother Gordon and a trained nurse. No others had been informed of their mission or movements, at their home town.

As they stepped from the train the president expected to meet a weeping woman, but, instead, Mother Gordon looked up with strength and confidence, saying:

"It shall be well with my son, president. I gave him to God from his birth, and if this is God's way to take his precious life, let it be as it shall please him. If so, it shall mean that he can do more by a martyr's death than he can with a victor's crown. And yet my hope is that he shall be spared."

Around the Gulf to Mexico.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Gravette—Texarkana—Marshall, Texas.

I am going to tell you about my trip around the Gulf of Mexico to Mexico City, and return to Bentonville, Ark. It was a remarkable trip in several respects; in the first place, we never saw the gulf at all, and again we took with us a young man who can not walk, but who is obliged to wheel himself about in a tricycle. If this story has no other moral it will show that a person doesn't have to use his legs to see the world; and, in fact, I have never found that anybody is happier with two legs than one. We pity a man with one leg, and are usually discontented on both of our own. Three of us took the trip; my practical friend, Morton; Jebly, who can not walk, and myself—I am the one who am writing about it. And that all who care to go may feel that they are in the company, I present the account in diary form.

March 22. It seems tempting chances to start out on a Friday to make a trip down to New Orleans and across the gulf, but I was born on Friday, and that was a lucky event for me. According to the schedule, we left Bentonville, Ark., at 8:30, though it was 9:30 if we judged by any other time than that printed on the folder. We slowly jogged up the road to Gravette, a small town pronounced in a manner unworthy of such elegant spelling, namely by hitting the first syllable hard. This little Arkansas town must be bubbling over with civic pride, for it keeps you here and holds the next train out of the limits till you have waited nine hours and thirty minutes. They want you to see their town, and you see it, too, unless you are blind. To the hotel for dinner, where finding a young traveling man, I told him of our projected trip. Instead of being impressed, he told me he had been all over the gulf more times than he could remember. He said with a sneer that he had been all around the world (he used a bad word to describe the world, as if he had not found it the place he had once believed). He told me not to go to the gulf, but sail on deep water. I weakly tried to explain that I had all plans formed for the gulf passage, but he waved me away. "Deep water," he said; "you take a sail on deep water." One thing I've noticed about people who have traveled great distances; they seem to think their going has exhausted the subject. They have nothing to tell you about it. As to me, here I am just to Gravette and have turned out a paragraph.

We took our hotel dinner late, as Morton wanted to sit and smell it from the office till he had worked up an appetite worthy of the price. It was a good scheme for the appetite, but when we went in things were cold and gelatined. After dinner (that's enough to say about it) we went to the station to buy round-trip tickets. The agent wasn't there, of course, and while we waited one of the natives, a boy, called "John," espied my friend Jebly in his tricycle. He saw at once that Jebly couldn't walk, and that invested him with immense interest. He came and stood in front of him, and, never discouraged by reproof or discomposed by silence, sought to fathom my friend's personal history to the depths. When Jebly at last refused further details, it was still enough to John simply to look. He did not ask any questions about the tricycle, because he realized that that was something quite beyond his comprehension as to its management. One of John's legs was bare, the other insecurely covered; but he was clothed by a curiosity that ought to keep him warm in winter. Occasionally a boy would come up with "Hello, John!" John's invariable reply was, "You git out of here!" If the boy insisted upon friendly greeting, John would snatch up a handful of gravel and cast it at his would-be companion. I do not know whether he was naturally unsociable, or simply wanted to have Jebly all to himself. At last the agent came and let us have tickets at $85 each.

We were determined not to return to the hotel and hear old Knows-It-All talk to us about "deep water," so we hunted for an open-air nook. We found a wooded stretch of grass along the railroad track and having eluded John, repaired thither. It is a delightfully warm afternoon; and though too early for young leaves to be of much service as shade, the old leaves are clinging to the branches above our heads in heavy clusters. Wonder how the young leaves are going to have a chance while these tough old fellows hold on to their job? We do things differently in the preaching-line. Morton is lying upon his back, fast asleep. Jebly is out of his new-patent tricycle, but cannot sleep for his fountain-pen. He never carried a fountain pen before. It is a great bother to him. The head of it fastens to his vest pocket, but the ink-well is often escaping and getting upside down. In lying upon the grass, he has to hold his pen perpendicular. When he gets the rest of him rested, he sits up to rest his arm. He makes a good many notes. At first his pen won't write, then it starts in to make up for lost time and drowns the first words in a sea of black ink. He paid a dollar for this trouble, but he thinks maybe he will lose it. Evening wears on. Not far away a man and woman are putting in their garden, while through a mass of tender green, pink, purple and red, an old homelike-looking house shows its corners. Wonder what that man and woman would say if they knew we were going to Old Mexico? The sun vanishes; a bright moon takes its place. We eat a lunch brought from home, as we sit in our "Shady Park." The moonbeams silver our faces and the hard-boiled eggs impartially. To the station; and at 8:30 comes our train to take us to Texarkana. It has only two minutes to wait, and the express agent doen't want to carry the tricycle. No time for argument, so we use money. Chair car; we traverse Arkansas, but too dark to see anything of it. Go to sleep, the rush of the train seeming to anticipate the lapping waves of the Gulf.

March 23. Reach Texarkana at 7:30 and will have to wait here till noon for our next train. The line dividing Texas and Arkansas runs through the town, and the postoffice is built half on one side, half on the other. It is a fine building, but if I lived here and cared anything about the place, I'd be one to go down and help have the depot cleaned up. It is very dirty and looks no worse than it smells. Went down town to buy things to eat. There is a certain kind of suspender that Morton is looking for, and whenever he finds time on his hands, he goes in a store and asks about it. They never have the kind he describes. I think he dreamed about it, but he says he had one, once. By eleven we are all pretty hungry, so go to the other depot and spread out our bananas, pickles, etc., on a truck where the wind blows the dust upon us, and the flies show that we have crossed the fly-line, going south. After eating as long as we could, I discovered the Y. M. C. A. building near at hand. The rooms are all upstairs, but the asphalt walk runs under the first story to a cosy nook, open to the air save for one basement wall and the ceiling. Here Jebly could run on his tricycle and we found a settee against the wall, with a pretty view of a grass lawn edging the railroad. It was the hour for the boys to go upstairs to the gymnasium, and their way took them by our settee. As soon as each caught sight of Jebly's tricycle, their faces would change to excited interest. They could not see how it was guided, that was their principal trouble. They would come briskly round the corner, see the tricycle with its two hand-levers, and no guider in sight, fall into a slow walk, and go begrudgingly upstairs looking back over their shoulders. The procession of boys never gave out for lack of material. Morton suggested that all Texarkana boys were gymnasts; but, in my opinion, as soon as the boys reached the upper floor they came down on the other side of the building, and thus toured us again and again.

A little after noon the train picked us up for Marshall, Texas. We had a run of about two hours, and I had never seen Texas before, so I felt it my duty to learn how it looked; but Morton insisted upon all of us shaving ourselves upon the car. He said he had done it, and Jebly and I didn't want to seem afraid, so we went to the toilet room and got out our razors. Morton cut himself right away, which didn't encourage us. The train was pretty fast and rocked like a boat on the gulf. The secret of it is not to steady yourself against anything, but let your arm go as your head does. That was what Morton was explaining as he cut himself. Such hurried and troubled glances as I got of Texas between stropping and lathering and striking at my face with the blade showed four counties of pine trees, with just a few other trees to show they could grow. When we reached Marshall I was about half shaved, but I'd managed not to cut myself. I went at once to a barber and gave him 15 cents to do the heavy work on the underbrush.

We were at Marshall four hours. It seems distinctly a Southern town. The population is 12,000. I think about 1,000 are white. You see daintily-dressed little children in charge of black women, who tell them stories they can't understand for the delight of the surrounding circle of blacks. I told a man I used to live near Kansas City, and said: "Does that seem up North to you people?" He answered with cold irony: "Well, I reckon we do consider it up North!" I could see at once that I was outclassed with the "Yankees." At the station were two sure-enough Mexicans and a Mexican dog. They seemed an outpost of the land we were going to invade. They had tamales to sell, the real, small, good kind that you get two dozen for a quarter, and eat the last bite. They were different from any I had ever eaten before. I suppose those sold "up North" are too clean to be original Mexican. While waiting for our train I read upon the station wall. "Population in 1910 will be 20,000." This is a more cheerful outlook than the Quincy man's prediction of the world coming to an end. Also, "Largest bearing orchard in the world." I felt like writing under that, "Except in Arkansas." If there is anything the Ozarks of Arkansas has it is orchards. We hardly know, at Bentonville, that there are orchards outside the state. I'd like to see that "largest bearing orchard in the world" at Marshall, Texas. Why hasn't anybody ever heard of it? The voices of the people here are more southern than at home. It is not so much in the pronunciation as in the flow of the tone. For instance, you can't spell it to describe it. They say, "Yes, sir," and not "Yaas, suh." But the way they say "Yes, sir," distinguishes them at once as different from Missouri people or northern Arkansas people. Some superbly dressed ladies here, but I don't see any with children; the children are in charge of negroes. The mothers seem to prefer to be with dogs. Here's our train. No more change of cars until we reach New Orleans. And then ho! for the steamer at the dock and a four days' sail with skippers who say, "Aye, aye, sir!" and who man the hawsers and climb the rigging and do other odd things.

Animal Sentinels.

It is a fact well known to naturalists that many animals appoint one or more of their number as sentinels to guard against surprise while the rest are asleep, or feeding, or at play. Among the animals—using the word in its widest sense—that are thus prudent may be named the following: Wasps, ants, chamois and other antelopes, prairie-dogs, wild horses, rooks, swans, Australian cockatoos, zebras, quails, certain monkeys, flamingoes, New Zealand silver eyes, shogs and other birds, seals, African wild cattle guanacoes and elephants.—British Weekly.

The Robin Tells Her Story.

A Detroit contractor, who evidently loves birds, stopped the building of a house last week for the sake of a mother robin.

Early in the spring the robins built their nest in a niche of one of the unfinished windows and started housekeeping. They made no fuss about it, and in return for the cheer of their song the workmen left them undisturbed.

The nest went undiscovered until a week ago, when the progress of the work carried the men back near the window the robins had chosen for their home. Only one robin fluttered about them, and he was in a continual state of excitement, flitting frantically about the heads of the men nearest the window. A few days ago he was joined by his mate, and the two kept up an angry song of protest about the heads of the men, who couldn't imagine what it was all about.

And then happened along the contractor for the building, who loves birds. He heard the note of fear and alarm in the bird's chirping, and looked for the nest. There were two tiny eggs of a beautiful blue, and he comprehended all that they meant to the fearful robins. He tried to make the birds understand that no harm was meant them. He warned his men. And then, when it seemed that the mother robin was fretting her life away, he told his men to stop work. No more will be done near the robin's nest for three weeks. By that time, the big contractor says—and he knows birds and is their friend—the little eggs will have broken and the mother robin will be happy with her young.

LIFE IN THE LOOM.

CHILDREN of yesterday, heirs of to-morrow,
What are you weaving? labor and sorrow?
Look to your loom again, faster and faster
Fly the great shuttles prepared by the Master.
There's life in the loom!
Room for it, room!

Children of yesterday, heirs of to-morrow,
Lighten the labor, and sweeten the sorrow,
Now while the shuttles fly faster and faster,
Up and be doing the work with the Master.
He stands at the loom!
Room for Him, room!

Children of yesterday, heirs of to-morrow,
Look at your fabric of labor and sorrow;
Seamy and dark with despair and disaster,
Turn it, and lo! the design of the Master!
The Lord's at the loom!
Room for Him, room!

—"The Open Church for the Unchurched," by J. E. McCulloch, with an introduction by Bishop E. R. Hendrix, $1 net. This is in its second edition and is an up-to-date discussion of the sociology of the Church. It contains data and suggestions most helpful to an understanding of these conditions and the preparation of convention addresses.

—"Mamma," said little Elise, "do men ever go to heaven?"

"Why, of course, my dear. What makes you ask?"

"Because I never see any pictures of angels with whiskers."

"Well," said the mother, thoughtfully, "some men do go to heaven, but they get there by a close shave."

—Gipsy Smith is one of the most picturesque evangelists now on the firing line. We have his autobiography with Introductions by Alexander MacLaren and G. Campbell Morgan, $1. It is a fascinating story that tells of the conversion of the gipsy lad and his enduement with such wonderful power from on high for the conversion of souls.

WHAT FRIENDS ARE SAYING.

Enclosed find $4.50 for CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST account. Miss Elizabeth Roberts, aged 87 years, has been a constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST since the first year of publication.—N. J. Tillery, Chillicothe, Mo.

We have read, and are reading, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from its beginning, at Chillicothe, Mo. It is getting better every week. It is growing in grace and a knowledge "of the truth" of the Bible.—N. A. Walker, minister, St. Elmo, Ill.

Enclosed find $6 for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. My father has taken it for over 40 years; he has not been able to go to church for 37 years and gets a good sermon from it every week; he could not do without it.—C. S. Braden, Eagle Lake, Minn.

We have no Christian church in our community. I am a Disciple teaching in a Presbyterian school. As you see, we are making progress toward a union. Thirty years ago a Presbyterian church would have closed its doors before permitting a Disciple to teach in its school. I find your Bible Teacher's Quarterly very helpful.—W. W. Jones, Worthington, Pa.

Enclosed find $1.50 for another year of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It is a great comfort and help to me as my health does not permit my going to church. May you long live to send this messenger of cheer and comfort to the afflicted.—Nancy J. Greenwell.

Some of our people heard Brother Garrison at Albion, Ill., last year, and it made a lasting impression. He showed a Christ-like spirit when cutting things were said. That is what we need. May God's blessing go with his CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It makes us better to read his letters and his paper.—Ellen Leach.

Edersheim's "Bible History" just received. Is fine. Every preacher ought to have it. Can you not make us a special price on his "Customs of the Jewish People?"—A. N. Glover (minister), Orange, Cal.

How to Have a Working Church

By George L. Bush

The problems of the twentieth century preacher are manifold and confessedly difficult. The pulpit must continue to be his throne, but the churches have decreed that those who reign on Sunday must also serve well through the week. The minister no longer dares count Sunday for a week, or less than twenty-four hours for a day. The duties of the pastorate press upon him daily and hourly, and he must give himself unreservedly to his ministry. This work is so great and the burdens are so heavy that one should hesitate about entering the ministry, unless he can say with Paul, "for necessity is laid upon me; for woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel." Those possessed by this spirit and with such a passion for souls will succeed. But even these choice spirits will fail of the largest measure of success unless they can secure the hearty co-operation of those whom they serve. This fact leads us to the consideration of our theme. With an earnest desire to help in the solution of this problem, the following suggestions are modestly offered:

1. A working pastor.—The pastorate is no place for a lazy man. Any one seeking an easy task and a comfortable berth would make a grave mistake in entering the ministry. Dr. Cuyler says: "An indolent pastor is apt to have an indolent congregation. If he is found smoking on his lounge or dwadling away his time over light literature; if he is seen oftener out driving for pleasure or sauntering in book stores and picture galleries, than he is in visiting his flock, then his people will soon hold him cheap and rightly conclude that they have a lazy minister." The organization of a modern congregation upon a working basis, the directing of its manifold agencies, with sermonizing, visiting, funerals, weddings and the extras that come upon him, fill the preacher's life brimful every day. Phone rings in the evening call to his remembrance duties undone, and in his dreams come visions of Macedonian calls to an ever-enlarging and fuller service. In the olden times the organization was very simple, the services few, and the preacher's duties limited. He preached on Sundays, held a few meetings and debates, buried the dead, and married lovers. He found time to manage a farm, run a store, teach school, edit a paper, or practice medicine. But times have changed and woe betides him who is not abreast the times! Church work has developed into a science, and the church is perhaps the most highly organized institution in human society. The minister is a man of affairs, knows well his field, is master of every detail of the work, meets his daily duties more than half way, and dispatches his Master's business promptly and heartily. To meet these demands he must be earnest and energetic, enthusiastic and optimistic, "instant in season, out of season, always abounding in the work of the Lord." It is better for him to wear out than to rust out. His members may kindly censure him for doing too much, but never have cause to murmur about his doing too little. It would be well if more of us possessed the untiring energy of our angels of commerce and the pleasing persistence of life insurance agents.

Cuyler also says: "Know the geography of your parish thoroughly, and, if possible, know every member of every family, especially the poor and humble families. Don't have any running places or favorite resorts, and don't let any one in the congregation own you." Ministerial loafing is indefensible from any standpoint, being criminal both in the wanton waste of time, and in the influence of a bad example. In the days of Jesus busy men were called to follow him. When the members gain the impression that the preacher is owned by a particular family or a certain clique, they are apt to leave him to depend upon his pets for co-operation in his work. It has been said of one, now and then, "He is a sisters' man and poor company for men." The true pastor is the shepherd of all the flock. He will not wear any man's collar, nor call any one lord, save Jesus Christ.

The members should be given information as to the condition and needs of the local, state, national and world fields. The pulpit must be eyes and ears to the pew. The pastor must be a fire-kindler as well as a fire-fighter. In his pastoral rounds he should carry a bellows as well as a hose, and while he seeks to put out the fires of worldliness and sin, also strive mightily to fan into a flame the slumbering embers of an earlier passion for righteousness. Those who are prompt in their attendance upon the services and diligent in service should be commended, while the lukewarm and negligent should be kindly chided. The bugle will be needed in calling to service, and the crook must sometimes fall upon the stragglers. If the hearts of the people be first won, they will bear reproof given in the right spirit. But scolding is a failure; don't become a church scold, unless you are seeking the ministerial dead line!

2. A well-disciplined and wisely directed membership.—It is unwise for the minister to try to do the work of from 100 to 1,000 members. It were better not to do what they can be induced to do. Congregations are easily spoiled by pastors whose misapplied zeal leads them to try to do everything. Such a course fails to develop the membership and when they are shepherdless the work comes to a standstill. There is much latent power in the church and many idle talents. Some men are peculiarly gifted in the art of discerning talents and possess rare tact in assigning tasks. It is an art to know how to set people to work and keep them at it. Some eloquent pulpiteers have inactive churches, while others of only average pulpit ability have wide-a-wake and aggressive congregations. The live pastor faces the problem of awaking the average church to a realization of its mission, and setting its members to work with heart and soul. He must face it wisely, tactfully, patiently and vigorously! Some of the members may be assigned to our statistical secretary, as he is the only man among us able to use them. When there is a call for service, they are silent; when a missionary offering comes upon the church they are absent. There are others whose attendance is irregular and their service uncertain and spasmodic. Some are dyspeptic, caused by "high society" and fast living. "They are bilious and disappointed, hopeless and useless, except as they become a means of grace to the pastor and other workers, by their continual growling and fault-finding." These are well calculated to make the preacher nervous and keep him apprehensive of his wife's health. The only known remedy for such cases is religious activity. Not the popular "rest cure," but the divine work cure. The lamented J. B. Sweeney divided his members into "the workers, the shirkers and the jerkers." Let me suggest the children, the boarders and the visitors. It will be easy to distinguish these classes. The problem is, how to have grace and gumption to get your boarders married into the family and your visitors naturalized as citizens of the Kingdom?

To harmonize all of these divers elements, to heal these spiritual maladies, to enlist and drill this volunteer army, to enthuse and imbue it with the spirit and passion of our Captain, requires generalship of a high order. Every field has its peculiar difficulties, and as a rule one is not so much harder than another.

Undenominational Colleges.

Mr. Carnegie's pension fund for superannuated and retired college professors is for the benefit only of professors in undenominational colleges. Perhaps in this way Mr. Carnegie wishes to express his unfavorable opinion of denominational education, and perhaps he wishes to go even farther than that and bring some pressure to bear on those colleges which are denominational to cause them to undenominationalize themselves. At any rate, the limitation which he has placed upon this worthy benefaction has caused considerable searching of heart to determine just what colleges are denominational, and why. Brown University, for example, has been refused assistance on the ground that it is a Baptist institution, since its charter requires that the president of the university and a majority of its trustees shall be members of that denomination. The suggestion that an act of the legislature be secured to remove this specification from the charter has met with overwhelming opposition from the alumni. We do not propose to discuss at present the desirability, from the standpoint of the college, of retaining a formal connection with the denomination which established it, or the advantage, from the standpoint of the denomination, of retaining such control over the colleges which it has founded. But two things do occur to us in this connection. The first is that the answer to the question ought not to be influenced materially by Mr. Carnegie's opinion or by the circumstance that he has placed such a limit to the distribution of his pension fund. The question should be decided on its merits, even if worthy pensioners have to wait for some other source of pension money to be discovered. The other is that it is difficult to determine in any satisfactory and convincing way just what colleges are denominational. As a matter of fact, Brown University is not Baptist in any sense that should be obnoxious to Mr. Carnegie or any one else. A true university can not be denominational, no matter what the provisions of its charter may be regarding the faith of its president and the majority of its board of trustees. Harvard is not Unitarian, Yale is not Congregational, the University of Chicago is not Baptist, Columbia is not Episcopalian. A great university is not the possession of a denomination, but its contribution to education. On the other hand, a college can be thoroughly, even narrowly, denominational and yet have no such limitation in its charter. This is actually the case with most of the colleges which are universally recognized as denominational colleges. Many colleges of this type are already receiving aid from Mr. Carnegie's pension fund. The educational experts who are in charge of the administration of that fund are guilty of the utmost superficiality and the grossest ignorance of the true conditions if they do not see that denominational and undenominational institutions can not be distinguished by any process so simple as merely reading the charter and noting whether or not the name of any particular denomination is mentioned therein.

Tariff Revision.

The Republicans are fond of saying that the tariff must be revised by its friends—and we are its friends. The Democrats, as represented, for example, by Judge Harmon, say that the tariff must be revised by the friends of the people—and we are the friends of the people. But whichever party is to do it, every one admits that the thing must be done and it seems a rational and equitable compromise between the two claims quoted above to say that the tariff should be revised by the friends of tariff revision,—not by those who really desire tariff destruction, and not by those who would greatly prefer to stand pat and are only whipped to the task of revision by the fear of public indignation if they longer refuse.

The Protection of Scenery.

The English House of Commons has almost unanimously passed a bill "for the protection of natural scenery," the chief purpose of which is to make an effort to prevent the defacement of the landscape by billboards and other advertising nuisances. This is in addition to local regulations which are being adopted by many of the cities. We need a similar movement in this country. One likes to enjoy the scenery along the railroads and even the impressive man-made scenery of well-built city streets without being confronted at every turn by insistant advice as to what sort of talcum powder one should use, what sort of cigars one should smoke, and where one should purchase one's wearing apparel. The matter could be regulated either by limitation of the size and position of billboards, or by taxing them, or both.

Airship to the Pole.

Walter Wellman's expedition, which hopes to reach the North Pole by airship, has been delayed somewhat in starting and is now expected to get away from Tromsoe, Norway, about the end of July. The plan is to sail to Spitzbergen, where necessary buildings for a base of supplies have already been erected, and to make the journey from that point to the pole by airship. The distance is something less than a thousand miles. The airship, which is a cigar-shaped balloon with a steel-framed car beneath and a pair of propellers run by a seventy-horse power gasoline engine, has a lifting power of nearly ten tons and will carry, besides the passengers and equipment, enough provisions for ten months and enough fuel to propel the vessel four thousand miles under normal conditions. The whole program, as Mr. Wellman outlines it, seems very plausible, but after all the factor of luck is a large one in aerial navigation in polar regions. There is such a thing as luck. For a definition, luck is the helping or hindering influence of circumstances which could not have been foreseen or provided for. Storms may come. From personal experience the writer knows that the wind sometimes blows in the vicinity of Spitzbergen, and when it does it is very likely to have a velocity against which an airship would make very little headway. On the other hand, it stands to reason, according to the law of averages and the mathematical theory of probabilities, that if people keep on trying to reach the pole, some one will after a while hit upon a fortunate combination of circumstances which will carry him to the goal—and perhaps bring him back.

A Case of Conspiracy.

The Christian Science church in Boston got involved in a labor dispute which has issued an interesting legal decision. When their new building was being erected, the contractors happened to employ a non-union carpenter, with the result that all the others quit. Fearing an annoying delay in the completion of the building, the directors of the church urged the discharge of the non-union man and promised to get him another job. But the contractor, interested now in winning the fight on the open-shop principle, refused to discharge him. The directors of the church declared the contract forfeited and ejected the contractor's workmen from the premises. The contractor got an injunction, finished the work within the time agreed upon in the contract and then sued for damages for the interruption of his work and the ejection of his men. It has been held that the directors of the church and the union were guilty of conspiracy resulting in a breach of contract without any just or lawful provocation, and the Massachusetts Supreme Court sustains this decision.

Mining Investments.

Mining is as much a legitimate business as farming. Probably it is as safe for those who go into it with the same knowledge of conditions and processes. Buying stock in a mine which is already shipping ore and paying dividends out of its real earnings, is a legitimate investment. Buying stock in a mining company which has properties which, on careful examination, show good prospects, is an interesting speculation. Buying superlatively advertised stock in companies about which you know nothing except what they themselves tell you and about whose properties you know only what the advertisements reveal, is sheer extravagance. The first class of investment usually yields a profit at about the same rate as good bank stock or a mortgage loan on good city real estate. The second presents an honest possibility of very large returns, balanced by a decided probability of no returns. The third leaves the "investor" in possession of a handsomely engraved work of art known as a stock certificate, and the bitter-sweet memory of a few glad but fleeting weeks when he revelled in the belief that he was about to be rich. If the anticipation of good fortune is itself a genuine pleasure, then the purchaser of wild-cat mining stock does not get absolutely no value for his money. He invests in a package of pleasant anticipations. These are worth something, but they are scarcely worth the price that is paid. It is like paying a maple-syrup price for corn syrup. The thing you get is really good stuff, only it is not what you pay for. It would afford great and needed protection to the easy public, if by some broader application of the pure food law, the purveyors of mining stocks of the type referred to could be compelled to label the goods correctly: "Baseless anticipations of affluence. Keep in a cool dry place and use within three months."

Editorial

Shall We Preach First Principles?

A correspondent asks if we have not reached the point where we can dispense with the preaching of first principles. We suspect the writer of that inquiry has been surfeited with a certain kind of preaching with which we are all familiar, in which the preacher dealt with such subjects as faith, repentance and baptism in a polemical spirit, and often in a spirit bordering on the legalistic. Of that sort of preaching we have quite enough and it might well be discontinued. But let no one suppose that the time has come or ever will come in this gospel age, when the preaching of the simple gospel of Christ, with its terms of salvation, can ever be dispensed with. There will always be those who need to be taught the way of life and salvation, in its simplest elements and conditions of appropriation. So long as this need exists it must be supplied.

The same question is sometimes raised in reference to what is called doctrinal preaching in general—the setting forth of the position held by us as religious reformers;—should that be discontinued? Yes, provided everybody understands and accepts the principles for which we plead, or, provided we are convinced that these principles are not true, or are not sufficiently important to justify us in disturbing the present religious status quo. We should say, however, that neither of these conditions exists. Many people have not yet heard that there is such a religious movement as that which we advocate, and many who have heard of it have an entire misconception of its aim and its principles. So far from having lost faith in the position we occupy, or in its value to the world, there never was a deeper conviction on the part of its advocates that this movement is of God and that it stands related, in a very vital way, to the supreme need of the Church in our time.

What is needed, then, is not a discontinuance of the preaching of first principles, but a fresh and deeper apprehension of the spiritual content and significance of these first truths, as they exist in our own religious experience, lest we present them in a mechanical, legalistic way, without vitality and power. Paul preached justification by faith with tremendous power, because he had experienced the efficacy of the gospel in accomplishing what the law could not do. His preaching was that perfect blending of "truth and personality" which Phillips Brooks declared to be the only effective preaching. We have often felt, in listening to sermons on first principles, that the truths presented needed to be revitalized in the mind and heart of the preacher. Our fathers preached them with great power because they were freshly apprehended and experimentally tested in their own lives. If we only echo the things they preached, without having passed them through the alembic of our own brain and heart and tested them in our religious experience they will be lacking in the power to produce spiritual results.

The same thing is true in reference to the presentation of the plea we are making for the union of God's people on the basis on which it was originally one—faith in Christ and loyalty to him. We may present it as a theory with hard and fast lines and in a perfunctory or pugilistic way, so as to nullify its influence upon those who hear. We have all heard it so presented. The plea has suffered far more from its professed advocates than from its avowed opponents. This sort of advocacy ought to cease, and the sooner the better. But in every community there is needed, occasionally, a strong, clear, presentation of the principles for which we stand and the end we are seeking to accomplish, conceived in a spirit of love for all men, and uttered with a sincere desire to promote the closer unity of all who love Christ. From the pulpit and in our journals and tracts we should keep before the people the need of a united Christendom, and the broad, simple basis on which alone such union is possible. But in both sermon and literature, let us see to it that the spirit of our advocacy comports with the nature of the cause we advocate.

"An Interesting Deliverance."

"The Baptist Argus" of June 27, under the above subtitle, copies the substance of our editorial entitled, "A Big Difference," for which it has our thanks, and appends to it the following answer:

> It is an interesting distinction that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST makes between the actual, complete regeneration effected by the Holy Spirit, and the "formal acquittal, an assurance of forgiveness," had in baptism. We wish THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST had said "symbolical" acquittal, instead of "formal" acquittal. We believe that a "symbolical" remission of sins is commanded by the New Testament and that immersion is necessary to that end. We recall President Mullins' happy statement, a contribution, in fact, to this subject. "There is no remission of sins without baptism—that is, no ceremonial remission." We would be glad to know if THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST considers "symbolical" or "ceremonial" as interchangeable with "formal."
> The editor of the "Argus" holds as one of his richest possessions the memory of the blissful experience which came to him in connection with his baptism. He is assured that several years previous to that outward act his soul has been regenerated by the Holy Spirit, but he can sing heartily with the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, whom he delights to honor and love: "How happy are they who their Savior obey." It was far from us to say that baptism has no relation whatever to the remission of sins, but that it has no procuring relation.
> That baptism is "the answer of a good conscience," that it effects a "symbolical remission," that it may give an additional assurance of the favor of God, we have no disposition to question, but rather affirm. Some Baptists, reacting from the extreme school of our Disciple brethren and others, have not given to baptism its full significance. Baptism is a momentous act. While we are jealous to preserve it from being held as having any procuring relation to conversion, regeneration, we rejoice to magnify it for all Jesus Christ gave to it to do. Nor had we any idea of charging THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with giving any such procuring value to baptism. We wish our readers to learn to keep always in mind that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST represents the theology of the best school of the Disciples.

We would like for our esteemed contemporary to see clearly that the distinction which we made, in the article commented upon, between the work accomplished in man by the Holy Spirit, through faith, which may be described as a spiritual quickening and renewal, and the act of forgiveness in the mind of God because of this inward change, is not only an "interesting distinction" but a New Testament distinction. The passages we quoted, which might have been multiplied, seem to us clearly to teach such distinction, and the failure to recognize it produces confusion of thought. Our neighbor wishes we had said "symbolical acquittal," instead of "formal." We believe in the symbolism of baptism, but we understand that it symbolizes Christ's burial and resurrection from the dead, and the believer's death to sin and his resurrection to newness of life. It does not, as we see it, symbolize forgiveness, but that spiritual renewal which makes forgiveness possible. We used the word "formal" because it expresses a scriptural thought. Christianity has its form as well as its spirit. Paul speaks of the "form of doctrine" to which the brethren in Rome had become obedient. That certainly includes baptism if it does not specifically refer to it. Then there is the "form of godliness" which may exist without "the power." By "formal acquital" we meant an acquital put into such form as would appeal to the understanding of obedient believers, and be to them an assurance of the blotting out of past sins. As to the term "ceremonial" it was the one word in President Mullins' able statement of the subject that we did not like. It seems to us to be an Old Testament idea, and not harmonious with the New Testament. We believe that when Peter said that baptism is "not the washing away of the filth of the flesh," he meant that it is no mere ceremony, like those of the Old Testament, but an act of faith on the part of the believer, submitting himself to God in quest of a "good conscience." We are inclined to think, however, that what President Mullins meant by the use of "ceremonial," is very much the same thing as we mean by the use of the term "formal." The latter seems to us, however, the proper antithesis with spiritual and vital.

We are glad that the editor of "The Argus" agrees with us substantially in our contention that baptism is related to a most delightful inward experience, namely, that of "an additional assurance of the favor of God," as his own experience attests. There was no need, however, that "several years" should have intervened between his change of mind and heart, by the Holy Spirit, and his overt act of surrender to Christ in the ordinance of baptism. Was not that delay the result of a misconception on the part of his teachers, as to the place which baptism holds in the New Testament plan of evangelization? We most heartily agree with the editor of "The Argus" that the relation which baptism sustains to remission of sins is not a "procuring relation." Jesus Christ and him crucified is alone the procuring and meritorious cause of our salvation. No one among us dissents from that proposition. Baptism, when it is the act of a believing penitent—and nothing else is baptism—is the symbolic declaration of this fact, and because it is associated with the divine promise it is also God's formal declaration of forgiveness. It is, therefore, as "The Argus" rightly says, "a momentous act."

While we are grateful to "The Argus" for recognizing in The Christian-Evangelist a representative of "the theology of the best school of Disciples," we are glad to say to it, that, on this subject, we believe it represents the real position occupied by the Disciples of Christ, and that there are very few among us, if any, who would dissent from our statements.

Notes and Comments.

A correspondent of "The Outlook," having asked Lyman Abbott to explain what he means by the divinity of Jesus Christ, Dr. Abbott answers in part thus:

> Do I worship Jesus Christ? I might almost say I worship only him. All my thoughts of God are derived through him; all my experience of God grows out of my faith in him. What is his metaphysical relation to the Infinite and Eternal Spirit I do not know. The question does not greatly interest me. To me he is the Spirit of Humanity whom the Positivist reveres, the Power not ourselves whom the literary agnostic reveres, the Infinite and Eternal Energy whom the scientific agnostic reveres, the Inner Light whom the Friends revere, the Jehovah whom the Jews revere, and the Holy Spirit whom the Trinitarians revere.

This is very good so far as it goes, but we should be inclined to add to it, "To me he is the Christ, the Son of the living God, the eternal Word, who became flesh and dwelt among us, whom his apostles and personal followers revered and worshiped."

Following the above quotation Dr. Abbott adds this further elaboration of his view:

> Perhaps it would be more accurate to say that he is the supreme historical manifestation of this ever-present Life and Light of man; that he is, to use John's expression, "that which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life;" that he is so much of the Infinite and Eternal as can be seen in a human experience—the invisible moisture of the atmosphere become a visible cloud, the invisible ether become a visible sunlight, the Infinite Spirit of Truth and Love emerging in one perfect human life.

No doubt Christ is greater than any thought we can have of him. It is best, however, that we adhere strictly to his own expressions, defining his relation to the Father, and to the Holy Spirit, and to humanity. It is through him, as Dr. Abbott says, that we get our highest and truest ideas of God. This view of Christ must always put him to the front in any expression of our faith.

George Clark Peck, in "The Epworth Herald," in defining "What a Methodist Believes In," says:

> First, in God of course! Next, he ought to believe in himself. Then in his neighbors. Not too far down the list, a Methodist ought to believe in his Church. Finally, a genuine Methodist ought not to quit "believing" until he believes in the Organized Benevolences by which the local church projects itself into the larger world around.

It is not to be understood, of course, that the writer does not think that a Methodist ought to believe in Jesus Christ because he is omitted from the above list of things to be believed in, but it is characteristic, nevertheless, of this great religious organization that is so full of activity, that a representative man of that body, in a statement of what a Methodist believes should give prominence to the organized benevolences of the church, rather than to the New Testament confession of faith—the Messiahship and divinity of Jesus Christ.

Professor Hugo Munsterberg, of Harvard University, one of the most able and eminent of living psychologists, has been spending some time in Boise, Idaho, studying Orchard as a psychological problem. He asserts his belief in the sanity of the versatile assassin, but has not yet made public any further conclusions.

Certain English scientists—followers, let us hope, of science falsely so-called—have declared that the strawberry is a most deleterious fruit because it contains an acid which tends to make the eater morose and irritable. The addition of cream does not counteract this baneful effect. It is not stated whether it is any less depressing in the form of the toothsome short-cake. Anyway, it was very considerate of them not to publish this opinion until the strawberry season was nearly over. It will be forgotten long before next year. If any one has a word to say against watermelon, let him wait a few weeks.

We have something to learn. The Primitive Methodists of England have been celebrating the close of the first century of their church life. Among the features of the centennial was a pilgrimage to Mow Hill. Here Hugh Bourne tried a modification of the old field preaching and camp-meetings held with such success in America in 1807. The entire day was devoted to praying and preaching at Mow "Cop." Four stands of stones heaped up for the occasion were used simultaneously, and thus began the cycle of English camp-meetings, which did so much for the English people and led to the organization of the Primitive Methodist Church, which has always been an evangelistic body. It has a present membership of over 200,000, with 1,100 ministers and 16,000 local preachers.

The Disciples of Christ are approaching their centennial and they number six times as many members in their churches as do the Primitive Methodists who are, too, for the most part of the common people. But these are a spiritually-minded people loving the souls of men and their church. They have had as one centennial aim the raising of a million dollars, over and above all their other collections, as a thank-offering fund. Recently, at Leicester, there was a proposal to raise $45,000 in that one town. Those present responded with such enthusiasm and liberality that at the close of the meeting it was announced that the offerings, together with the sums already pledged by the churches, amounted to $1,350,000. We wonder what Missouri Disciples, in numbers about the same as the Primitive Methodists, will do for our Centennial. And if all the states were to give proportionally, with what an offering would we go up to Pittsburg!

The season is here when many men of the pulpit and pew turn from their ordinary duties in church to a different environment. There is a time for all things except to forget that God is where he was. "A Christian is the highest style of man"—whether at the seaside, in the mountains, at the summer resort or at home. But the Christian is the man who acts on the belief that "godliness is stronger than all."

A sign of the times comes from India. Doctor Charles Cuthbert Hall has returned from his second visit there to deliver lectures on the Barrows-Haskell foundation. One of the most significant observations resulting from this last visit is that it is no longer correct to speak of the ethnic religions of the East as stereotyped and inflexible. The non-Christian cults are endeavoring to adapt themselves by various accommodations and abstruse apologies to modern thought. But Dr. Hall found a great intellectual turning to Christianity throughout the Orient, and to us one of the most interesting of his experiences is significant. A powerful native prince asked for a list of English books which give not a sectarian but a comprehensive view of the Christian religion. Leaven of this kind reaching men of the type of Dr. Hall will have its reflex influence in religion at home. Sectarianism has been getting some hard blows, but it is as firmly entrenched in some places in America as is the caste system in India. But a day is coming when both will be broken.

Pentwater Musings.

Time, the glorious Fourth. Place, "The Pioneer" cottage in Garrison Park, Pentwater, Mich. Old Glory, suspended from the upper part of the veranda, floats gracefully in the breeze that comes straight over Lake Michigan, the roar of whose waves is a grand diapason in honor of the day. Over in the village across the lake the clans are gathering for an old-fashioned Fourth, and out on the great lake excursion boats are plying back and forth, crowded with sight-seers from the inland region. Over here in the Park there is nothing to mark the day we celebrate except the flag that waves amid the branches of the hemlocks, and the noise of a few firecrackers which the junior member of the family felt bound to discharge in honor of the day. It is good to be amid these quiet scenes even on our country's birthday, for patriotism need not exhaust itself in noise and tumult. If the whole American people could pause today from their noisy celebrations, to think over the problems of our country, quietly and thoughtfully, it would be well for the nation. Let us be thankful that the period of spread-eagle oratory and bravado which marked the earlier stage of our national development, has passed away. The public speakers to-day will not devote their whole time to telling their audiences how great we are and how easily we could whip the whole world, but will refer to our greatness as a nation only to accentuate our responsibilities and to point out the perils which confront us. It is a sign of real greatness when a nation, or a religious movement, instead of boasting of its numbers or wealth, accepts these as responsibilities and calmly and bravely faces its weaknesses and failures, and seeks to remedy them.

What our nation needs in order to its permanent prosperity is just what the individual sinner needs who has been improvident, forgetful of God, absorbed in material aims and pursuits and unmindful of his obligations Godward and manward, viz: repentance, followed by turning away from its sins and seeking to "do justly, to love mercy and to walk humbly before God." Any theory of government reform that stops short of this is superficial and inadequate. The nation that forsakes righteousness and justice will be damned. No amount of wealth, or prestige, no theory of political economy, no army and navy, however strong, no magnificence or material domain, can save it from overthrow and utter ruin. This is the gospel that our country needs to-day. We are in infinite danger of provoking the wrath of God against us for our national and individual sins, and all the more so, because of the marvelous blessings and benefits we have received from his hand. Let us not deceive ourselves. God is not mocked. What a nation sows it must reap. Except we repent we shall all likewise perish. The most hopeful sign in all our national sky to-day is the evidence of a moral awakening and of a determination on the part of the people and their leaders to bring to justice those who have been lowering our national ideals, and trampling under their feet the laws of the country and the rights of the people.

Yes, we are at Pentwater, arriving here, after a very pleasant trip, on the evening of the second instant, another memorable day in our domestic annals. Thirty-nine years ago, a Missouri boy and an Illinois girl, having graduated at the same college and belonging to the same church, and having a mutual liking for each other, saw no reason why they should not enter into a life-partnership, and did so. Neither of them has ever acknowledged any regret that the partnership was formed. But that by the way. As we were saying, we arrived on the evening of the second, and on the morning of the third we took possession of "The Pioneer" cottage which had been opened by the care-taker and was ready for our reception. In a few hours a visitor could not have told but what we had been here for months. This park is looking its best. The trees are clothed in richest green. The great lake is as majestic as ever, and it has made no inroads upon our beautiful beach. The only depredation committed about the premises of "The Pioneer" is that a pair of wrens have built their nest out on the plate of the veranda. They have not quite become reconciled to our presence, showing a little uneasiness, but we hope soon to be on living terms with them, for there is plenty of room for them and us. They can pay their rent with their sweet carols, and we can compensate them for our presence by furnishing a few crumbs. Otherwise, the cottage is just as we left it, with the air of the rooms sweet and pure, and everything ready for use. Let those who wish to go gallivanting around, exploring new places and sweltering in crowded summer hotels, and call it resting, do so, but "as for me and my house" we prefer a fixed habitat to which we can fly as a refuge from the heat and the noise and strife of the city, and find home comforts and quiet and restfulness, close to Nature's heart and amid some of her grandest scenes. This is why "The Pioneer" cottage exists amid these pines and hemlocks fronting the great lake, surrounded by broad verandas, a very picture of quietude and rest.

We have brought along a few books to read, but reading books will serve as a diversion from the study of things at first hand. One reaches a point in life where, no matter what he reads, he is seeking therein to know God. He studies nature for the same reason. Frederick Robertson said: "I read Shakespeare, Wordsworth, Tennyson and Coleridge for views of man to meditate upon, instead of theological caricatures of humanity; and I go into the country to feel God; dabble in chemistry to fell awe of him; read the life of Christ to understand, love and adore him, and my experience is closing into this—that I turn with disgust from everything but Christ. A sublime feeling of a presence comes upon me at times which makes inward solitariness a trifle to talk about." But one ought to be able to see in nature something which will help him to know Christ who saw so much in nature to remind him of his Father. Another writer has said: "He who feels no interest in the waving corn fields, 'the innumerable laughter of the sea,' the rush of the mountain torrent, the shadows of the forest, the bird songs at dawn, the busy hive of human toilers in the many-peopled town, the mingled tragedy and comedy which make up the world drama, is equally unfit for earth or heaven. Though it be only for a season, yet even here we are the guests of God, and should try to make ourselves thoroughly deserving of his gracious hospitality." We should not only feel an "interest" in all these things, but we should seek to learn the lesson from them which they were designed to teach. The Eternal Logos is in all things, "for without him was not anything made that was made."

It is remarkably quiet here at present, for but few of the Oceana Beach people, our nearest neighbors, have yet arrived. The clubhouse has just been opened and Mrs. Hoffman, of Kalamazoo, Mich., under whose management the clubhouse has become so popular on account of its excellent meals, is here again this year with her son, and they have the house in readiness to accommodate resorters. Many of our friends found accommodations there during the last season and we are hoping that many more will do the same this season. Mrs. Duncan, of St. Louis, with her daughter, Mrs. Rogers, and her children and nurse have arrived and are quartered there. We are expecting a number of our friends a little later on including the Moores, of Columbia, the Rineharts, of Sedalia, and several from St. Louis. While there are limited accommodations in the way of cottages here, there are good hotels and houses in the little village across the lake, and plenty of good tenting ground here for those who would like the romance of living beneath canvas for a few weeks. On our way here we met with Bro. J. L. Deming and family on their way to Stoney Lake, a few miles south of us, on Lake Michigan. Brother Deming is pastor of the church at Norwalk, O., and, as we soon discovered, an enthusiastic disciple of Izaak Walton. We may try our skill together during the current season. A new net has been set in the lake just opposite "The Pioneer," and the catches of white fish during the past week have been most remarkable. We have been having frequent showers since our arrival, which the farmers hereabouts welcome very heartily. The weather is cool and each morning and evening we find a fire in the fireplace quite comfortable.

Contribution of Luther to Our Movement.*

By Joseph Armistead

Not only did Lutheran thought cease its advance with the life of Luther, but his most basic principles found no soil ready for their planting. Only partially did the great ideas of this great reformer succeed in controlling those earnest people, leaving it for a later age, of broader culture and keener perception to grasp his notions and apply them to the church.

Bancroft, the historian, has said: "No principle once promulgated has ever been forgotten. The world can not retrograde. The dark ages can not return. No truth can perish, no truth can pass away; the flame is undying, though generations disappear. Wherever moral truth has struck into being, humanity claims and guards the greatest bequest. Each generation gathers together imperishable children of the past, and increases them by new sons of light alike radiant with immortality."

In the trial that followed Luther's denunciation of the papacy, as to forgiveness of sins, and the universal bishopric, when he was asked to retract his utterances and writings, he enunciated the principle upon which Protestantism is founded, and which has been the corner stone of all ecclesiastical and religious progress from that day till now. In firmness of voice, yet with a humble modesty of demeanor, he replied:

"Unless I be convinced by Scripture and reason, I neither can nor dare retract anything, for my conscience is a captive to God's word, and it is neither safe nor right to go against conscience. Here I take my stand. I can do no otherwise. So help me God. Amen."

This is the keynote of the fundamental principle of the Restoration movement expressed by Thomas Campbell in the words, "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent." Here nearly three hundred years before is found the same principle of Campbell, who says: "There must be a 'thus saith the Lord,' either in express terms or by approved precedent, for every article of faith and item of religious practice." And again Luther has anticipated Campbell's principle that "nothing ought to be received into the faith or worship of the church, or be made a term of communion among Christians, that is not as old as the New Testament."

The enunciation of a principle and its detailed application are two things widely apart, as the history of all churches clearly shows. To adopt the Bible as the sole standard of faith and practice is one thing. To conform the faith and worship to that standard is quite another.

Luther lived too near the shadows of the dark ages to get the full glare of the light of truth and liberty to fall even upon his Bible. The world moves forward slowly, "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little." The tyranny of the Roman church with its dogmatic creeds and mysticism made it impossible to reproduce in a day the church in its original beauty. Hence, we have the credal form of Luther's great ideas embodied in the Augsburg confession. Liberty of thought died with him who had dared exercise it all during his life.

It remained for Thomas Campbell to reassert the same principle of the sole standard of the Word of God, and the New Testament as alone sufficient as a rule of faith and practice, and to guard and perpetuate the liberty of private interpretation by refusing to formulate a creed and by overthrowing every attempt on the part of others to do so.

In his prison home in Wartburg Castle, Luther translated the Bible into the native tongue of his people and so paved the way for the true application of his own principle of loyalty to the Word of God only—for there can be no true loyalty to the Bible without knowledge of its contents.

This discussion is limited to the principles enumerated by Luther, but which found their fuller interpretation and application under the Campbells.

It is true that all other Protestant bodies had accepted Luther's principle, but its application by the Campbells was the first that was not marred by the retention of tradition, unscriptural customs and Romish innovations and substitutions.

In all Luther's controversies he refused to be governed by arguments from the Fathers and scholastics, but in every case demanded the proof from the Bible and the conviction of reason. This practice perhaps more than any other one thing has marked the work of the Restoration preachers, who, though not always scholars nor often learned in either secular or ecclesiastical history, nor versed in the languages of the classics, have confidently accepted the Bible as the Word of God as authoritative with the Church and have given and demanded scriptural proof for all arguments.

Again must we give Luther credit for anticipating our movement in the matter of the name. It is a matter of history that Luther strenuously opposed his followers in calling themselves "Lutherans," and exhorted them to adopt the simple name of "Christians." In this, however, he was unsuccessful. Perhaps Providence may have been displeased that a religious body so far from the primitive church should enjoy the honor of such a name, and held it in reserve for that body of people that not only in theory but in practice gave again to the world the New Testament church with its conditions of membership and its sacred ordinances unchanged.

In the result of his experience we find a further contribution. He sought first to reform the Roman church, later he found reformation impossible, and was forced to the necessity of organizing a separate institution. Thus our leaders attempted to send preachers of the new message of Christian union to all the churches, urging each denomination to accept members from other churches on the universally accepted essentials of Christianity, but being finally compelled, after attempting to merge the movement with the Presbyterian and later with the Baptist church, to form themselves into a separate and distinct body.

Another distinct contribution to the Restoration movement is the principle that, while union is scriptural, practical and desirable, there can be no union upon a compromise of the truth, that separation and division even of God's people is better than a compromise with error or disloyalty to Christ.

But back of all the principles arrived at and adopted was the courageous spirit of liberty, a liberty that dared assert itself and its right to think and proclaim its thoughts, a liberty to proclaim the word though devils be as thick as tiles on the roof tops. This spirit of liberty of thought and expression, of private right of interpretation, lies back even of all the accepted principles concerning the Church and the Word of God. This is the best and noblest contribution of the Reformation to the Restoration.

This was the spirit in which Luther lived and died. Unfortunately his followers buried the spirit of liberty with him. The glory of the Restoration lies largely in the fact that this gracious privilege is still the right of every disciple of Christ. Here every man is his own master with freedom to think and speak, with the universe of truth open to his investigation, and the pulpit and press at his disposal. If ever the fear of criticism and loss of influence should seal the lips of our ministers, that day will witness the decline of our great movement. The world takes off its hat only to the man who fears nothing but sin, whose liberty is limited only by his conscience and the Word of God. In this spirit Thomas Campbell and Alexander Campbell and Barton W. Stone forged away amidst applause and hisses, crowns and crosses, and thus must every man who dares assert a soul and be a man. Else manhood must give way to weakness and the prophet spread his robes on the shoulders of the hireling.

Luther did not attempt the restoration of primitive Christianity, his mind did not grasp the idea. Nevertheless he stands and will stand as long as history tells the story of man's struggles upward to truth, as a great rock in a weary land, under whose shadow the millions of earth tired of the empty husks of priestly ignorance and superstition will come to find rest. When we remember that it was Luther who first forbade the invocation of saints, who condemned the law of celibacy of priests, overthrew the doctrine of auricular confession, and many traditions and human ceremonies in worship, such as image worship, discontinued the monastic vows, discriminated between civic and religious power, successfully refuted the doctrine of indulgences, the priestly power to forgive, the temporal authority of the papacy and even his universal rule in the church, we will gladly say with his friend, Melancthon: "Multitudes of the saints will therefore praise God to all eternity for the benefits which have accrued to the Church by the labors of Luther."

With all just honor and credit to Luther for the genius of his mind, his devotion and extraordinary labors and achievements, it was reserved for Alexender Campbell with his superior powers of oratory and argumentation, his keener insight and profounder grasp of truth and perception of the genius of the Church and the Lord's purpose concerning it, to apply Luther's principle of the sole authority of the Scriptures to the original idea of the union of all Christians.

Luther lacked power to control his followers, who often became a mob and refused to accept his proposal of the name Christian. Whereas Alexander Campbell was a master of men as well as of logic, and so great was his influence that he could supplant himself with the Lord Jesus Christ.

Luther did not grasp the great thought of the union of Christians; there were but three divisions to be dealt with then, and he was instituting one of them. Had he the grasp of the situation he might have saved the Church from the snares of sectarianism. Had he even been able to comprehend his own principle of the sole authority of the Bible, the divisions of Protestantism might have been averted. Mr. Campbell shows his higher order of genius in that he not only penetrates the conditions of the Church and the underlying principles of Christian union, but was able to put his ideas into such succinctness of statement, to so organize his forces and guard against future blunders of less discerning minds, that the principles he advocated and their detailed application to secure the union of all sincere Christian people has stood the test of a hundred years—a century of the profoundest scholarship the world ever produced, the most searching criticism the Church ever experienced, a hundred years of the most practical ideas in every department of civil, commercial and religious life—and his principles and practices stand to-day as the wisest, most practical and loyal that have ever been proposed for the uniting of the Christian world. The Church has yet to produce a man who has offered one single principle or application of a principle to this momentous problem that has proven to be an improvement over Mr. Campbell's.

Of necessity our manners toward the religious world must change, as the religious world changes toward us. Christian co-operation was always approved and sought by Mr. Campbell. He approached the denominations ever as brethren in a spirit of love, and was grieved at their frequent display of hostility. Where that hostile spirit has disappeared we again may work together in peace.

The principles of the restoration have been tested as by fire, and found true. We have but to be loyal to ourselves, to these principles that have been proven to be scriptural and wise, indeed the only ones that can be universally applied, and we will continue the victorious work of uniting the Lord's people in one great brotherhood, with "one Lord, one faith and one baptism."

The European Zigzag

By William Durban

I recollect vividly how, some years ago here in London, my dear old friend and colleague at that time, Dr. W. T. Moore, was arguing with a confirmed pessimist. As Dr. Moore is, like myself, by nature a sunny optimist, the antagonism of ideas may be imagined. The gentleman who hugged the dark side of things was lugubriously predicting the speedy end of this world. In his view poor old Terra was played out. Everything mundane was on the edge of the everlasting smash. The great apostasy was about to be inaugurated in three weeks, and he himself seemed to covet the task of beating the big drum of doom.

Now, this amateur prophet was not altogether unreasonable. For at that time the prospect was dark and the situation was, in many respects, most forbidding. The forces of evil were in the ascendant in certain quarters and there was a general frigidity in the ecclesiastical climate. Moral conditions had not for some considerable period kept improving commensurately with material progress. Civilization seemed to be advancing along sordid planes. Massive indifference characterized the majority of the community. Atheism in specious and refined forms; patrician extravagance in the inflated aristocratic section; infidel types of socialism amongst the proletariat; maniac gambling and stupendous sport in the middle class; political backwaters into a Toryism that had been supposed to be effete; the rise of an arrogant clique under Salisbury which poured contempt on the Liberalism of the grand old man Gladstone; the rapid spread of Romanizing ritualism in the great Church of England; the waning of Puritanism and Evangelicalism after the death of Spurgeon; the waxing fat of the Destructionist Higher Critics and the tearing to tatters of the Old Testament by wild speculators in the Teuton stock of Wellhausen and Graaf; the war-whooping of the Ultra-Darwinians over the jawbones of asses that had evolved themselves into Arabian race-horses, and the firebugs which had started as muddy microscopic amoebas and had developed into nightingales, blackbirds, or eagles, according as they had fits of natural selection—all these frenzied phases of the colossal Downgrade of Nineteenth Century Christendom furnished panoply to the Pessimist Brother! He saw no hope unless there might be some in Hades itself, for that was the goal to which the Cosmos was madly plunging.

I remember how Brother Moore dialecticized on this exhilarating topic. I also recollect that he set me writing upon it soon afterwards, but with my performance I am not now concerned. He argued with the Man of Melancholia that there was, indeed, a dark hemisphere in the moral earth, but that we should not forget the bright side of the same moral earth. Of the moon we never see one side, for it is always in obscurity. Of the moral universe some souls never see the bright hemisphere, for the simple reason that they will not look at an inch of it. To what glows with radiance they shut their eyes. Dr. Moore, however, did not present his own proper view in sharp contrast with that of the other friend. He admitted how shady were many of the prospects. But he observed that just as life has been said to be an equation, so do the laws of compensation ever work a balance in the history of the great world. The late Cardinal Manning once said that the study of history had brought him to the conclusion that, notwithstanding the apparent predominance of evil in every epoch, the great certainty was that Divine Providence was ever controlling for final good the ordering of the universe. And so, argued Dr. Moore, we must not forget that the Omnipresent Father is more than an architect of his universe. He did not merely design the vast structure and shape it out of chaos only to leave the cosmos thus created to crumble away in futurity. An architect can not live very long to preserve the building he has designed, and the maker of a locomotive does not undertake to keep the engine going all right forever. But Creation is as much as ever under the Divinity that originated it. It is impossible for the Christian, if he thinks aright, to imagine that the final outcome of Christian history can be a failure; that apostasy can in the end prevail; that the Gospel will prove to be a mere ripple on the ocean of temporal contingencies; that Satan will succeed in overcoming the Church at last by temptation after failing to conquer the Savior.

Well, then, how, the Pessimist asked, are we to account for the dark predictions of the Bible as to futurity, as to the closing of the Dispensation of Grace, and as to the great falling away? The reply of the Optimist was again very sensible. All that is predicted must come to pass. Indeed, many very dark prophecies have been fulfilled. Terrific judgments have been verified on great nations. The Jews are to-day just as the prophets declared they would be. But the world never before was so magnificently illumined by the spirit of grace, gentleness and goodness as it is to-day. The species of goodness which Seneca despaired of is rapidly becoming paramount amongst all races. The brutal lust for conquest is giving way to the collective aspiration for peace. The Bible is winning more conquests than any other agency of any kind that the world has ever known.

But now came Dr. Moore's main point. He maintained that progress is not always recognized because of the historic law of variations. This corresponds with the law of tidal periodicity in the material world. The tides sometimes run very low, and at some points of the shore the ocean runs back so many miles from land at the extreme neap tides that it is for a time actually invisible. But it is going to run up majestically with a corresponding overwhelming advance, and the full tide will overwhelm the barren sands, soar over the high rocks, and sing a chorus of the conquering billows. In other words, history accomplishes revolution and regeneration by alternation. There is no uniform progress. The French people, unrivalled in their logical acumen, believe in the rule of retreat in order to advance the further—"reculer pour mieux sauter." It is eminently true that Christianity marches on by zigzag paths.

This zigzagging of human progress is being most instructively illustrated at this period through which we are passing. South Africa has been suffering desolation. But General Botha has come to his own, and the British and Boers have both alike come to their senses. India is stormy for the moment, but great good will certainly come out of the trouble, and the missionaries will have a finer scope than ever before. In Turkey the Armenians have been for years fearfully maltreated, and the Macedonians are being plundered and outraged. But the Sultan will go so far and not an inch beyond an appointed line. The regeneration of the Near East is delayed, but a splendid future lies before it, in which the Bible will be the ruling factor. It is the American missionaries in the Turkish Empire who are quietly and nobly paving the way for the great eventual change. Russia is in the throes of a revolution in which at the present stage freedom for the people seems to be throttled by the grand ducal octopus. But I know something of the Russian people and am confident that the coming chapters of their history will include one that is little expected. The evangelical tide will sweep over the empire and the Greek Church will fail. Wherever we look amongst the nations we can see, if we have read history aright, that humanity is preparing, in all its difficulties, struggles and tribulations, for a golden age in which the dreams of the noblest idealists will be materialized. The dark clouds are harbingers of the showers of benediction that they will shed, and the rainbow of the Divine-human covenant, the arched bridge of beauty on which heaven and earth kiss each other in tears and smiles, spans the sky over the nations in a storm-tossed world.

I have been conversing in London with one of the delegates to The Hague from one of the Central American Republics. He is a most accomplished literary man and a fine statesman, though he belongs only to a little nation. But I was delighted with his fine expressions of reasonable and philosophic optimism. If all the delegates are of his spirit, The Hague conference will be a portent of cosmopolitan blessing. I trust that the voices of the little nations will not be stifled by the ponderous accents of the representatives of the great powers, which have in the past been so carnal, so aggressive, so selfish and so domineering. There are cheering signs that this brute spirit is weakening.

"Father, Forgive" By Baxter Waters

There have been preserved to us seven utterances of Jesus as he hung upon the cross; seven golden words. They reveal the depths of his sufferings and the height of his self-forgetting love. "They are seven windows by which we can look into his very heart and mind, and learn the impressions made on him by what was happening." They are seven stars in the firmament of a dark night of tragedy. Some of these sayings express his own personal sorrow and sufferings; others are the utterances of sympathy for others.

The first saying, and one of sublime beauty and grandeur, is, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do." The first word that breaks the awful silence, the silence that made kings and rulers marvel and mobs stand in awe, is his one word: Father. Here is One upon whose unfathomed mercy he can call for forgiveness. He knew this was the deepest thing in the being of God, his fatherly love, his forgiving grace. How often this word was upon his lips, that first day when a child in the temple, in the hours of rejoicing, in the days of solemn teaching, in the events of hard work, in the last nights of suffering and loneliness—it is ever the Blessed Father.

This sacred saying shows also Jesus' magnanimity, his greatness of soul. And in contrast with the dark background of revenge, cruel hatred, bitterness, how the brightness of the love of God shines out. It is said there are certain fragrant trees which bathe in perfume the ax that cuts into their wood. The weapon that takes their life shares their sweetness. So it was with the life of Jesus.

And what a glorious example for us, his followers. "Father, forgive them"—the appeal of pity—"they know not what they do." When Louis XII, of France, came to the throne he had a great many enemies. He made a list of these and placed by each name a large black cross. When his enemies heard it, they fled in dismay: but he recalled them and explained that the cross meant not death to them, but forgiveness, and it was to remind him of Christ who forgave his enemies while on the cross. Brethren, lest we forget, let us look to the cross; and in the race that is set before us, "look unto Jesus who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of God."

THE LORD WANTS WORKERS NOW.

A. K. Wright.

'Tis well to sing of a land on high
(But the Lord wants workers now),
Of a palace-home far beyond the sky,
Of the great things doing by and by,
(But the Lord wants workers now).

CHORUS.—

The Lord wants workers now,
The Lord wants workers now,
Come, gird your loins,
Your lamps trim bright,
For the Lord wants workers now.

In convention halls we'll sure enthuse
(But the Lord wants workers now),
And resolve great things for him to use;
But many times, neglect or refuse
To do the Lord's work now.

Come, reach a hand to the poor and weak
(For the Lord wants workers now),
To broken hearts some kind words speak,
And keep your own hearts clean and meek—
But do the Lord's work now.

Lift some souls out of sin and pain
(For the Lord wants workers now),
Till they stand straight up for Truth again;
Don't stop for snow, or heat, or rain—
Just do the Lord's work now.

To-day is the best of days for you
(For the Lord wants workers now);
For God and man be strong and true;
Be the helpers many or be they few,
Do the Lord's work. Do it now.

COULDN'T KEEP IT

Kept it Hid From the Children.

"We can not keep Grape-Nuts food in the house. It goes so fast I have to hide it, because the children love it so. It is just the food I have been looking for ever so long; something that I do not have to stop to prepare and still is nourishing."

Grape-Nuts is the most scientifically made food on the market. It is perfectly and completely cooked at the factory and can be served at an instant's notice, either with rich cold cream, or with hot milk if a hot dish is desired. When milk or water is used, a little sugar should be added, but when cold cream is used alone the natural grape-sugar, which can be seen glistening on the granules, is sufficiently sweet to satisfy the palate. This grape-sugar is not poured over the granules, as some people think, but exudes from the granules in the process of manufacture, when the starch of the grains is changed from starch to grape-sugar by the process of manufacture. This, in effect, is the first act of digestion; therefore, Grape-Nuts food is pre-digested and is most perfectly assimilated by the very weakest stomach. "There's a Reason."

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

All is quiet along the banks of the Potomac. Even the White House, the center of interest and strenuous activity a few months ago, is as undemonstrative as a country farm mansion. The squirrels and robins hold high revel and defy the nature fakers. The Roosevelt children are away and a hush has fallen on the scene. When they are around things are stirring. Their very names indicate movement. Some time ago a new congressman was standing in front of the executive mansion when a boy came dashing out:

"Who's that?" he asked of a secret service man.

"That's Archibald Roosevelt," he was informed. A few minutes later another youngster tumbled over himself out of the door, and the M. C. asked the same question.

"That's Kermit," said one of the guards.

Just then a third boy came swirling along on roller skates. "I guess that's another of them Roosevelt boys?"

"Yes, that's Quentin," he was told.

"By gum, they've all got names like sleeping cars. I feel just as if I were standing on the railroad platform watching the limited express shoot by."

Now they are missing. Archie was the most popular. He is a perfectly human boy. His companions at the Force public school and Friends' private school were of the most democratic sort. Roller skating, football, target practice, baseball, all healthful sports he takes to. He is no molly-coddle. He is the third son and had the struggle with diphtheria last March. He was slender and hardly equal to the fight, but came through. When a White House policeman asked him why he did not "get fat," he said: "I don't know. I eat enough, I know that. But I guess I haven't time," and he raced away with his companions.

Statesmen, policemen, market wagon drivers, newsboys, even the white wings are fond of Archie. He is a commoner. He plays cowboy. He does hair-breadth stunts on roller skates. He charges around on the asphalt with his calico Shetland. He slid down the banisters at a state function. He told Charles Wagner when asked whether he slept with his hand shut or open: "I don't know, because I am asleep." He went in swimming in the White House fountain. He had his calico pony taken up in the White House elevator when sick with measles that he might pat it and caress it until the awful thought came to him that the pony might catch his trouble, and he had it hustled out to save it. He rushes about the mansion and grounds delightfully regardless of hat or shoes, dirt or conventionalities, even life and limb. He is a genuine unspoiled boy, rugged and honest and Rooseveltian.

But the boys are away and the old place is still. Sometimes there are thousands of children sporting here. Easter Monday throngs of tots of all shades and colors and garbs take possession and roll eggs. It is a children's fete, and it is a great sight to see the youngsters of high and low degree chasing their hard-boiled cackleberries over the grassy terraces. All the hens hereabout are worked overtime and get ready for the festival and on Easter Monday morning hundreds and thousands, nurses and boys and girls and tourists, and spectators, are seen wending their way to the President's back yard, and the fun begins. Race suicide is rebuked, for none are admitted without children, and certain commercially inclined youngsters hire themselves to the childless at a good sum. "I will be your little boy for a nickel," says the professional orphan, and the grown-ups without infant attachment, bent on viewing the Easter Monday egg rolling stunt for which the Capital is celebrated, gladly meet the demand; the boy passes them and goes out in search of more gain. One little Rockefeller made $1.45 by his morning labors. "Dat's nuttin'," said another small boy scornfully. "If I didn't have long pants on I'd made er whole lot more'n that. I made $2 last year." But the "cops" get on to the professional orphan business, Sherlock the perpetrators, and bring about a slump in the market.

But the vision of the egg rollers is past. "Pickin' eggs," "theaters," "aigs," ancient and modern, hard boiled, soft boiled, and parboiled, nice, plump, firm henfruit that peels to snowy whiteness and gives toothsome white and yellow mouthfuls to the hungry little ones, and horrid cold storage cackleberries that go "bang" and seem like the passing of an automobile or a cigarette-smoking young man, and all the panorama of gaily-decked children and gaily-ornamented lawn and gaily-uniformed marine band has passed, and I am alone here under the oaks and chestnuts and maples with the birds.

Pete, the dog, has departed. Skip, the bear-hunter, is no longer about, and Rolla, the pet, is on his vacation. The squirrels have the time of their lives. Crows from old Virginia, first families of the Corvus Americanus, are nesting in the trees. Curious, is it not, that farmers will destroy this comparatively harmless and really serviceable bird. Though he pulls up a few seeds of germinating corn his services to humanity far outweigh his depredations. He daily devours things which would devastate whole fields of corn. He is a fine fellow after all and gives "caws" for thought. Slippers, the six-toed cat, which had its name telegraphed all over the world when it presented the President with several kittens, each with six toes, has disappeared. Darwin was defeated utterly by his little niece when she asked him, "What is it a cat has which no other animal has?" and was amazed, when he gave it up, to hear her say "kittens!" And when each kitten has six toes the world wonders. How much of this wonder, however, is due to the fact that Slippers dwells in the white palace in Washington, and is therefore the envy of all the pussies, Maltese or Manx, Angora or Persian, Madagascar, Malayan or Spanish the world over, we can not say.

Owls are here, and bats are here, real ones that hoot and squeak; and blackbirds jump from limb to limb, and robins, that take a hop, skip and jump, and then stop, and look out for a bug, and

GROWING CHILDREN

The Period When the Nervous Activity is at its Greatest.

A medical journal says:

"Against the practice of giving tea and coffee to children, we can not speak too strongly.

Childhood is the period when the nervous activity is at its greatest. The brain is ever busy receiving new impressions.

Reflex action, co-ordination of muscles, and the special senses are all under a special course of training. The nervous system is pushed to its utmost capacity, and long is the list of victims that follow its over-stimulation. In these little people, nothing but harm can come from the use of such articles as tea or coffee.

Bad, then, as this practice is, let us as physicians be aggressive in its prohibition. Do not be satisfied by answering "No," when asked as to its use, but let us teach the families with whom we come in contact, that such practice is evil. We speak emphatically, because not only among the poor and uneducated, but among the rich, who should know better, this practice is marvelously prevalent."

A man who tried Postum Food Coffee, said that it might be solid nourishment, but he didn't like its taste. He had not discovered the secret of making delicious Postum. After boiling commences, allow it to boil full 15 minutes. Not simply to put it on the stove for 15 minutes, but count the fifteen minutes after boiling commences. That brings out the food value and the delicious flavour. It certainly does make the children bright and healthy, and has proven a Godsend to many an adult whose daily ails were not understood until Postum was used in place of Coffee. "There's a Reason." Postum properly made has a coffee taste similar to the mild, high grade Javas. Read the little health classic, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Our Budget

—The office force rejoices that the Editor-in-Chief has been able to get away to his summer cottage amid the pines of Pentwater. We trust he may have a season as free as possible from the many cares and burdens that are in his life. As he lives near to Nature may he indeed be blessed in his communings with Nature's God.

—W. L. Harris has a class of about forty young men at Lyons, Kan., many of whom go out weekly to preach in surrounding schoolhouses and churches.

—The church at Mount Vernon, Ind., is at present without a minister. William A. Ward and Charles E. McVay are in a promising meeting there.

—W. A. R. Lovell, of El Reno, Okla., has been secured as permanent pastor of the Apache Christian Church. Prospects there are exceedingly bright for a good work.

—Victor L. Goodrich has taken the work at Greeley, Colo. He intends at once to put the Bible school on a successful basis, by inaugurating a teachers' meeting.

—The brethren in Grangeville, Idaho, are moving their building from a poor location to a prominent one. H. H. Hubbell writes us that they are at present holding all services in the county courthouse.

—The effect of organization by Superintendent Rotchford, and the hearty co-operation of the teachers of the Howett Street Christian Chapel, Peoria, Ill., led to the raising of $87 instead of the apportionment, which was $50, for Children's day.

—R. D. McCance has closed his work at Elwood, after a prosperous year, to take the work at Miller, where the prospects look bright. There has been handicapping by reason of a debt on the property, but this has been systematically reduced.

—We regret that R. S. Smedley has for some time been ill, and may never be able to do regular work again. Brother Smedley did a great deal of itinerating in Oklahoma and Indian Territory, and originated quite a number of our churches there.

—E. L. Frazier, of Indiana, will begin a meeting with the church at Fayette, Mo., July 23. Brother Frazier held a good meeting at this church three years ago, and its pastor, R. B. Helser, says he has won the hearts of the people irrespective of their denominational affiliations.

—All departments of the church at Harrison, O., are in active service. Efforts are being made to pay off the church debt. M. G. Long, the minister, reports an excellent Christian Endeavor mission study class and commends the book, "Alien or American," which they have just been reading.

—The "Friendship picnic" of the churches at Jacksonville, Peoria, etc., was a delightful one, and the outing is to be made an annual affair. Jacksonville had the largest delegation in the course of the day. There was a baptism in the Sangamon river, and the sight was a most impressive one.

—C. R. Neel, who has been state evangelist for the past two years, has just closed his work. During this time he held 26 meetings, had 304 additions, located 10 pastors, organized five churches and raised $1,643 on the field. Brother Neel expects to take up the pastorate of some church about September 1.

—The receipts of the Foreign Society for the month of June amount to $59,844, a gain over the corresponding month of 1906 of $11,115. This is the largest amount ever received in any one month in the history of the Foreign Society. Almost the entire amount was in regular receipts.

—Last summer a church of thirty members was organized at Blue Bank, Fleming county, Kentucky, through the efforts, chiefly, of Mrs. R. H. Yantis, who had conducted a Bible school there for many years. An excellent meeting has just been held, which has led to the enlargement of the congregation and school.

—J. H. Lawrence writes us that Evangelist C. F. Trimble is in a meeting at Creston, Okla., with Mrs. Edith Steinbrook. They are using a large tent. He says that Brother Trimble is rightly called "the Apostle of Love," but while he understands the language of the heart, he attracts and holds the attention of the most thoughtful.

—Brother Love, of Ponca City, Okla., has left that field, having accepted a charge at Hennessey. His past two years' work have left the Ponca City congregation in a flourishing condition, and the frame meeting house, which he found, has been replaced by a handsome and commodious structure, which is practically free of debt.

—The Naomi Avenue Christian Church of Los Angeles, Cal., is one of the young congregations that is making rapid strides forward. Their auditorium seats 1,000 people, and their consecrated minister is Willis S. Myers. O. P. Spiegel, of Birmingham, Ala., is to be their evangelist in the simultaneous revival of Southern California this fall.

—L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., will dedicate the new building at Brookfield, Mo., July 14. R. E. Prunty is the excellent pastor of this congregation. He writes that the wisdom of erecting a new or modern building is daily being vindicated. Following the dedication there will be a week or special services led by several of the prominent men of the state.

—The congregation of the South Lawrence church, Wichita, Kan., has completed an addition to the building which is to be used for the auxiliary work. A few months ago improvements were put upon the main building. The entire cost is about $1,800, which was fully provided for before the building was again formally set apart for use. Oliver M. Roth is the minister.

—The North Park Church, of Indianapolis, where Austin Hunter ministers, celebrated its tenth anniversary June 20, addresses being delivered on this occasion by Dr. G. H. F. House, W. O. Moore and A. B. Philputt. This church has grown from a membership of thirty to one numbering 500. It is free from debt and its property is worth $5,000, while it owns a good lot for a new building. Seven of the original thirty charter members were present and acted as the reception committee.

—The first anniversary of the First Christian Church of Moline, Ill., was recently celebrated. The church on organizing had fourteen members, and now numbers 46. During the year they have raised a considerable amount of current expenses and $100 for missionary causes. They have secured a fine lot and have

$2,800 pledged for this and the building, which will be erected this summer. The Bible school has an enrollment of over 100, and the Aid Society and Christian Endeavor are flourishing. The pastor is Robert E. Henry.

—John C. Hay, postoffice box 65, Hollywood, Los Angeles county, California, has what he believes "a practical plan for founding a Christian missionary educational institution in any region where land is cheap and can be purchased in large tracts." It is the plan of establishing a Christian colony of about 200 families of Disciples of Christ, who would buy a tract of 10,000 acres, more or less, at wholesale price. He says there are opportunities in California and in Mexico for securing very cheap lands in healthful localities for such colonies. Any one interested in this scheme may address him as above.

—John H. Stucky, minister of the Advent Christian Church, Argentine, Kansas City, Kan., has just united with the Northside Christian Church of that city. He has for years been a leading evangelist and pastor among the Advent Christians, and has been recognized as a man of sterling worth and ability. He has through study of our plea convinced himself that he can do the greatest service in standing for it.

—Richard W. Wallace writes us that the Southern Georgia District Board, of which he is chairman, has a desire to build up a church at Quitman, where there is a small body of Disciples who have been struggling along without much success for a number of years. Though their building is small, it is in the best location in the town, and it has no indebtedness. It is one of the best towns of its size in Georgia, and Brother Wallace recently held there a week's meeting and organized the church. The district board wants to see a good man go there to hold a five or six weeks' meeting. We are glad to learn that the temperance forces won a victory at Valdosta, Ga., where Brother Wallace ministers.

—C. B. Spalding, of Hillsdale, Kan., writes us that he is frequently taken to be a minister of the gospel, and that his name has appeared in the published list of Kansas preachers. He is unable to state a reason for this, and while he does not regard it as a dishonor, he thinks it is a misrepresentation that ought to be corrected. Brother Spalding has been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for the past two years, as well as in former years, and writes us that he can not well do without it. "It is certainly doing," he says, "a grand work in building up the Master's cause, and wherever read it can not fail to cement the affections of God's people, with that love which brings us so closely into touch with our Saviour."

SKIN TORTURES,

Itching, Burning, Crusted, and Scaly Humors Instantly Relieved By Cuticura.

Bathe the affected parts with hot water and Cuticura Soap, to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales and soften the thickened cuticle. Dry, with little or no rubbing, and apply Cuticura Ointment to allay itching, irritation, and inflammation, and soothe and heal, and lastly take Cuticura Resolvent Pills to cool and cleanse the blood. This pure, sweet, and wholesome treatment affords instant relief, permits rest and sleep in the severest forms of eczema and other itching, burning, scaly humors, and points to a speedy cure when all else fails.

—M. L. Pontius has resigned his charge at Paxton, Ill., accepting a call to the church in Taylorville. His successor has not been chosen. He expects to move about September 1. During his three years at Taylorville a necessary reorganization was effected, the attendance in the Sunday-school more than trebled, a vigorous C. W. B. M. organized, 86 added to the membership and improvements made on the property. The regular missionary offerings have all been taken, and the church has a prestige it never had before.

—A recent meeting of the board of the National Federation of Churches appointed the Rev. R. G. Boville as national director of Daily Vacation Bible Schools, with the view of promoting the extension of this movement in the other great cities of the United States. These daily vacation Bible schools are to be carried forward through local church federations, denominational organizations, evangelistic committees and similar bodies. It is a movement that has in it the promise of large good through a better knowledge of the Bible. In every way the officers and directors of this national organization are seeking to advance the interests of Christ's kingdom.

—The brethren at Mackinaw, Ill., are to have a new $15,000 church building. This is the assurance, writes Emile L. Patterson, after a several weeks' canvass culminating in a week's strenuous effort on the part of the minister, J. W. Street, and H. J. Puterbaugh, and J. M. Viemont, members of the soliciting committee. The building of the new house was a necessity to meet the demands of the situation. Brother Patterson says the Mackinaw church will be seventy-one years old in October, but his membership is not yet fossilized though it has a reputation of being conservative. The employing of Brother Street for three years and the church's ready response is an indication of the mutual confidence of people and minister.

—A. L. Ward, writing of his three years' ministry at Boston, says that in many ways it was a most pleasant experience. The church there has many consecrated workers, but it is a most difficult field and will need long and patient work to make a great success of it. It should receive, he says, the help of the entire brotherhood. During his ministry there 126 were added to the church. One young man entered Hiram College to prepare for the ministry and two others have decided to go to college next year with the ministry in view. The Boston church is in need of a man of God, he says, who can endure the strain of work. Brother Ward is already at work at Wheeling, W. Va., which church he reports full of life and with a fine outlook.

—The brethren at Lebanon, Mo., are a good folk. They are now building a beautiful new parsonage of seven rooms which, when completed, will be worth $2,500. This is the church where Harold Bell Wright did such a good work before he was compelled to seek the more genial climate of California. E. L. Ely has for some months been the minister and reports everything moving along smoothly. This church raises all its expenses by the old-fashioned method of voluntary offerings and resorts to no socials or sunbonnet sales. The pledges are equal to the current expenses. The preacher gets his money promptly every week if he wants it, and the church subscribes for a copy of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to go in every home. Let other churches take note.

Forthcoming Conventions.

We have received announcements of several forthcoming meetings and conventions. But there is such a demand on our space for reports of meetings and conventions already held that we find it almost impossible to print at any length the programs of forthcoming events. For instance, the full program of the Bethany Assembly would occupy a page of our space, as would the program of the Nebraska convention. Any one interested in the former can learn all particulars by applying to L. L. Carpenter, Wabash, Ind. Convention week will begin July 22, when the State Missionary Society, the Bible schools, C. E.'s, C. W. B. M.'s, Ministerial Association and Butler College will hold their annual conventions. Preachers' and Evangelists' week follows. The Nebraska convention will meet July 30-Aug. 4. The Southern Pennsylvania convention will be held at Berwick, July 22-25. An excellent program has been prepared and a warm invitation is extended.

An Important Proposition.

Elder P. C. Macfarlane, San Francisco, Emergency Secretary American Christian Missionary Society, Cincinnati, Ohio:

Dear Sir and Brother.—Referring to the fund you are seeking to raise for the purpose of the building of churches in San Francisco and vicinity, I propose during the next three years, to give $5,000 for said cause, payable one-third each year, provided the members of the Christian churches of Kansas City will give another $5,000, and provided further, that our brethren in St. Louis will give $10,000.

Independent of this proposition, I propose that if our people in the rest of the state of Missouri will give $2,500, I will give you an additional $2,500, payable one-third each year.

It must be understood that before you expect me to fulfill my obligations, that you must have the money raised from these other sources, either in cash or in notes that are acceptable to me, the thought being that I want to be sure that my proposition is stimulus sufficient to actually raise the additional amount of money mentioned herein.

Yours fraternally,
(Signed) R. A. LONG.

[It is for the churches in St. Louis and Kansas City and in the state at large to decide whether this generous offer of Brother Long can be realized on, or not. If each congregation will give as the Lord has prospered its members and shielded them from misfortunes, there can be no question as to the result. Let us all highly resolve to do our duty.—EDITOR.]

Reminiscences and Centennial.

I want, as one of the young men in the ministry, to most heartily second Bro. W. T. Moore's suggestion made in The Christian-Evangelist of June 20 that a whole day be given to those among us who were students under and associates of Alexander Campbell. If we are to have a Centennial, let us get out of the "ruts" and have an original, unique program. Let our oldest men have the right of way, for they have made this great meeting possible—it is the harvest of their sowing. O. P. Spiegel.

Two simultaneous meetings will be held, and all who come may be accommodated. The congregation earnestly hopes to provide funds for all indebtedness, and invokes the generous assistance of the churches to this end. Gifts and pledges may be sent to the undersigned, who will also be glad to be notified of the intended coming of brethren from a distance. Willis A. Parker, Minister.

a thrush sings in a leafy covert, and the pesky little sparrows sweep by in flocks and want the earth, and the gray squirrels run and play and peer into your face curiously and toss their tails and scamper along the driveways and up the trees. The bay trees are favorites and the grassy hillocks where they tumble around as the tots on Easter Monday. The old mansion is being burned by the gasoline blowers ready for a new coat of white that the White House may be whiter than ever before when the Rough Rider comes again to his throne.

By the way, how is it that the most talked of man on the globe, whose name is a household word, is not known by his name to one in a hundred? He is Roosvelt or Roosfelt, or Rosevelt, or Rosiefelt, or anything else but Rozievelt. What's the matter with our people that they don't know their chief magistrate's patronymic? The double "o" is just o, the "s" is z, and the "e" following the "s" is short a or ie, and of course the "v" is v and not f. Now you have it—Rozievelt. Try it again. Get into the proper orthoepical path and pursue it. Now, altogether! It is easy enough when you practice it.

Who will be the next now? Shall we have the same name to conjure with, or some other. Fairbanks or Bryan, Knox or Daniels, Taft or Folk, Tom Phillips or Champ Clark, Archbishop Ireland or Mark Twain? What say the squirrels and the birds in the treetops of the White House grounds? They chirp on, and so do the newspapers, and perhaps one knows as well as the other. We'll see what we'll see.

IN OLD ENGLAND.

We arrived in Southampton, from Paris, Sunday morning, June 2. On the same day I spoke three times to good congregations, both as to size and character. The pastor, an American, Ernest C. Mobley, was in London preaching for Mark Williams at the West London Tabernacle. Brother Williams is in the United States for a visit. While we were in Southampton I had the pleasure of hearing the Rev. C. Sylvester Horne preach, whose home is in London; also "Gipsy" Smith, from everywhere, and the Rev. Samuel Chadwick, of Leeds. The latter was a discovery and a most agreeable surprise. I had not even heard of him. "Gipsy" Smith was a disappointment. Mr. Horne was a source of inspiration. I said to a gentleman: "Mr. Horne is one of your coming men, is he not?" The reply was prompt and emphatic: "No, sir. He has come. He is here now!" Mr. Horne preached on "Paul's Determination to be All Things to All Men," a sermon to be remembered and used.

By the way, when you visit Southampton do not fail to put up at the Central Temperance hotel, kept by Mr. and Mrs. T. H. White. Their house is about the cosiest place of its kind that I have ever seen, and the proprietor and his wife are earnest Christians.

The church—our church—in Southampton is in excellent condition. There have been twenty-five or thirty additions within the last six weeks at the regular metings. Six persons confessed Christ Lord's day, June 16.

Tuesday evening was spent with Brother and Sister Edwin H. Spring, at their capacious and comfortable home, "Ribston Hall," Gloucester. They are English, thoroughly English, in the best sense of the word, and as thoroughly Christian as they are English. Every minute with these good people and their unusually interesting family was full of pleasure. Gloucester is the birthplace and lifelong home of Brother and Sister Spring. I spoke to a surprisingly large audience in the evening. The number of young persons in the church is a most encouraging feature. I will not occupy space with an account of our walks about the old town under the direction, instruction and inspiration of Pastor Spring. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will, I believe, be more interested in a recital of what the Disciples are doing and how they are getting along.

Wednesday evening was spent in Cheltenham, J. H. Versey, pastor. We attended a "tea." Our reception was all that the most fastidious could desire. It was a source of joy to be entertained in the home of this good man and his excellent wife. It was impossible to realize that we were more than 5,000 miles from our "Episcopal Palace" in Denver. The membership of the Church of Christ in Cheltenham is small. The "chapel" is a model of neatness. The congregation is made up of intelligent, decorous, reverent men and women, with a good per cent of boys and girls. The presence in our churches in Great Britain of so large a per cent of young persons is a most encouraging feature of our work. The church in Cheltenham has, in the years that are gone, had its share of trouble. All goes well now. The future is bright. Much hard work must be done, with tact and perseverance. Of the final issue I have no doubt. J. H. Versey impressed me as a good man in the right place.

We came on to London Thursday morning, June 6. The first thing we did was to go to the City Temple to hear the Rev. R. J. Campbell, the new theologian, the English arch-heretic, preach a good, sound, solemn sermon from the words of Hosea, the old Hebrew prophet: "Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him alone." The sermon was a tender, solemn, earnest, touching appeal. If this discourse was a good sample of the new theology, then I am a new theology man! The great building was full of men and women, who assembled in the midst of the week, at high noon, to hear this sermon. Men sat on the floor in front of the pulpit, looking steadily into the face of the preacher whose sermons are now the sensation in London and, for that matter, in all England. We have not been in a place in which we have not heard of "the new theology." It seems to me that the commotion created by Mr. Campbell's "new theology" is a veritable tempest in a teapot. His book entitled "The New Theology" does not appeal to me. I read the volume leisurely as I came across the Atlantic.

The evening of the same day we attended a union meeting of Disciples in the West London Tabernacle. Those present represented the churches of Christ in London and the immediate vicinity. It as a sure-enough union meeting. The spirit of the meeting was faultless. Quite a number of the brethren participated in the speech-making. All expressed appreciation of what the Disciples in America have done and are doing to assist the work on this side of the Atlantic. The progress is not rapid, but there is progress. The words of James, the Lord's brother, are pertinent to the heroic men and women who, in this country, stand for the Christian religion as it is described in the New Testament, namely, "Let patience have its perfect work." Patience, perseverance and fidelity to the right will win out. That Thursday evening meeting in the West London Tabernacle was a great meeting, a real eye opener.

Lord's day, June 9, was spent at Harnsey, with Leslie W. Morgan and his devoted people. A building is needed at Harnsey. I wish I could say how greatly it is needed. This need is realized fully, I am sure, by the self-sacrificing pastor and his royal English wife as well as by their noble people. A building fund has been started and is growing. A suitable edifice will be secured. Of this I have no doubt. Even as things are, in respect to a suitable building, the congregation, under the courageous and wise leadership of Brother Morgan, is steadily gaining ground.

The old city of Chester was visited Monday, June 10. John Bage is the efficient pastor. We were most hospitably entertained at "Ashfield" by the well-known Whalley family. Their place is a good, old-fashioned, capacious English home, thoroughly English, you know! The young pastor at Chester is a royal fellow. His wife is a real helpmeet. To say that we were delighted with our reception, with the apparently good condition of the church, and with all that we saw and heard in this old Roman town, is to put the matter mildly. There is a fine class of men and women in the Chester church. The congregation has a good building, well located. The pastor and his wife are persons of culture and consecration.

From Chester, filled with joy, we proceeded on Tuesday, June 11, to Birkenhead, where again, as in each of the places already named, we had a surprisingly good congregation. Our house of worship in Birkenhead is well located. The church owns ground on which a much larger building will, in time, be erected. At present there is no pastor in this "bedroom of Liverpool."

The next day we went over to Liverpool and spent the evening with the Church of Christ in Upper Parliament street. The pastor, Daniel Hughes, was at Lancaster giving an address upon the occasion of the installation or "settlement" of a pastor, a young brother, Proctor I think is the name, a native of England and a graduate of Bethany College. We were entertained by Brother and Sister R. G. Platt, 53 Kingsley Road, whose enthusiastic zeal in the cause of missions caused me to be ashamed alike of my ignorance and coldness. They find unalloyed pleasure and real spiritual profit in entertaining passing missionaries.

From Liverpool we went out to Southport where, in the evening, a quite informal meeting was held with the Disciples on Marnington Road. To renew our acquaintance with the brothers Coop was a great pleasure. We were permitted to enjoy the unstinted hospitality of the Coop families. Brother George Fowler is the efficient shepherd of this flock.

Lord's day, June 16, was spent with the West London Tabernacle. It was a great day. There was an enthusiasm in this congregation that we had not seen in the other churches visited.

Not to unduly extend these notes, my experiences with our churches in old England, and my observations, were full of encouragement. I am thankful that I had the privilege of making this tour. In every place visited I was requested to assure the brethren in America that the Disciples in England appreciate fully the fellowship and help of their American kinpeople. B. B. TYLER.

The Iowa Convention.

Monday evening, June 17, one of the largest and best conventions of the Hawkeye state was opened in the Central Church of Christ in Des Moines.

The opening address was by C. A. Finch, of Topeka, Kan., representing the cause of Church Extension. It was a splendid address, brim full of good points. It was given under the following outline: Church Extension—1. As related to education; 2. As related to missions; 3. As related to evangelism.

Tuesday morning the various committees were appointed. Then came reports from various standing committees and officers. The treasurer's report was a very encouraging one. The receipts ran to about $13,000. J. M. Lucas, of Des Moines, is the very efficient treasurer. Corresponding Secretary B. S. Denny made a most excellent report, showing great progress during the year. The number added to the churches during the year was probably ten thousand. The Bible school superintendent also made an excellent report, showing that at present the Bible schools are receiving more attention than ever before.

At 10:30 a. m. J. H. Mohorter presented the claims of Benevolence in a telling address. Following Mohorter came the incomparable Rains, with an appeal for foreign missions. He divided his discourse into the following sections: 1. The workers on the foreign field. 2. The work. 3. The money used. It was a telling address and moved all hearts.

Tuesday afternoon was devoted to Bible school interests. R. H. Ingram, of Perry, presided, and brief but practical addresses were made by the following persons: Arthur Long, Finis Idleman, Mrs. E. H. English, Fred Macy, G. B. Van Arsdall and J. H. Bryan. All said many good things. Perhaps the most striking thing said by any of them was by G. B. Van Arsdall, who spoke concerning the Bible school and evangelism. He said the Bible school properly conducted will enable the converts to stick. The converts who are not taught in the Bible school are likely to be just stuck on to the church. Those who are taught in the Bible school grow into the church and are a part of it. They stick.

At 3:30 on Tuesday came the period devoted to Drake University. The chief address was delivered by D. R. Dungan, who made a splendid appeal for the Christian College, manned by Christian men. Chas. S. Medbury told in a most touching way of the loyalty of teachers and the struggles of students in Drake. Finally President Hill M. Bell spoke briefly of the noble purpose and outlook of Drake.

Tuesday evening, S. H. Zendt, of Oskaloosa, delivered an able address, touching upon the practical problems of our progress.

Wednesday forenoon was devoted to business and three good addresses. The first address was by Frank S. Ford, of San Francisco, who appealed to the people of Iowa for help in rebuilding the stricken city. The second speech was by A. L. Orcutt in support of our old ministry. The third address was by H. A. Denton, on behalf of the American Board. He made a flashing, forcible, flaming and furious speech, aroused the convention and tallied one for home missions.

Wednesday afternoon was devoted to two symposiums, one on Christian Endeavor and the other on Church Problems. Those who spoke on Christian Endeavor were, E. E. Mack, F. E. Smith, Lew. C. Harris, Brother Corbit, and W. T. Fisher.

D. W. Hastings presided during the symposium on Church Problems. Brief addresses were made by C. H. Strawn, A. B. Cornell, G. A. Hendrickson, E. A. Hastings, and B. W. Pettit. A paper prepared by B. F. Hall, of Woodbine, was read by J. A. McKenzie, of Council Bluffs. Perhaps the most stirring part of this symposium was the address by G. A. Hendrickson, telling how he recently helped to work a great reform in the government of his city, Shenandoah, Iowa.

The C. W. B. M. doings began with the Wednesday evening address by Elliot I. Osgood, who gave the clearest conception of Chinese developments yet heard by this scribe. It was a great address, and did much good for foreign missions.

The ladies continued their convention all through Thursday. The address by the President, Mrs. A. M. Haggard, was received with great favor, as was the report of Miss Annette Newcomer. The C. W. B. M. made great progress during the year, largely increasing its membership and raising about $20,000.

The convention came to an enthusiastic close on Thursday evening, with a sermon by Mark Wayne Williams, of the West London Tabernacle.

Some Things Done.

The State Bible School Association, which had been in existence as a separate institution for many years, was dissolved and its work laid upon the shoulders of the State Missionary Board.

This board was instructed to employ a man to look after the two interests of Iowa Bible schools and Iowa Christian Endeavor societies.

In reference to the list of questions submitted by the American Board, the convention favored taking the home and extension offerings together. It opposed merging the boards of Ministerial Relief and Benevolence, and declined to recommend the proposed scheme of national management of state missionary work.

The old Board of Directors was re-elected: J. Mad. Williams, President; S. H. Zendt, Vice-President; J. J. Grove, Recording Secretary; J. M. Lucas, Treasurer; B. S. Denny, Corresponding Secretary. The board had done such excellent work that everybody felt that a re-election was absolutely demanded. B. S. Denny was chosen as Corresponding Secretary for the tenth time. He has done a great work, and is growing more efficient year by year.

The newly elected officers of the convention are as follows: Chas. S. Medbury, President; G. B. Van Arsdall, First Vice-President; Arthur Long, Second Vice-President; T. J. O'Connor, Secretary; S. B. Ross, Assistant Secretary. Dr. D. R. Dungan presided over the sessions of the convention and did much with his tact and good humor to make it one of the most pleasant assemblies ever held in Iowa. It was his twenty-first missionary convention presidency. At a meeting of the convention Thursday afternoon, held in the lecture room while the C. W. B. M. was holding the main auditorium, Brother Dungan took occasion to say "good-bye" as the presiding officer. He spoke touchingly of his service in former days, of his seventy years, of his lonesomeness without the dear wife, of his love for the brethren and faith in them, and of his hope to be with them in a greater convention on the other shore. And then, while singing "God be with you till we meet again," the convention filed past the old hero and grasped his hand. The singing did not go well,—there were too many tears,—too many voices were choked with emotion; but it was one of the touching occasions of a life-time, never to be forgotten by those who were present.

Prof. Percy M. Kendall, associate to Finis Idleman, the new pastor of the Central Church, led the convention music, and he did it in a most effective manner.

Brother Idleman, who was just recovering from a siege with typhoid fever, was in the convention, but not yet able to resume his usual activity. He was fortunate in having such an efficient associate as Brother Kendall, who led the forces of the Central in thoroughly and carefully entertaining the convention. One evening the music was led by the Philo-Christos Club, a class of thirty or more young men. Several other times the convention was delighted with the singing of the Trier Sisters, a ladies' quartet, consisting of two pairs of twins from the same family. They are fine singers.

The convention voted to try the assembly plan for next year. It will convene on the Thursday following the Drake Commencement and continue in session one week. It will use the Des Moines Chautauqua grounds and buildings.

Much more might be said of this convention. Some names which should have been given are omitted. But time is hurrying me, and with an apology for defects, this report goes to the mail.

H. D. WILLIAMS.

Louisiana State Convention.

On the evening of June 27, in the city of Jennings, after the last address had been made and the benediction pronounced by John A. Stevens, the retiring state evangelist and corresponding secretary, while the congregation stood and sang that dear old song, "God Be With You Till we Meet Again," from every side could be heard the remark, "The best state convention ever held in Louisiana."

Never before has there been gathered in this state so large and enthusiastic a body of workers as at this our twelfth annual convention. Never before have we had at a state convention so many men of prominence, or listened to addresses of such great merit. To give even a condensed report of the speeches delivered would take up more space than we can ask, so this is omitted. All who know the men who took part in this great convention, however, will be left in no doubt as to the pleasure and profit derived by those fortunate enough to listen to them.

E. V. Zollars, President of Oklahoma Christian University, was on the program for the opening night, but was prevented from reaching us, and the hour was given to J. T. Ogle, of Paris, Texas, who spoke in behalf of the work of church extension. It would be hard to find a man who could hold the attention of his hearers more perfectly than does Brother Ogle. Acquainted with his subject, in sympathy with its aims and ideals, on fire with zeal for the growth of its resources and powers, he made for church extension friends of all who heard him.

On Wednesday morning the president of the convention, F. M. McCarthy, of Leesville, made his address. Brother McCarthy is a veteran in our ranks, experienced in the workings of all the various departments in close touch with all the needs of the state, and his address was a thoughtful and carefully prepared effort. May the future hold many years of usefulness for him. His faith is still as bright as in the days when his eyes were brighter.

Roy Linton Porter read an inspiring paper on "Our Young People," which was one of the good things of the convention. Brother Porter is one of the strong young men in the brotherhood, and his work in the past gives the fullest assurance of a still greater one in the future. If Baton Rouge secures him to assist in the mighty work of faith which they are undertaking, their labors are half performed, for he will never rest or falter until the loyal disciples of that city can praise their God in a house of worship free from debt.

Our faithful treasurer, W. C. Scott, of Cheneyville, made his annual report, showing in detail the receipts and disbursements of the board. Careful business methods characterize the work of Brother Scott, and we are to be congratulated on having so energetic and competent a Christian business man for this responsible position.

The report of the state evangelist and corresponding secretary, John A. Stevens, was read and adopted. This showed the splendid work done during his term. We cannot speak in too high terms of Brother Stevens.

The C. W. B. M. held their session on Wednesday afternoon, and a report of their work will be written by their officers.

Wm. B. Shaw, of Georgia, spoke on "Our Helpless." It would be impossible to fitly describe this address. It was a nappy blending of humor and pathos, and was altogether one of the most impressive addresses made. Brother Shaw endeared himself and his work to our hearts.

Then came J. J. Morgan, of Ft. Worth, Texas, who had for his subject, "Foreign Missions." Brother Morgan is a store-house of facts, as well as a good speaker. A large congregation heard him gladly, and no matter what their predilections were before, they are all for foreign missions now.

G. A. Faris, editor of the "Christian Courier," of Dallas, Texas, was present and preached the sermon of the evening on Wednesday. We do not believe there was anything during any of the sessions of the whole convention that gave more help and pleasure than this sermon by one of the great preachers of the Lone Star State.

Otis Hawkins, of Crowley, spoke on "The Great Rice Belt and Its Needs."

The "Biggest man in Louisiana," G. F. Bradford, the minister for the church at Lake Charles, spoke to an appreciative audience, taking for his subject, "Ten Reasons Why Some Preachers Fail." This was good. Brother Bradford is a new man among us in Louisiana, and we were all "sizing him up"—this was quite a job, for he is a big man in every way—but the verdict is, "We like him; we are glad he came; we hope he will stay."

Then as a fitting climax to the greatest convention ever held in Louisiana, came the address of H. A. Denton, representing the American Christian Missionary Society. Brother Denton's reputation as a pulpit orator had preceded him, and when the hour arrived for his address on "Home Missions," every seat was filled and a crowd stood on the outside of the house looking through the windows and doors, and listened with rapt attention to the fine address.

The utmost harmony prevailed in all the business sessions, and an earnest desire was evinced to further advance the work in this state.

The new State Board is composed of the following men, and organized as herein given: President, Prof. W. R. Dodson, Baton Rouge; Vice-President, Dr. J. F. Smith, Leesville; Secretary, Roy Linton Porter, Cheneyville; Treasurer, W. C. Scott, Cheneyville; Otis Hawkins, Crowley; Claude L. Jones, Shreveport; H. M. Polsgrove, Jennings; G. F. Bradford, Lake Charles; Wm. M. Taylor, New Orleans; Brown Funk, Jennings; Judge J. R. Thornton, Alexandria. This board met at once and proceeded to map out a plan of campaign for the future. Otis Hawkins, of Crowley, was unanimously called to be state evangelist and corresponding secretary for the ensuing year, and will perform the duties of these offices.

The committee on resolutions returned their report, expressing the thanks of the convention to the Jennings Church and people for their hospitality and entertainment; to the "Picayune" of New Orleans for its courtesies; to Brother Holmes, of Beaumont, for a beautiful illustrated song, and to Brother and Sister Stevens for their labors with us.

OTIS HAWKINS,
State Evangelist and Cor. Sec.

South Dakota Convention.

The twenty-third annual convention of the South Dakota Christian Missionary Society was held in Parker from June 20 to 23, inclusive. The splendid program was carried out according to schedule, with a few minor changes. It was the expressed opinion of delegates from a distance that they had never attended a convention that for quality surpassed the Parker convention.

The music was led by Mrs. Julia R. Hackman, of Sioux Falls, assisted by others. The music was excellent throughout. F. M. Rains, of Cincinnati, represented the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and delivered the opening addresses, kindling the fires of enthusiasm, which burned throughout. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions was represented by Mrs. Louise Kelley, of Emporia, Kan. Mrs. Kelley has a national reputation as a speaker and worker. She delivered two splendid addresses. J. H. Mohorter, of St. Louis, represented the National Benevolent Association, and spoke on the Biblical Basis of Benevolence. No one who heard him can doubt that God's hand is in his call to that work. H. A. Denton, of Cincinnati, represented the American Christian Missionary Society, and delivered a stirring address and preached a strong spiritual sermon on Sunday afternoon. Lawrence Wright, State Evangelist, preached the Convention sermon on Sunday night. His message was warmly received. Wm. R. Roe, of Verdon, preached a helpful sermon Sunday morning. The Communion service was conducted Sunday, 3:00 p. m., by J. H. Reeves, of Carthage, and O. A. Swartwood, of Miller. J. B. Moore, of Aberdeen, gave a very encouraging report as Treasurer. F. B. Sapp, of Aberdeen, gave his report as Corresponding Secretary, delivered an address, and conducted two Bible studies. L. H. McCoy, of Platte, and L. W. Thompson, of Armour, delivered splendid addresses.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions (in South Dakota) elected the following officers: Mrs. Julia R. Hackman, President; Mrs. Windedahl, Vice-President; Mrs. L. W. Thompson, of Armour, Treasurer, and Mrs. Edith R. White, of Lead, Corresponding Secretary.

The State Board of the South Dakota Christian Missionary Society will be as follows: A. H. Seymour, President; E. E. Headley, Vice-President; J. B. Moore, Treasurer; Wm. Carry, Recording Secretary; Wm. R. Roe and L. H. McCoy, Members at Large, and F. B. Sapp, Corresponding Secretary.

The work in North Dakota is under the direction of this board, and with the continued assistance of the National Boards, the work will go on in the Dakotas with increased vigor. The next State Convention will be held in Armour, S. D., in June, 1908.

It is expected that a special train will run from the Dakotas to Pittsburg in 1909, when the great Centennial Jubilee will be held.

Minnesota State Convention.

The Minnesota Annual State Convention was held at the Portland Avenue Church of Christ, Minneapolis, June 17-20. The attendance was larger than at any previous state convention in this state. The people of the Portland Avenue Church proved themselves a royal host in their entertainment of the delegates. Ample provision had been made for the comfort of all. The convention was a feast of good things from start to finish. The convention opened on Monday evening, June 17, with a C. E. rally, with Miss Grace Holden, of Duluth, Miss M. Bessie Kirk, of St. Paul, and B. V. Black, of Mankato, as speakers. The music was led by Trafford N. Jayne, of Minneapolis, who was assisted by a large chorus. The social hour following was much enjoyed by all. Tuesday morning was the ministerial program, which opened with the welcome address by Dr. David Owen Thomas and the response by A. P. Frost, of Winona. Then followed an address by A. D. Harmon, of St. Paul, on the subject, "The Forces that are Making for a Change in our Religious Thought, and in what Form will they Cast Themselves when They Crystallize"; also an address by P. J. Rice, of Minneapolis, on "The Mission of the Disciples." Both were very thoughtful addresses. The discussion which followed, led by Baxter Waters, of Duluth, and T. J. Dow, of Minneapolis, engaged the attention of the convention till noon.

Tuesday afternoon was the educational session. A. W. Fortune, of Chicago, spoke on the subject, "An Educated Ministry." This was followed by an address by P. J. Rice on "Our Proposed Bible Seminary." Plans were adopted looking to the establishment of a Bible Seminary in connection with our State University. W. J. Wright gave the address at the evening service, to the delight of all present.

Wednesday morning was the State Missionary program. J. H. Bicknell gave the annual report of the Corresponding Secretary. The report showed forty-six churches in the state, with a membership of 3,198. During the year there were 371 additions, 216 being by primary obedience. The total losses were 246, leaving a net increase of 145. The churches raised for local work, $22,758.61; for Home Missions, $536.30; for Foreign Missions, $662.49; for State Missions, $1,032.57; for Church Extension Society, $285.20; for C. W. B. M., $970.22; for Benevolence, $174.87; for other purposes, $2,830.89. The Treasurer's report showed a balance in the treasury of $347.15. These reports were followed by an address by C. R. Neel, State Evangeliist, on the subject, "The Work of the Year and a Survey of the Field." A Symposium was conducted by A. D. Harmon on the subject, "Facing the Facts," with an address by W. H. Knotts, of Howard Lake, on "Our Successes and our Failures"; also an address by C. B. Osgood, of Winona, on "A Look at the Present."

Then followed an address on Foreign Missions, by F. M. Rains, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Wednesday afternoon and evening was devoted to the work of the C. W. B. M. After the annual reports and business, the convention was favored with an address by Miss Ada Boyd, of Bilaspur, India. A very pretty exercise was given by four little girls, "How Some Dollies were sent as Missionaries." The address of the evening was given by Mrs. A. D. Harmon, of St. Paul.

Thursday morning was devoted to the work of the S. S., with addresses by A. P. Sprague, Minneapolis, C. B. Osgood, Winona, and A. B. Marshall, Minneapolis. J. H. Mohorter spoke very earnestly of the work of the National Benevolent Association.

Thursday afternoon was devoted almost entirely to the business of the convention. A. L. Orcutt, of Indianapolis, spoke on the subject, "A Neglected Interest."

For the Thursday evening service we had a Symposium on Christian union, with four addresses: "From the Standpoint of the Disciples of Christ," P. J. Rice; "From the Standpoint of the Congregationalists," Henry B. Holmes; "From the Standpoint of the Baptists," Herbert E. Wise; "From the Standpoint of the Free-Baptists," Benjamin Franklin. Altogether it was a very happy and a very helpful convention.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

St. Louis Letter.

Since the preachers have closed their regular ministers' meetings for the summer, we do not see one another as often as before. But I hear that they are having good audiences despite the warm weather.

The young people of the Compton Heights Christian Endeavor Society had a rather unique contest recently. The members of the Young People's department challenged the Senior department to a Bible contest. The contest was to be carried on in three lines of work:—1. The department reading the largest number of scripture verses during a period of four weeks. 2. The department committing to memory the largest number of Bible verses. 3. The department that could quote the largest number of verses in a public contest. As stated, the contest lasted four weeks. Then the two departments came together at the church for the final test,—the quotations. The meeting was open to the public, and many came to enjoy it. After prayer by the pastor, who was chosen umpire for the evening, the reports of the reading and memorizing were given. The report showed that the Senior department had twenty-six to take part in the readings, and they read a total of 66,209 verses; nineteen of their members took part in the memory contest, and they memorized during the time 733 verses. The Young People's Department had twelve members to take part in the reading contest and nine in the memory contest. They read 53,498 verses and memorized 487. While the Seniors read and memorized the most verses, the Young People had the largest per cent according to the number who took part. The final contest at the church was the most interesting part of the whole thing. The representatives of the two departments (not nearly all of the members took part this time, but they will the next time), stood in two rows across the lecture room. There were thirteen Seniors and twelve of the Young People. It was agreed that quotations should be made alternately, like an old-fashioned spelling bee, and when any one could not quote a verse in his turn he should sit down. The side having the largest per cent of its members standing at the end of one-half hour would be declared winner. They were not confined to the verses learned during the contest, but might quote any passage of Scripture they knew. At the end of the thirty minutes not one had gone down on either side. Many of them declared that they thought they could stand another thirty minutes. After a social hour, the meeting broke up with the best of feelings on the part of all who took part. Many of them declared that they had learned more Scripture during the contest than they had in any previous year. I recommend the plan to young people's societies generally. I am sure you will find it enjoyable and profitable for the young people.——Our Christian Endeavor forces had a pleasant visit from our National Superintendent, Brother Hill, July 2d.——Our people are beginning to scatter, but our churches will all be open during the summer, whether the ministers go away or not. We never close the churches in St. Louis. Should any brethren from outside be visiting here during the vacation period, he will find a warm welcome among the brethren.—— The St. Louis letter writer expects to get away as soon as the wedding season is over, so he bows his adieu until autumn. He will preach at Dial, Fannin County, the fifth Sunday.——From present indications, Georgia will soon be a prohibition state. The prohibitionists are enthusiastic over the outlook. E. L. SHELNUTT.

Establishing the Church at Turon.

We have just closed a good meeting at Turon. Lee B. Myers, of Norwich, did the preaching and led the few struggling brethren in a great victory. There were eight charter members left from a meeting one year ago, four others had united with the church in the interim and in this meeting fifty-one were added—thirty-one by baptism and twenty by statement and letter. This makes the work at Turon permanent. A house will be erected and they will have preaching for at least half time. Everybody is happy and stirred as never before.

The Winston-Salem Meeting.

Our meeting began Lord's day, June 2, and closed June 16. D. A. Brindle, of Griffin, Ga., did the preaching, and did it well. I led the songs and our own choir and congregation furnished the music. We have a good male quartet and soloists. At the close of the meeting a reception and social was given to the new members. There were twenty-nine added, and two more who made the confession are yet to be baptized. Of those received ten were baptized, one came by letter, fifteen by statement and three from the Baptists. While the evangelist was ailing the last week, so that he was hindered much in personal work, he stuck bravely to the meeting and preached every night. One family came in that has lived in the city for years. The father and mother enrolled first, then a daughter was baptized. While the parents had been inactive three children had united with the Baptist church. We praise the Lord for this good meeting. Over sixty have been added in this and our meeting last year with Yeuell and the Saxtons, and others are coming in from time to time. There have been nearly one hundred additions in less than two years. The church has not only grown in numbers but in liberality, until every regular missionary and benevolent offering is recognized. The Tent Meeting at Milan, Mo.

Our tent meeting has come to a close here and it has proved to be a genuine revival throughout. About one hundred additions have been made, about seventy-five by confession. O. W. Jones is the capable leader of this generous band of Disciples. Our next meeting is at Glasgow, Ky., where Brother Payne ministers. We will be with our Glasgow brethren in September. I am anxiously looking forward to Bethany Assembly this year, where a great host of our preachers and brethren hope to meet in blessed fellowship.

JAMES SMALL.

The Meeting at Coshocton, Ohio.

The finest meeting in the history of the church at Coshocton, Ohio, closed June 9. It was held in the new building recently dedicated by F. M. Rains. Evangelists Shelburne and Knight were secured and began their work May 12. The church is rejoiced over the results. There were many obstacles in the way of the meeting, among them the sickness of Brother Shelburne, and the absence of the pastor for eleven days on account of the sickness and death of his father. But the meeting was a success and a spiritual uplift to the church and the whole city. Twenty-seven united by letter and statement, one was reclaimed and thirty-nine came by confession, eight of whom have not yet been baptized—a total of sixty-seven additions.

The shop meetings are a very helpful feature. The whole meeting was dignified and spiritual, not pugilistic. We need more such evangelists in the field. J. N. JOHNSTON, Pastor.

Violett at Dallas City, Ill.

It was in every respect a great meeting. We had expected to have the meeting in the autumn, but had difficulty in securing a suitable man. Finally Brother Violett consented to lead us, though he would be taking time from his vacation that he had planned for more than a year.

We had but two months in which to prepare. Too much can not be said of the faith and loyalty of the church. Their zeal and general interest was a great factor of success. The meeting continued for four weeks and two days, with fourteen stormy evenings. One hundred and thirty responded to the invitation and about one hundred were baptized. Brother Violett's preaching was of a high order, yet plain and simple. Oscar Marks, of Canton, Mo., had charge of the music, and our people were highly pleased with him. The thing that was of great moment to us here was the fact that these men went in and out among us, living the gospel they preach and sing.

At a meeting of the church members Brother Violett raised about $300 from the new members for the current expenses of the church, and the church voted a raise of $200 on the pastor's salary.

Great Success at Shreveport, La.

We have just closed a good meeting at Shreveport. We had engaged Brother Harlow, but while on the train en route to this place he was called to the bedside of his son in New Mexico, and we were at our wits' end to know what to do. We learned that A. L. Crim was at Beaumont, Texas, and although we knew nothing about him, determined to try him if he was obtainable. With great reluctance he consented to come. The congregation had been wrought up to a high pitch of enthusiasm for a Harlow meeting, and the change to an unknown man was a damper, and many feared a failure. Still, they determined to have success if possible; and we had immense audiences from the beginning, and gradually Brother Crim worked his way into their hearts. Professor Ridenour, who was singing with Brother Harlow, kept his engagement and added much to the success of the meeting. One hundred and one were added to the church, greatly increasing our strength and power. Claude L. Jones, the indefatigable, organized here eight years ago with eleven members. Now we number 450 and have become a working church.

Shreveport is the commercial center of a large territory, and we expect to make it a center of large religious influence by employing an assistant minister to go out after various missions in this territory.

Our success here is due, under God, to the unselfish devotion of Brother Jones. He stands high with all the people because he lets his light shine. JAMES JEFFRIES.

FAITH AND WORK AT BRYAN, TEXAS.

The Bryan Christian Church has just closed a most successful revival meeting. It lasted thirteen days and there were forty-five additions, mostly upon a confession of faith. H. E. Wilhite and E. C. Tuckerman were our evangelists. Mrs. Wilhite conducted a Bible drill that was very helpful and instructive. The pastor and church are very highly pleased with the work of these successful evangelists.

We laid the corner stone of our new $12,000 church Friday, June 21. This handsome new white pressed brick church takes the place of the old structure that has served the church since 1879. The Christian Church was organized here in 1869 by Dr. Carroll Kendrick, who preached for the church for several years. Among the preachers who have served this church are Williams, Bagley, G. Lyle Smith, Hopkins, J. L. Andrews, Jewell Howard, J. L. Crane, and the present pastor, James A. Challenner. The church has had a checkered history. Many of the best members have moved away or died, and at times there was almost disorganization. When the present pastor took charge, January 1, there was only a handful of members, and they were discouraged and some of them thought of taking membership with other churches. But new life began to show itself, and all resolved to second the efforts of the pastor, and a building committee was appointed, with J. A. Myers as chairman. Plans were laid by them and one rainy Sunday the pastor called for money, and more than $5,000 was quickly subscribed by those present for the building, and the amount was added to from day to day. The revival meeting was planned, Wilhite and Tuckerman secured, and the above results are now a matter of history. Before this meeting there were but seventy-five members on the revised church rolls. The Bryan church now pays its pastor $75 per month salary, and pays it promptly, besides furnishing a parsonage. The future of the church is exceedingly bright, and the watchword is "Forward."

James A. Challener.

New Christian Church, Bryan, Texas.

JAS. A. CHALLENNER, Pastor.

COLLEGES.

Berkeley Bible Seminary.

The seminary has done its mead of service during the past year. The enrollment of students was quite varied: (1) Regular students giving all their time to the seminary, 19; (2) Students from co-operating seminaries, 19; (3) University students taking popular courses, 11; (4) Others, 4; total, 54.

Besides these, Bible Chair work has been done in the local Y. M. C. A. by members of the faculty. The emphasis of interest, however, has been in the strictly ministerial studies in which several of the young men have reached marked distinction. We look forward to the new year which begins August 20 with high hopes. We expect to have an increased faculty and added facilities.

HIRAM VAN KIRK.

Missouri Christian College.

One of the most successful years in the history of Missouri Christian College rounded to a finish at the fifty-eighth commencement on May 30. A class of ten received diplomas from the Academic Department, and one young lady and one young man from the Music Department. J. P. Pinkerton, in his usual happy and impressive style, preached the Baccalaureate and Undegraduate sermons. The Commencement address was delivered by L. J. Marshall, of Independence, Mo., and in thought and delivery was worthy of the speaker and his audience—a practical presentation of right living and a call to duty. Mr. Marshall happily introduced himself to his auditors by saying he purposed in his speech to be practical; he had married a practical college girl, who had taught him to be practical. In illustration, she had made him the promise of a handsome present for a birthday. The day came, but no present was to be seen. Breakfast closed on the morning of the eventful day with only a notice that he must yet wait; church time came, and still no present. At last, a little late, his wife, arrayed in a gown faultless in choice and make, emerged and standing before him in such attitude as strikingly to display the perfection of the beautiful costume she wore, demurely said: "This, dear husband, is your birthday present." There is reason to believe the gentlemen of his audience will remember his speech, especially on birthday anniversaries.

Miss Margaret Davis and Miss Bessie Hull acquitted themselves very gracefully in the valedictory and salutatory essays.

An enthusiastic meeting of the Board of Incorporators was held on Wednesday, when Brother T. H. Capp was continued in his good work as solicitor and financial agent. The receipts of the year were larger than for any year during the present administration.

For the coming year a strong faculty is announced and the course of study has been lengthened to meet university and college entrance requirements. During the summer many improvements will be made in the buildings and on the grounds.

William Woods College.

The session of 1906-1907 was by far the most prosperous in the history of the institution. There were enrolled 242 pupils. Of this number 195 were boarders. More than fifty girls were assisted in their education. The curriculum has been adjusted to articulate with the University of Missouri. The faculty represents some of the best institutions in the country, Missouri University, Wellesley and Randolph-Macon College of Virginia.

The departments of music, art and expression are amply equipped. The erection of the D. M. Dulany auditorium at a cost of nearly $30,000 is the crowning improvement of the session. Apart from this more than $7,000 was expended in other improvements. Dr. W. S. Woods at the close of the year gave his check for $9,000 to meet expenses incurred by the growth of the institution. He was also generous enough to duplicate every gift in the erection of the auditorium.

Six acres have been added to the campus, which gives room for four tennis courts and a large hockey field. Other improvements are contemplated during the summer. The patronage of the institution represents fifteen different states. The estimated value of the plant is now $125,000. There were graduated from the institution during the session twenty-seven in the literary department, four in the piano department, one in voice culture and three in domestic science.

The Ten Commandments—Duties Toward Men.—Exod. 20:12-17.

Memory Verses: 12-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Lev. 19:18.

The last six commandments lay down the fundamental requirements of a simple moral code, without which it is impossible for men to live together in civilized society.

One great contribution which Israel made to the development of religion was the idea that religion includes conduct. It is not all ritual and observance. Primitive religion ordinarily exhausts itself in performances designed to secure to the worshiper the favor and help of the deity. This is usually conceived as something akin to magic. By such and such incantations, genuflections and observances, by the burning of incense, the offering of sacrifices or the repetition of approved formulae, the aid of a superhuman ally may be gained. This is the sum total of religion, according to the primitive mind. And with many people who are in other respects civilized this limited idea of religion still persists. The widest gap between the lowest and highest form of religion has been bridged when it has been learned that conduct, morals, the relation of man to man, are the vital part of religion.

This idea the Hebrew people began to grasp at an early period in their development. The commandments contain a strong statement of it. The priests and professional religionists constantly and increasingly emphasized the other side, and it was the work of the prophets to renew the vision of this great truth, though in doing so they often necessarily came into collision with the official teachers of religion. In the later days of Judaism the priestly notion became dominant and the teaching of Jesus, with its constant emphasis on conduct and life, came as a new and revolutionary doctrine.

"Honor thy father and mother." The most fundamental of all social relations is that of the family, and especially that of parent and child. The family is in peril to-day. In the interest of religion, morals and civilization, it must be restored and preserved. Children must honor and obey their parents. Parents must be worthy of the honor and obedience of their children. The relation of parents to each other must be such that the family can fulfill the divinely appointed mission. With the fifth commandment may be joined the seventh, which enjoins personal purity in the relations of the sexes, not only for the sake of the righteousness of the individual, but as a necessary condition of the preservation of the family.

"Thou shalt not kill." Primarily, this is an injunction against actual murder. It teaches the sanctity and value of human life. The prohibition includes the subtler as well as the gross and visible forms of attack on human life. Only in moments of crude passion does the temptation to crude and bloody murder become effective in any man. Most of us never feel it at all. We are restrained by fear, by squeamishness, by good taste, quite as much as by religion or morals. Our sensibilities are unpleasantly affected by the sight of suffering and we have no inclination to dip our hands in blood. But many murders are committed in which the murderer never sees the victim. The most numerous are those industrial and economic murders, whose motive is greed of gain. The sixth commandment backs up the pure food law. It runs with full force against the sale of poisonous "medicines," the maintenance of unsanitary conditions in shops and factories, the failure to introduce known safety-appliances in transportation and manufacturing establishments.

There are two commandments relating to property: "Thou shalt not steal" and "Thou shalt not covet." Next to the sanctity of human life, the progress of civilization requires the safety of property.

"Make ye sure to each his own,
That he reap what he hath sown."

When property is unsafe, the motive to effort is gone, and with that goes a great means of building character.

Theft impoverishes the thief even more than the victim, for it robs him of the salutary conviction that honest work is the price of acquisition. In the same way a successful throw at the gambling table is a great calamity to the winner, for it assures him that work is not the only or even the best road to wealth.

Covetousness is incipient theft. It is the form of theft that cowards practice. Lacking the nerve to take what is not theirs, they yet continue to desire it. Their restraint is fear rather than principle. Like Macbeth, they "would not play false and yet would falsely win." They are at heart dishonest, and to the sin of dishonesty they add the sin of "the unlit lamp and the ungirt loin." If theft is wicked, covetousness is both wicked and contemptible, the crime of little souls.

"Thou shalt not bear false witness." False witness is both theft and murder, for a man's reputation is, in a sense, his dearest possession and in a sense his very personality. The malicious lie is a murderous dagger-blow aimed at reputation, and a base attempt to steal that which impoverishes the victim without enriching the thief.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

The Lawlessness of Sin.

Topic July 17. 1 John 3:1-6.

Sin is lawlessness. "Sin is the transgression of the law." "All unrighteousness is sin." These two apostolic statements cover the whole ground. If there is anything you think is not included in these two scriptures there is still another: "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Put in plain language, recklessness is sin. And there is a vast deal of this sort in the world. Pessimism is sin. The men and women, young or old, who have lost faith in God, in themselves, in their fellows, are the ones who rush headlong into riotous rebellion against restraint, in individual relations, in society, in the state. Sin is anarchy. By transposition, anarchy is sin. So, because all government, human and divine, rests upon law. Anarchy flies in the face of all existing laws. Anarchy says that the present organization of human society is essentially wrong. Granting that some forms of human law, of social customs, are wrong, social evils are never corrected by lawlessness. Sin can not atone for sins. Lynching is never justifiable. Blood vengeance belongs to the social age before the reign of social laws. It never was right, but custom sanctioned it, as custom sanctions some evils today, or condones them. The right adjustment of social relations, growing out of our complex civilization, has its perplexities. But anarchy is no solution of our problems, commercial, industrial, social, or otherwise. Lawlessness is sin, always and everywhere. Revolutions are stages in human progress only as they follow the trend of great principles, which formulate themselves into laws at the demands of far-sighted statesmen. Revolutions must follow the beaten paths of duty and high destiny, at the call of faith and freedom, not in reckless disregard of law, but in obedience to the demands of that Love, human and divine, which is the fulfilling of the law.

"All unrighteousness is sin." There is no such thing as purely negative goodness. God is love, and love is activity, energy. Love is the fulfilling of the law, not in any mystical sense, but in a very practical way. Love is the great moral and spiritual force in the universe. Love moves the heart to hope, the hand to toil, to suffer, to give. Love is the fulfilling of the law because it fills the law full of such unselfish deeds, such simple charities, such sublime devotions as shame the pretenses of those who say and do not—the hypocrites in the church or in society or in the state. We need to write it down in our books of social etiquette, in our manuals of citizenship, as well as in our gospel of grace and goodwill, that "All unrighteousness is sin." And we need also to emphasize that other expression of the great apostle, "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." It is of far wider application than the eating of meats offered to idols. It sweeps the whole field of Christian activities. It sets faith in the forefront of all the victorious forces that make for the elevation of human society and the salvation of the race. The heroes of faith are of the royal families of reformers in all ages, in every great issue, for the advancement of the race and for the final redemption of the race.

How to be made free from sin is the problem of the ages. The manifestation of Jesus Christ in the flesh to take away sin is the supreme proof of the love of God for the world. The apostolic statement is simple and sufficient: "He was manifest to take away sin; and in him is no sin." The acceptance of Christ as our atonement, our sin-offering, the divine-human sacrifice for sin, by faith and obedience, dignifies all our human relations and brings us into the fellowship of the spirits of just men made perfect. It is God's way of perfecting his people, and there is no other way that promises so much and prevails so mightily in the making of manhood, in the refining of womanhood. The philosophy of it is in the statement: "Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not." The proof of our abiding: "He that doeth righteousness is righteous." It is practical.

The Bible School at Work

Conducted by J. H. HARDIN,
State Bible School Superintendent of Missouri,
311 Century Bldg, Kansas City, Mo.

New Movement Sunday-school Classes.

One of the newest and best of all the movements for the increase in the attendance and power of the Sunday-school is that known as the Adult Bible Class Department. This department of the International work was organized at the last International Convention. The movement grew out of the well-known and painful fact that grown-up people have neglected the teaching work of the church almost entirely. They have considered it a place and a work for little children alone and they have felt that adults have no duties toward it nor interest in it. The so-called "Bible Classes" in these schools have been too often a failure and a farce. Small and precarious in attendance, weak in instruction, without purpose or enthusiasm, such classes have stood more as a problem than as a helpful factor in the Lord's work.

It is proposed to change all this. The Adult Bible Classes now existing are to be filled with new ideals, purposes, enthusiasm and methods. New classes are to be started, where there are none, and in many schools which have such classes others are to be added. These classes are to be recruited to the maximum. Numbers give power in spirit and co-operation. This movement is not a mere ideal. It is intensely practical. Many classes are being heard from with several hundred of members each. The movement is advancing rapidly. It is sweeping many hitherto inactive Christians into Christian service. It is doubling many schools. It is reviving many dead churches. It is saving souls. Now there are certain features necessary to the New Movement Adult Bible Class. Here are some of the more prominent of these:

1. Class Organization. To effect this the class should elect its own President, Secretary and Treasurer, and any other officers deemed necessary to conduct its affairs.

2. The class should have a separate room for its meetings, where this is practicable. Where it is not, then liberal space should be given it in the church or hall, so that it may be as little disturbed as possible. Room should be provided for it to grow.

3. The class should have a teacher who is not one of the officers, but whose sole duty should be to teach the class in the same course of lessons pursued by the rest of the Bible school.

4. While the class is to have its own rules and regulations, it is to be a part of the main school, and to move in harmony with the school's plans, and best interests. It is never to "set up for itself" as independent of the authority of the school.

5. The class should have for its purpose the building up of the school. If it adopts a constitution of its own, this should be so framed as to make it auxiliary to the school in all its work.

6. One main purpose of the class should be the enlistment of every member of the church and of all other adults in the community.

7. Every adult Bible class ought to have a number of standing committees, such as a committee to solicit members, one to welcome strangers, one to find employment for those out of work, one to visit the sick, and carry flowers, etc., etc. Committees will suggest themselves as the class faces the needs of the community. One of the foundation principles of action and organization in such a class is to find something for every member to do.

Having been appointed Superintendent of this department by the Interdenominational Sunday-school Executive Committee for Missouri, I desire to do all in my power to promote the movement in this state. I call upon all Superintendents and Teachers to assist me in this work.

Start a class in your school. The way to start is to start. Here are a few hints as to how to do it:

1. Gather up the old class which has fallen apart for lack of definite purpose and methods. Organize it. Give it a name. Start it on a new and larger life.

2. Call a council of all who can be gotten together, and get as many as possible to agree to take up the new movement and try to enlist others. Make it a special work of the school for a few weeks or months. It will pay.

3. Canvass the whole church and community, from house to house for members. Patiently explain it, and get the people to see that it is something different and that it can be done. Get the officers of the church to lead in the movement.

4. Get the minister to preach several sermons on the subject. Give him this for a text: "All the church and as many more in the Bible school."

But I am sure that, once the spirit of the movement gets into the hearts of earnest workers, the way to start will soon be plain to them.

I hope soon to have a supply of leaflets, etc., to circulate, giving information upon the movement. If in any way I can be helpful to any Superintendent, Pastor, Teacher or other worker, write me and call attention to the matter, and the help will be gladly given to the extent of my ability.

The Last Six Commandments.—

Exod 20:12-17.

F.	No Liar in Heaven.	Rev. 22:11-15.
S.	Covetousness.	Eph. 5:1-7.
S.	Topic.

In continuing the study of the relation of the ten commandments to us, we may add to the daily scripture readings Matt. 22:34-40. The whole table of the commandments is summed up in the obligation to love God supremely and to love our neighbor as ourselves. This definition of Jesus should locate us definitely and practically in our relation to these ancient words.

Read also Matt. 5:17-48; Mark 7:8-13; Luke 12:13-21; Romans 13:8-10; Ephes. 6:1-3, 4:25-28. In these scriptures you will find every one of the six commandments of the second table. By these scriptures they are made a part of the Christian obligation. From this reaffirmation of these words we learn to what large degree the old covenant anticipated the New, and to what wide extent the New is indebted to the Old.

Jesus in Matthew 5 insists that it was his purpose to fulfill these laws. He put more meaning into them for us than for Israel. This fact should be given serious consideration. We should not be content with the legal observance of these words, but should seek to know how much meaning Jesus put into them, how much meaning Paul discovered in them, and then determine that we will use them to the full of their possibilities.

What about the fifth? How do you treat your father and mother? Are you fulfilling this injunction which Paul repeats? Is your relation to your parents the stingy honor which the legal obligation calls for, or the abounding honor such as Jesus himself gave Mary and his foster father, Joseph?

Are you keeping the sixth commandment? Young man, do you go out hunting, to fish and to shoot for sport? What right have you to kill for your own pleasure any life which God gave to any humble creature? Young woman, why do you wear a dead bird on your hat? Does your pride compel some one to kill that your vanity may be gratified? If so you are a party to the crime of shedding innocent blood.

What about the seventh commandment? Are your thoughts and desires pure? Jesus is unsparing in his comments upon this commandment. Our modern marriage customs shamefully disregard it. If Jesus knew God's purpose in this commandment, there are many respectable adulterers in our churches.

Are you keeping the eighth? If you are employed, are you careful to give your full time and your best endeavor to your employer? Do you watch the clock and grieve if by chance you do not drop your work on the minute? Are you conscientiously careful to give a full equivalent in all of life's relations?

What about the ninth? Is your word absolutely unquestioned? Do you always keep your promises, if need be, at the cost of serious personal inconvenience? Can you be depended upon to keep your engagements, to fulfill every trust? Are you truthful in your pretensions? Have you one word for the face and another for the back of acquaintances? Are you what you appear to be?

What about the tenth? Are you quiet and content in the place where God has set you? Are you resting your burden of care upon him, or are you fretting yourself in envy?

In whatever way we view these old commandments, given first to Israel, the more we marvel at their content for us. We can hardly conceive a relation of life which they do not affect in the most practical way.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. The King's Daughters Year Book. By Margaret Bottome. Henry Altemus Co., Philadelphia.

While primarily intended as a daily companion for members of the International Organization, of which Mrs. Margaret Bottome is President, "The King's Daughters Year Book" is one to be desired by all who appreciate a helpful message for every day in the year. It is Mrs. Bottome speaking as she has spoken for years, saying on every page that all one needs is to find out how lovely and lovable God is, telling of the sunlight of our Father's love, how He Himself may be put into everyday affairs, and how one may be faithful in even a few things.

The Vest Pocket Standard Dictionary of the English Language. By James C. Fernald, L. L. D.. Funk & Wagnalls, publishers, New York. Cloth, 25c; flexible leather, 50c. Index, 5c additional.

We are glad to call attention to this excellent little book and point out a few of its features, as follows:

1. The giving of key-lines as guides for pronunciation at the bottom of each page, instead of referring the reader to the beginning or the end of the book, as other dictionaries do before he can find out what are the equivalents of the symbols used to denote pronunciation.
2. The respelling of every word of doubtful pronunciation, instead of using dots and dashes, curves and curlicues, above and below the letters which make up the vocabulary word.
3. Rules for guidance in punctuation and pronunciation.
4. The inclusion of irregular verbs with their principal parts all grouped together in one section.
5. The inclusion of a chart of the States, territories and possessions of the United States, with population, capital, date of admission or acquisition, etc.
6. The inclusion of prefixes and suffixes.
7. The gazeteer is more than a list of names of places with population. It is the only descriptive gazeteer published in a vest-pocket dictionary. It includes the names of all the cities in the United States having a population of 10,000 or more, and all foreign cities of 40,000 inhabitants. Every state of the Union is included with its area and capital, as well as every other important state throughout the world.
8. The inclusion of encyclopedic data on the Extra-Continental possessions of the United States, giving area, population, nationality of inhabitants, climate, products, exports, etc.
9. And in addition this valuable little book gives the names of the chief rulers of the world; largest cities in the world; parliamentary law at sight; birth flowers, telegraph, cable and wireless rates; countries and colonies of the universal postal union; interest tables, rules and laws; world statistics, maps of superior scope, area and coloring; Presidents and Vice-Presidents of the United States; weights and measures; the metric system; coinage of the world; foreign words and phrases, etc., etc., etc.

One Vacation. By E. Orlo Moore. Christian Publishing Co. Price, 50 cents.

Mr. Moore's little book is being well received. The St. Louis daily papers have given it very favorable reviews, and the Denver "Republican," giving about a column of space to it, says: "The book is descriptive of a journey over the 'Moffat Road,' and is already meeting with a large sale. This book dwells upon the trip from Denver to the crest of the Continental divide. It gives several beautiful views of the line between Denver and Sulphur Springs, including the scene at the crest of the divide, where banks of eternal snow remain during the entire summer."

Mrs. Eddy's Teaching on Sin.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

In your paper of May 9, you published a very scholarly article by Rev. J. M. Rudy, entitled, "Some Dangers of Christian Science," which I have read with much interest. The only danger, however, that I can find suggested is that Mrs. Eddy teaches the unreality of sin.

It is not my desire to enter into a theological discussion regarding the teachings of Christian Science, or the correctness of the same, but I would like to call the attention of your readers to just exactly what Mrs. Eddy means when she calls sin unreal.

Briefly, the Christianly scientific fact is that nothing is real except that which God created. The Bible tells us that "All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made." Mrs. Eddy teaches that the things made by God must be eternal because God is infinite. She teaches that if God made everything that was made, and in the end saw that it was "very good," he could not have made anything that was evil. Hence, sin could not have been made by God, and is, therefore, unreal. Mrs. Eddy also teaches that man is spiritual, and that the spiritual man "made in the image and likeness of God" can no more sin, or be sick, than can God in whose image and likeness he is made.

Now then, in speaking of mortal man, so-called, because there is no other way to describe the material man, Mrs. Eddy sets forth very clearly how he is the result of sin. But mortal man—that is, the material man that is born in the flesh—is no more a spiritual reality than is sin; and "the spiritual reality" all through Mrs. Eddy's writings is declared to be "the scientific fact." Mrs. Eddy teaches, therefore, that sickness, sin and death are unreal—that is, spiritually unreal—because God did not make them. If he had made them, they would be eternal, and no one would be able to escape them. Jesus not only taught us how to escape them, but he destroyed sickness and sin; and, if they had been of God, the Father, the Son certainly would not have destroyed them, because he said, "I come not to destroy, but to fulfill."

In closing, I might state briefly that Mrs. Eddy teaches that sin and sickness are overcome by one and the same metaphysical process, namely: by understanding the spiritual unreality of both. You will also find in the tenets of the Christian Science Church that Mrs. Eddy declares that "the belief in sin is punished so long as it lasts." All through Mrs. Eddy's writings she further teaches that the only way for mortal man to realize the unreality of sin is to cease sinning, and to further realize his absolute unity with God, Infinite Good.

It is unfortunate that there is not a more spiritual language than the one commonly employed, in which those who desire to write of spiritual things can express themselves. In order to grasp the full meaning of the letter of Mrs. Eddy's teachings, it is absolutely essential to imbibe the spirit. Very sincerely yours, JAMES A. LOGWOOD, Publication Committee for the State of Missouri.

[We are glad to give Mr. Logwood an opportunity to present Mrs. Eddy's view of sin, which is a very good test of the scripturalness and power of any religious system or movement. The statement that "nothing is real except that which God created," so far from being "the Christianly scientific fact," is no fact at all. Cities, railroads, steamships, constitutions and governments are made by men, and are all very real. This is not saying that they are eternal. Reality is not the antithesis of eternity. "The things that are seen are temporal (not unreal), while the things that are unseen are eternal." Sin is the abuse of human freedom and is a reality, or else there would have been no provision made for man's redemption from its ruinous consequences. Sin was not made by God, but God made man free and he abused that freedom by disobeying him. It is not "the belief in sin," that is, in the reality of sin—that is "punished so long as it lasts," but sin itself, and the love of sin. The mission of Christ in the world, and his death for our sins, emphasize the awful reality of sin as the deadly foe to human happiness and well-being. We regret to say that Mrs. Eddy's writings do not show that she has grasped the New Testament idea of sin and the divine remedy therefor. The idea of unreal sin is sure to lead to an unreal Savior, to an unreal atonement, and to unreal forgiveness; in a word, to an unreal Christianity.—EDITOR.]

LILLARD.

On Wednesday morning, May 8, after a serious surgical operation, death came to Mrs. John T. Lillard, one of the most widely known and generally beloved women of our city. Mrs. Lillard, who before her marriage, was Miss Sallie Williams, was born January 4, 1854, in Clinton, Tex. Two years later, she came with her parents to Bloomington, where she resided ever since. Her father, the late Hon. Robert E. Williams, was for many years a leading lawyer of Central Illinois, and her mother, whose maiden name was Martha Smith, possessed a beautiful character of winsome strength. On October 15, 1878, Miss Williams was married to Mr. John T. Lillard. Their wedded life was ideal in its happiness. Six sons grew up to useful and vigorous manhood in the refining and ennobling influence of that home. These sons are Robert W., of St. Louis; Thomas M., of Burlingame, Kan.; Erwin R., of Chicago; Paul; John T., Jr., and Charles Parke Lillard, of Bloomington. Besides these sons, Mrs. Lillard leaves one devoted sister, six brothers and her husband, to hallow the memory of her beautiful life. Mrs. Lillard was for more than forty years an aetive and loyal member of the First Christian Church of Bloomington. She possessed a sincerely and devoutly religious nature. From a child, she knew and loved the Scriptures, and in her home the Bible was read and revered as the great Guide Book of Life. Mrs. Lillard's faith was of the triumphant kind—the kind that says, "I do not ask to see the distant scene, one step enough for me." She trusted God and believed in his promises implicitly. When the crisis was confronting her, she met it as becometh a Christian. No one had more to live for, yet she said, "Whether I live or die, I am sure it is all right. God's will be done." For many years Mrs. Lillard kept a journal. It has been my privilege, as her pastor, to see some of its pages. On nearly every one is to be found evidences of her genuine, yet unostentatious piety. Following are the entries for four New Year's days: "January 1, 1904, Friday. As I begin my new year I cannot but feel anxious as to what is in store, but I can only pray God to give me grace and wisdom to meet the days as they come to me." "January 1, 1905, Sunday. God grant this may be a year filled with health and prosperity and happiness, and best of all with true love and God's peace for me and mine." "January 1, 1906, Monday. Another year stretches before me and I enter it with a heart full of gratitude to God for his many blessings and tender loving kindness. I have an overpowering sense of my own unworthiness and an intense desire to improve." "January 1, 1907, Tuesday. As I 'take my pen in hand' to begin my New Year's record, my heart is overflowing with gratitude to God for his wonderful kindness. I have a keen sense of my unworthiness, and a great longing to make the record of this year a more faithful record, to make it fuller of kindness and service to others." Mrs. Lillard was kind. Those who knew her best, say that if she ever wounded the feelings of a single soul, it was unintentional, and had she known it, pain would have been her portion. She was gracious. She was unselfish. It was just like her, while lying so ill in the hospital to share her flowers with a friend in a nearby ward in the same building. It was only characteristic of her lifelong gratitude to make the dying request that some token of her appreciation be given to each of the hospital nurses. But it was in her home that Mrs. Lillard's love shone luminously. Her's was a home-keeping heart. This mother was to these six sons all that great word can mean. She was a companion to each of them. She entered into all of their plans with zest, and when they needed sympathy, they went straight to her great mother's heart and found nealing and comfort. It is greater to be a good mother than to be anything else.

"A mother is a mother still,
The holiest thing on earth."

The funeral services were held on May 11, in the First Christian Church, in the presence of a large assembly of friends and relatives. The writer had charge of the services and was assisted by J. H. Gilliland, who for many years was Mrs. Lillard's pastor. The services were beautifully simple. The quartette choir sang, "The Home-Land," and "They are Gathering Homeward, One by One." At the suggestion of the family, the writer read, as the basis of his address, the following verses from First Corinthians, thirteenth chapter, which set forth in epitome the character of Mrs. Lillard:

"Charity suffereth long and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up.

"Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil.

"Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth.

"Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

"Charity never faileth."

EDGAR D. JONES.

PATTERSON.

Miss Ella Patterson died at the home of Mr. was Mrs. Lillard's pastor. The services were 3, 1907, after an illness of ten days of pneumonia, aged 51 years, 1 month and 7 days. Her early life was spent in and near Concord, Ill., at which place she became a member of the Christian church. Her life was a continuance of the profession she made in becoming a follower of Christ. The larger part of her life was spent in Jacksonville, Ill., as a nurse in the State Blind Institution, the Passavant Memorial Hospital and as a private nurse. When the Old People's Home was organized, she became the first matron, serving two years. She then came to Monmouth, Ill., to be with her parents in their declining years, and here took up the work of private nursing again, her services being in demand almost constantly. While caring for a pneumonia patient, she contracted the same disease, which caused her death. Her earnest Christian life, her close adherance to the faith and her tender care of sufferers made her a friend of all with whom she made acquaintance. "She went about doing good." D. E. Hughes, minister of the Monmouth, Ill., Christian church, officiated both at the home in Monmouth and at the church in Concord, Ill., where the remains were taken and put to rest. Her sisters, Miss Gertrude Patterson, Mrs. C. J. Burton, Mrs. Cora Halpin, Mrs. Clara Brockhouse and Mrs. Mary Filson, and one brother, William, and her father and mother are left to mourn her loss.

STOW.

Albert Cheney Stow was born July 5, 1810, at Munroe Falls, Summit County, Ohio, and died within two miles of the place of his birth, June 6, 1907. He lacked only twenty-nine days of being 97 years old. His ancestry was English on both sides. Lord Thomas Stow and Rev. Calvin E. Stowe, the husband of Harriet Beecher Stowe, were of the same family, only a little nearer the beginning. When William Stow, Albert's father, came to Ohio in June, 1809, he made the journey with his family with a yoke of oxen and one horse, and was over forty days on the road.

Albert was 24 years old when he married Almira Barrett.

Religiously, Mr. and Mrs. Stow were raised by Presbyterian parents, and were for several years members of the Presbyterian church, but since about the year 1846, sixty-one years ago, they have been faithful members of the Church of Christ, at Stow Corners. For many years Mr. Stow was one of the officers of this congregation. He was one of the real pioneers of Summit County, and his death has brought to a close one of the longest marriage records in the state and the nation. Nearly seventy-two years ago Uncle Albert and Aunt Almira were married.

Mr. Stow was trained to service as a farmer. In this community his life was an open book. Whatever faults and weaknesses he had were clearly seen and known by his neighbors and friends who for many years have lovingly called him Uncle Albert. He was a man with convictions on all subjects to which he gave his attention.

"Not as the World."

By E. A. Child.

Chapter III.—Modern Faith.

The ride from the railway station was a brisk one of about two miles, during which the president had opportunity to rehearse the affair briefly, saying as they drew up to the steps of the dormitory:

"James has done more for this institution, by his manly stand, and this tragic ending, than a generation of preaching could have possibly done."

Crowds of students stood in hushed attention to know the latest word, and the doctor came out into the hallway saying: "He fell into a calm sleep about an hour ago, and it is my judgment that we had better not allow any one to go into the room, or to make any disturbance until some change may seem necessary. His life depends upon it, and even his friends will no doubt give up the pleasure of seeing him for an hour, if it means his life, I am sure."

"Ladies, this is Dr. Reid, who is a returned missionary from Turkey.

"Doctor, this is James' mother, and this is a trained nurse who will be in attendance at Mrs. Gordon's request," said the president in a subdued tone.

"What have you done for him, doctor?" was the first question the mother asked.

"Upon examination I found three ribs badly stove in, which I succeeded in bringing to place as I had not hoped to do at first. His frozen hands I have had bandaged properly after finding that the frost had disappeared from them in a marvelous way, which I do not understand. Were it in the days of miracles I should say that one has certainly been performed. I was at first positive that they were frozen so badly that it would be necessary to amputate them. But we can tell better after finding how great a region of the flesh has been and still is involved. However, I do not anticipate that such a course will now be necessary, owing to the rapid change that has seemed to be coming over the patient since about a quarter to ten."

Mrs. Gordon and the nurse exchanged significant glances, while President Brown led the way to the drawing room, and seated them before a glowing fireplace, where a dozen nimble hands were ready to take their wraps.

"On learning that you are a returned missionary, doctor, I am confident that you will be in sympathy with what I am strongly impressed to confide to you at this, the beginning of our acquaintance," said Mrs. Gordon.

"I am a firm believer in the Word of God, and have been led to hold the promises as literally true and applying to those who, in Christ, claim them by faith. I accept all that Christ has purchased with his redemptive blood, as belonging to me and my children. Not that I can claim any superior right or exclusive privileges which may not apply to any redeemed soul who has accepted the finished work of the Cross, but relying entirely upon what Christ has been made to us, as Paul puts it: 'Wisdom from God, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, even the redemption of our bodies,' in this life while God has a purpose for us here in the mortal frame."

"I am glad to have the privilege of hearing this, my good woman," said the doctor, "and of becoming acquainted with an exponent of these views, particularly one who lays the basis with such certainty upon the word of God and the redemption of Christ. Kindly proceed to state your position. I have long wanted to know this way more certainly, but I confess to having had serious doubts thrust upon my mind by the inconsistencies and vagaries of certain would-be exponents of this doctrine, and have been rather inclined to hold it in abeyance."

"Just so, doctor. Satan has ever been alert to counterfeit the true coin of the Kingdom, and thus either use it to his own purpose or debase its currency with the children of God. It has ever been so with all truth in the time when there was great need of its proper emphasis, the evil one has tried to destroy its force by making it seem false to those to whom it was sent. Thus it was with Him, who was the truth. Satan blinded the hearts of His own people, that they received him not, but to as many as received him, he gave them the wisdom of God and the power of God, for healing and holy living, even to them that believed on his name.

"Doctor, he is just the same to-day. His seamless robe is beside every bed of pain, the same as is his saving power extended to every one who calls upon him for salvation from sin.

"The prophet Isaiah foretold his mission as that of Savior from sin and healer from sickness. And the inspired Matthew quotes Isaiah as authority, when setting forth the mission of our Savior upon earth, in these words: "His name shall be called Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." Such was the Emanuel, or God-with-us, of which Isaiah in another place spoke. And he also foretold 'He himself took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses.' And when the Apostle Matthew saw them bringing unto him the sick at evening, when he healed all that were sick, he recalled that it was in fulfillment of Isaiah's words. (See Matthew 8:16, 17.)

"Truly, doctor, Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day and forever, for he is the Lord, who changes not.

"If the ills are not removed then it must be because God wills them, or because we have not complied with his will. In either case it would be inconsistent to seek release other than by submitting to the will of God, as revealed in the volume of the written word.

"Upon this basis the true believer can with confidence take his stand, and expect the Father of our spirits and the framer of our bodies to do for him abundantly above what he can ask or think, according to the promises.

"I do not say that persons to whom this faith has not been given, can do it, until they have surrendered at least to the will of God completely. It is said by our Master that the world could not receive the Holy Spirit, because it would not see him nor hearken to him. 'Not as the world' you know is the motto of God's children, and yet he is rich unto all who call upon him in sincerity. Yea, he has promised that whosoever comes unto him shall in no wise be cast out.

"I am satisfied, doctor, that multitudes do not come to him for salvation, much less for healing, because they have not so been taught. Error has obtained. It is generally taught that these things have no place in the world to-day because they have been supplanted by medical science.

"It could be as reasonably affirmed that the power for regeneration has been recalled since these schools of science and knowledge have met the needs of man through culture and ethical training."

"Would you do away with the physician then, in this holding?" asked the doctor.

"No," was the quick reply. "For the consecrated man of God there is great need to-day, to do as you have doubtless done in hundreds of cases. Not to give poisonous drugs, as a rule, but to enquire into the actual needs of the system and build up weak constitutions by proper nourishments and advice as to hygienic living. Even to pray the prayer of faith and teach the sick to rely upon the omnipresent Christ, for salvation, healing and clean living. To say as did Jesus: 'Behold thou art made whole: sin no more lest a worse thing come to thee.'

"I am not sure, doctor, but that the coming man is to be a physician. A man who can see the unseen and who will stand between the living and the dead and proclaim the way of life more abundantly."

"I can not tell you, Mrs. Gordon, how deeply thankful I am for this talk, which I have been drinking in in silence," said President Brown. "I, too, with Dr. Reid, have long wanted to hear this message. There is one question I desire to ask. Pardon me, but does not the absence of evidence to confirm this doctrine, in these days, militate against its reception, and make it quite probably a thing of the past. We have been teaching these years, you know, that such signs were given as a seal to the Master's mission, and as he fulfilled that, these were no longer needed and apparently had ceased."

"I will answer your question by some others," said Mrs. Gordon. "Does God's word teach it? It does not matter so much what man thinks or teaches, we ought to 'seek unto God on behalf of the living,' says the prophet. 'To the law and the testimony, if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.'

"Have we not a record for four hundred years after Christ ascended, of this power? Has it not been held and taught by the few all down through the ages? Martin Luther, John Wesley and others have left us records of answered prayer for the sick in their times. And even in our own time we are not without many infallible proofs, and yet the absence of these would not disprove the doctrine any more than would the absence of conversion disprove the plan of redemption. Would it not rather prove the unfaithfulness of men? Shall we not count God true and faithful to his promises, and leave the limitation with man?"

"I confess that I see the point, madam, and I am fully satisfied with your exposition," said President Brown. "There is yet one question I will ask you: Would not this practice, if perfected, procure immortality in this life? Beg pardon," said he, in the same breath, "I see the answer to my own question. It did not in the time of Christ, nor in the days of his apostles, for those who were raised from the dead and healed from sickness, died, else they would have continued to this present time."

"No, there is a limit in the Word, wherein it is appointed once for man to die, and we are only encouraged to ask according to the will of God. I regard the New Testament as his latest and perfect will. We are limited there with a provision for the final sleep of the faithful, but not until their work is finished, when they 'depart to be with the Lord,' 'and their works do follow them.' But, gentlemen, you will excuse me, I must be with my precious boy. I am trusting the Lord to spare him to us. That assurance was certainly given to me in the words of the Savior for Lazarus. We got it as we came: This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God that the Son of God may be glorified thereby."

The doctor led the way to the room where James was resting. Mother Gordon kneeled at the cot and kissed the bruised lips softly, and then with her hand upon his forehead she lifted her gentle voice up to God in prayer: "Father, thou who didst not spare thine only begotten Son, but gave him freely to redeem the world from sin and sorrow, I thank thee that thou hast spared my son, through him, at this time, even as thou hast granted thine handmaiden's prayers while she was yet calling. O Father, in the name of Jesus the Christ, let this recovery be speedy, and in full accord with thine own plan.

"Thou hast said in thy precious Word that if thy spirit dwell in us, he shall quicken this mortal body by his indwelling. By the power of thy mighty spirit let thy work of restoration in this bruised body be complete in thine own time and for thine own glory. Amen."

At the sound of her voice James seemed to arouse as from a sound sleep, and spoke the last words after her, "For thine own glory, Amen."

As he opened his eyes he saw his mother's face and looked bewildered. "It is mother, Jamie," said one with that tenderness which a mother's voice can alone command. "O, mother, I have had a wonderful vision and seemed to see and hear things which I can not tell about."

"No, Jamie, dear, do not try to now, you are too weak."

"Oh, yes, I remember," said he, as he stopped and thought. Lord, forgive them, they were under the influence of rum. I pray that they may repent and turn from their sins to God," he continued.

"Yes, yes, dear, but you must not talk nor exercise yourself now; mother is with you and you are safe. Sleep again."

So saying she gave him a nourishing drink and soothed his brow and he slept as soundly as a babe.

"If he sleep he shall do well," quoted Mrs. Gordon, for she seemed to do everything in accordance with some passage of Scripture, which found expression upon her lips as naturally as her common conversation.

Turning the lights down she beckoned the doctor aside and held a whispered conversation with him.

"His case is a marvel," said the doctor. "Under similar circumstances I have found the fever high and the patient delirious for days. And often in cases as severe as his was I have known them to collapse within a few hours. Perhaps I had better remain until morning, in any event, to satisfy myself of the results."

"I shall be pleased to have you follow the case carefully," said Mrs. Gordon. Upon which President Brown requested the doctor to take a spare room near by. This he did, and Mrs. Gordon and the nurse rested upon cots near the patient.

Legal "Dont's" for Wives.

1. Don't sign or indorse a note or agree to be surety for any debt, unless you are willing and can afford to pay the amount yourself. Nevery vary from this rule even in the case of your husband, your father, or your dearest woman friend.

2. Don't write your name on a blank piece of paper. Many women have done it and bitterly regretted it for the rest of their days.

3. Don't give an unlimited power of attorney to any one. If it is absolutely necessary to give one at all, be sure that it is given only for what it is needed, and limit the time as much as possible.

4. Don't do anything in business matters "for politeness," which your judgment tells you you should not do.

5. In short, don't give any promise or sign any paper whatever until you are sure you know the legal effect of it on yourself and your family.

6. Don't write anything, even in a friendly letter, which you would not be willing to have used as evidence in court. On the other hand, don't destroy any letter or paper which may have a bearing on a business matter.

7. Don't consent to your husband's assigning his wages. Don't make it necessary by extravagant living.

8. Don't buy furniture, books or anything else for which you can not afford to pay cash. If you think of buying on the installment plan, first estimate what the interest will amount to and add it to the price of the goods; then find out the cost of goods of the same quality at a cash store and compare the figures. Realize that you own none of the goods bought on the installments until you have paid for all, and that a failure to keep any portion of your agreement may cause you to lose all that you have paid.

9. Don't keep people, rich or poor, waiting for money you owe them. I could tell you some true and tragic stories, which would make an overdue dressmaker's bill a veritable nightmare to you.—Good Housekeeping.

"Getting Top o' Things."

By Belle Kellogg Towne.

The wind went straight through the brown cornstalks still standing in the field, causing them to shake and shiver, and went straight through the thin jacket of little Ben Gamble, and the thin, plaid shawl of little Maggie Gamble, trotting along by his side, causing them to shake and shiver.

"We can stand it, Meg, 'cause we know that part of endeavorin' is to stan' things we don't like, an' not make a fuss about it."

"We won't make any fuss!" piped little Meg in as chirky a voice as she could make go through her chattering teeth, and she gave a jerk to her shrunken red mitten, to draw it further over her wrist.

"It's hardest for ma. She hasn't got a lot o' folks standin' up close to her like we Endeavor felows have, makin' it ten times easier gettin' over things than though we's just alone, has she, Meg?" And now it was Benny's teeth that chattered, and Benny that strove to make his voice chirky.

"But those were awful nice sausages, weren't they, Ben, that Mr. Myers had hangin' up?" And the chirkiness in little Meg's voice was gone now, and a sob was in its place, and tear number one rolled down the chapped cheeks, and tear number two quickly followed.

"Now, see here, Meg. If you're goin' home snivellin' 'cause you can't have hot sausages for supper, when ma wants 'em just as bad as we want 'em, an' she havin' to bear the disappointment 'cause Mr. Tyce didn't give us the money for the shirts, I ain't goin' a step further. I'll take a cut to Ned Trundell's, and help make that woodchuck trap, an' you can tell ma just what you like." Straight as a bean-pole stood Ben, his head bridled, and his black eyes snapping. The little bosom under the plaid shawl quivered, and tear number three tumbled down.

"I guess I can stan' it, Ben!"

"Course you can stan' it! What do you go there to those meetin's at the schoolhouse for, pretendin' to be one of them Juniors, an' right down in earnest 'bout gettin' through things honor bright, if you can't stan' a little thing like sausages left out o' supper?"

"But there won't be no supper without we get the sausages; ma said so!"

"Huh! You trust ma for that! She never did get up a stump yet; an' if she did, I guess one supper more or less don't count for much. But it's bad enough havin' to tell mother we didn't get the money, after her sittin' up half the night to get them shirts done, without goin' home blubberin'. Don't we say, every time we stan' up an' repeat that pledge with the rest o" them, that we'll try to do—at least, that's the sense of it? And now you ain't tryin' no more'n one that don't take a pledge. You can try hard enough, Meg, if you want to."

The words were very masterfully spoken, but, for all that, Ben lifted a corner of the blue-checked apron under the plaid shawl, and wiped the tears away from his little sister's face as tenderly as a mother might have done.

When at last the tears stopped, and, after a sob well-nigh as big as the little girl herself, a long breath of relief was drawn, he said, helpfully:

"There, I knowed as how you could do it, if you only got a-top o' it. There is a great deal in gettin' top o' things, Meg, and we can get top o' not havin' sausages for supper, I reckon, even if our stomachs be a little hankerin'. And you see, if we get top o' it, then ma'll weather it; 'cause if she thinks we don't care, then she don't care—that is, not nigh so much."

And, having thus spoken, the brave little man clasped his sister's roughly mittened hand, and together the two trudged forward.

Fifteen minutes later they reached a weather-beaten house on the edge of a clearing; and, opening th door, Ben said quickly, as if bound to have the worst over:

"Here we are, ma; but you will have to wait for the money, 'cause Mr. Tyce ain't home."

The pale, tired-eyed little woman, placing the kettle over the cracked stove, turned quickly.

"Oh, didn't you get the money?" Almost despairing was the voice, and tears sprang to her eyes, but the next instant she turned that her little ones might not see the disappointment mirrored in her face.

"Oh, now, ma, 'tain't as though we weren't sure of it when he comes back," said Benny, bravely, taking a step toward his mother, and looking up pleadingly into the swimming eyes.

"But I am so tired, so faint. It is such a hard, bitter life!" And then she caught sight of Benny's brave look, and Meg's pitifully patient one; and, swift as a flash of a wing, the light came back to her face, the lips parted in a smile, and a beautiful touch of color swept the cheeks.

"Bless you, dears! If you can bear it, I guess I can." She reached and took the children in her arms and kissed them; and, though there were tears in the caress, Ben tossed his cap to the ceiling, crying exultantly, "Didn't I tell you, Meg, as how if you an' I stood it, ma would?"

"It's hardest for you, ma," put in little Meg, her face shining as she saw the success their effort had met with, "'cause you haven't got a lot of 'Deavorers standin' up close to you, 's Ben an' me has!"

"I guess I have!" said the mother, proudly, and now there was a glad, sweet ring in the voice that seemed to show defiance to any want or privation that might be in store for them. "If anybody's better backed by Endeavorers than I am, with Ben and you standing close, I'd just like to see them!"

Then they laughed, all three of them. What mattered it that there was not a sumptuous supper to be spread. Had they not each other, and were they not all Endeavorers, endeavoring to stand close to one another?—Junior Endeavor World.

Around the Gulf to Mexico.

New Orleans.

March 24. On the train coming from Marshall, Texas. Have ridden all night in the chair car. Wonder how people feel who ride in Pullmans? I suppose they are bloated with the pride of wealth and ease. At 9 o'clock last night we backed into the important city of Shreveport. Our car has a little smoking room with seats for only five gentlemen. Apparently every man on the car wants to sit for a smoke; they come and look in and go and come again. The first five occupants never budge, and one of them doesn't smoke. They pretend not to see the wistful faces that flit and hover about the narrow door. At 1 o'clock this morning we enter Alexandria, La. It is a town of such importance that it deserves a description. Looking from one side of the car I see a row of electric lights; from the other, a line of bulky freight cars. While the train waits I hear the trill of frogs. Fireflies hover in the gloom. Far to the right a great heap of straw is afire,—golden streamers, with a heart of blood-red. Evidently a live city!

I am anxious to see how Louisiana looks, but although it is morning, nothing is to be seen. A heavy vapor covers everything. Just below Baton Rouge Junction, coffee and sandwiches are brought on, the waiters plunging out of a white cloud. At 6 the mist begins to roll in great balls. It drifts over flat lands. The sun, like a sharp-edged blade cuts through, here and there, and you see its silver gleam before the vapor billows over it. Now the dense whiteness wraps itself about every car window, and now the sun-blade comes chopping through again. The car rushes on, the sun triumphs, and flat fields spread out before you, marked by deep parallel ditches. Between the ditches are green plants about a foot high; sugar cane. That is all you see for miles and miles; sugar cane and ditches, with occasionally a great stretch of water which is not a swamp, but a rice field. Here is the Mississippi river—the same old river it was when I was born near it some summers ago; doesn't seem to have grown any. The train starts across the bridge and suddenly stops. I poke my head out the window with the air of an experienced traveler and see the water racing along in front of the cowcatcher. In fact we are not upon a bridge, but a ferry boat. Here is a double ride,—train and boat at once. Of course this is mere child's play to our gulf-vovage soon to begin, but one may enjoy it while affecting stoicism.

New Orleans! The city of history, romance and song. We go into the dirty little waiting room with its flies and dust, and try to find out about our steamer; it will sail, we hear, in two days. We secure a hackman who puts Jebly's tricycle in front, and away we go to the steamship company's office to find out for sure if the steamer will sail in two days. Our hackman is named Mr. Buckley. He is a gray-haired boy of about 60, full of inexhaustible monologue. As he drives us along he keeps the stream flowing. When the wheels and hoofs do not deafen us, we sometimes catch a few of his words. We drive across a dock where baled cotton, pressed and unpressed, stands waiting for its steamer. A ship is moored at the edge of the dock with the staircase reaching to the dusty boards; just such a one as we will sail on. A lady carrying a valise comes to the foot of the stairway and a midshipman, or second mate, or something waves her aloft, just as we shall be waved aloft when our "City of Mexico" sails for Tampico. As Mr. Buckley drives us from the rougher part of the river district, we gather that he is telling us about the time the Yankees were in the city. We get the word "Carpetbag." Also from his gusty eloquence a few phrases are wafted to us indicating that he does not believe the mosquitoes played any part in the yellow fever plague. "It was all graft," he says, addressing his horses, "all a political job." It was no use telling him we couldn't hear what he said. When we came to the steamship office and went up, we found to our dismay that the boat sailed only twice a month, and it had left only the evening before. Oh, Gravette, Gravette! If thou hadst not kept us there nine and a half hours! So there was to be no gulf-voyage after all; we couldn't wait; there was a pressing need to make the round trip as soon as might be. With gloomy hearts we came back to the hack and found Mr. Buckley talking to his horses. He was simply bubbling over with words and he had to keep wiping his mouth with the back of his hand. His eyes twinkled, and a wise old smile was always running along the wrinkles about his mouth. I think it made him glad just that he was Mr. Buckley.

We would have to buy new tickets from New Orleans to Mexico City—by land. And Morton didn't have enough money to get his; and Jebly and I didn't have enough to lend. So we went to a telegraph office where Morton telegraphed home for money. In spite of our disappointment, I think his telegraphing for money sort of cheered him up. It sounded so prosperous. And it was something to tell about. "When I was in New Orleans I telegraphed home for money," etc. Before securing a rooming place we decided to hunt up a Plattsburg man who lived in New Orleans. He was not a man that had ever spoken to me if he could avoid it when we both lived at home in Plattsburg. I don't mean that he disliked me in the least, but our spheres of life were so remote that he hardly knew I was on the earth. Still, it seemed the thing to hunt him up while in this foreign land. So we drove twenty blocks along Canal street and then plunged into the French quarter and bounced and dumped over the cobble-stones while Mr. Buckley burst into one hilarious reminiscence after another for his sole edification. I wish I could have heard one of his thousand tales from start to finish, but as he always addressed his face to the horses, sometimes a block would be passed before his words came down to us. At last we came to the address of our old-time acquaintance, and great was my pleasure to learn that he was out of the city. We were spared the pains of pretending to be glad to see each other. We were driven out of the French quarter back the twenty blocks of Canal street, and came to the St. Charles Mansion where we had already secured our room. We gave Mr. Buckley $5, at least half of which was spent on going to see the man we didn't want to see, and he left us with regret and with urgent request that we call on him at 721 Julia street, whenever we wanted to spend another $5. "If I'm not there, leave word with the old woman," he said. I forgot to tell that as he was driving us through a tenement district in quest of the man we had once seen, the boys in the street shouted after us, "The bobba is looking fah you! The bobba is looking fah you." As we did not understand this, the boys set out on a run after us, shouting, "The bobba is aftah you!"

Mr. Buckley was immensely delighted, and shouted down from his high seat that I was the man the bobba was looking for. I wanted to know who the bobba was. "You'll have to excuse those boys," he said with tender pride, "they're just full of mischief. If they see a man wearing a straw hat before Easter Sunday,—that's next Sunday,—they cry, 'Dewey, boom! Dewey, boom!' And they keep crying it till the fellow generally is glad to get off the street. Same way, when a fellow has pretty long hair, they say that the bobba is after you." That evening I went to a "bobba" and had my hair cut.

The St. Charles Mansion has an elevator and that was convenient for Jebly. We occupied the same room. There was a pretty fireplace, a little window high from the floor with iron bars, though one must have scaled a pretty long ladder to have been in danger of falling out, and another window, opening like the door, upon a balcony that circled round a court. It was a large room and well furnished, for $1.50 a day. We laughed at the mosquito-bars swinging over the beds, for April was some weeks off. "I'm not going to sleep under that thing," said Morton. I asked the elevator boy if there were any mosquitoes. "No, sah," he answered. It looks like there might be, for it is as hot as August at home, and half the gutters are open sewers. As you drive along beautiful broad streets, you see the green and yellow water standing under sluggish scum on either hand; and you smell it, too. No wonder there are no wells in the city! People who do not use the city water have cisterns standing in their back yards upon posts. They look like enormous barrels, iron-hooped. However, the city is spending $18,000,000 in putting its sewerage under ground, and about half the work is done; while immense ditches and canals show where the good work is going on. We had an ill dinner at a restaurant, then went to the station to find that our train left at 11 the next morning. "By that time," says Morton, "I'll have the money I telegraphed for." And I thought he strutted just a trifle. Coming from the station—not the dirty one,—you pass a green hill embroidered with full bloom roses. Four stone terraces rise from its summit, and from them a high pillar; upon the pillar stands the figure of a man with folded arms. It is Lee. His stone face looks upon beautiful St. Charles street with its huge palms and magnolia trees, behind which rise imposing buildings with graceful balconies and cool separated columns.

That night we went down St. Charles street to where it empties into Canal street, the main thoroughfare and dividing line of the city. Canal street has four street car tracks in the middle, and every one of them is doing business all the time. On each side of the tracks is a carriage way, about 75 feet wide. A double row of electric lights go all the way up and down Canal street for more than three miles. Apparently nobody had gone to church, for the scene was one of endless variety and countless multitudes. The four lines of street cars were whizzing, jangling bells and flashing in a bewildering manner. More pretty women than I had seen in all my life were crossing the street or passing in misty clouds of fluffy white up the pavements. A phonograph in front of the Thaw-White Moving Pictures was giving us, "Here am I, waiting in the church." Automobiles were flying past on their way to Toulane street, where the opera house may have been open. The shop windows were on Sunday night display and showed first class lines in stock. There were innumerable ice cream resorts, all in full swing. The customary line of hacks were drawn up beside historic St. Charles hotel. But after all, the most interesting element of all the brilliant scene was the feminine touch of remarkable beauty. There ought to be some way to get it scattered over the country. This concentration of charming grace and appealing features is all very well for New Orleans, but what about those who live in Arkansas? When we went back to our room late that night, and the streets were level dreams for Jebly's tricycle, we sat down in our room to talk about it. At first it seemed that the zizzing of the electric cars was still ringing in our ears, but in a mighty short time we discovered that what we heard was the song of the night mosquito. He was in the room in great evidence. He was all about us. He was after us. So we fled for the hills, that is, the swinging bars that hung in festoons from the attic ceilings of our beds.

Adopting a Grandmother.

By E. H. Stratton.

A group of girls stood in the school yard as the democrat wagon went by briskly, drawn by a big gray horse which was one of the "town pair." In the wagon sat the man who ran the "town farm" and a patient, white-faced old lady, while a small hair-covered chest occupied the place of the back seat.

"They are taking old Mrs. Goodell to the poorhouse," said Kate Adams in a hushed voice.

"Yes, you know her husband died last week and the folks say she mustn't live there alone, so I suppose they have coaxed her to go. Nobody wants to board her, though father says likely her house will sell for enough to keep her as long as she lives," added Amy Ames, with a pitying look at the tremulous old face.

"It's the poorhouse all the same if her board is paid, and she'll never feel right there," nodded Jennie Annas.

"It's too bad, that's just what it is!" cried impulsive Nellie Ellis. "Have you forgotten what nice times we always had at their house? I haven't. If her son and daughter had lived she never would have been going to the poorhouse. Dear me, it is awful to get old and have no friends! Love is what she needs."

"Yes, she did everything to make us have a good time—always, girls! Now she is old and friendless and no one seems to think of making her happy. I know she would rather die than go to the poorhouse to-day," said May Winship, with a questioning glance around the circle.

"Well, say it! We all know you are thinking of something," exclaimed Belle Hughes.

"And the sooner you tell it, the sooner we'll know," laughed Nettie Stetson.

"Yes, I have a plan—but you may not like it," admitted May. "People adopt children, why can't we adopt a grandmother? We could make Mr. Goodell's lot easier to bear."

"What a queer notion! Explain it, if you please," cried Kate.

"It is simply this, girls. Some of us can go to see her every day. We can carry her books and fruits and flowers. We can fix her room so that it will be cozy and cheerful, and—we can love her," returned May earnestly.

"It's the love that she needs most—and she is such a dear old lady!" nodded Belle. "I think she might like to have her room filled with her own things, instead of selling them as I heard talk of. Father is one of the overseers, and I can manage that."

"There are seven of us—one for every day in the week," said Nettie, eagerly. "I mean that we can take one day for our especial one, when we must run in to see her anyway, and go as often as we can besides."

"But when and how shall we adopt her?" asked Belle, with a nervous laugh.

"To-night, after school," said May, emphatically. "There's no use in putting off a good thing. Then she is sure to be lonesome to-day, you know. We can ask the folks at noon, but I'm sure that they will all be willing."

The bell rang and they rushed into the schoolroom, their girlish faces bright with the excitement of a good deed. That night Mrs. Goodell, who had ben summoned to the matron's room on some pretense, returned to find her own room wearing a strangely familiar aspect, and met the smiling, loving glances of seven girls.

"We remember all the good times we used to have at your house, and we've come to adopt you as our own grandmother," said May, as they crowded around her.

"What! Perhaps I'm a leetle hard of hearing—but I don't understand this," protested the astonished old lady, their soft kisses thrilling her white cheek.

"Why," exclaimed May, laughing and crying at the same time, "we've adopted you, and now you're our grandmother! You are our Grandma Goodell as long as you live—and we hope it will be a long, long time."

"And we're coming to see you every single day, and make you as happy as we can," added the others in a breath.

"God bless you, dearies," was all the poor old lady could manage to say.

"And then there was a wet day of it," Kate told her mother that evening. "She cried and we cried, and when she looked around and saw the things that father carried over, the cried all the more, and so did we! Then she kissed us all and declared that she was crying for joy! O, how easy it is to make folks happy!"

And Grandma Goodell lived for three long, happy years, blessed by the unfaltering love of the girls who adopted her that day.

THE UNIVERSAL ELEMENTS OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION

Charles Cuthbert Hall

"Amid the flood of books on the subject of religion there appears every few years one book that dwarfs all others, one that crystalizes the thinking of the Christian world. Such is this book. This man separates himself from the bewildering crossed paths and standing free, grasps clearly the course that is being followed by the Christian age of which he is a part. His knowledge is cosmopolitan and accurate, his logic is clean cut and simple, and his conclusions convincing and optimistic, springing from a faith at once simple and profound in its certainty that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of the world of men who are his possession." $1.25 net.

Under-the-Table Manners.

It's very hard to be polite
If you're a cat.
When other folks are up at table,
Eating all that they are able,
You are down upon the mat—
If you're a cat.

You're expected just to sit,
If you're a cat.
Not to let them know you're there
By scratching on the chair,
Or a light, respectful pat—
If you're a cat.

You are not to make a fuss,
If you're a cat.
Though there's fish upon the plate,
You're expected just to wait:
Wait politely on the mat—
If you're a cat.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

We are going to give another ice cream social for our orphan, just as we did last summer. When Charlie's mother was dying, one of the last wishes she expressed was that her little boy and girl might be educated. The little girl, Bessie, is now living with a family in southern Missouri, who are giving her all necessary care; but Charlie has never been adopted, and as he has only one limb he is not able to take part in the rough-and-tumble game of life, such as usually engages boys left without parents and without a cent in the world.

That is why the Advance Society is trying to educate Charlie. We want to make that mother's prayer come true. And if we are able to do it, it will be God answering the prayer, after all, won't it?

But it's pretty hard to interest people in an orphan whom they have never seen except upon a printed page. However, lots of people have taken interest in Charlie—children in particular—and I have received mites from all over the land to be used in buying his clothes and mending his crutches, and paying his way to visit his sister and to take other much-needed rests from the close city life.

This year I wish you would do a little extra for Charlie, and I will tell you why: It was a great disappointment to him, naturally, that he didn't get to take a vacation and a trip to see Bessie. He didn't complain, but I know it was a pretty severe test to his courage, because I know how I'd have felt had I been in his place. But the ladies of the Orphans' Home need him to help them move into their new quarters, so he has to stay in St. Louis. It will be all the same to him a hundred years from now, of course, but he must worry through these years before he gets to where he won't care.

But there is something for Charlie a good deal more important than vacations, and that is an education. He would rather have that than anything else, and it is we who are trying to fit him up for a useful life. Last year we gave him an ice cream social on August 3. Everybody who couldn't come (and nobody came) sent 10 cents for a saucer of the best ice cream in Bentonville. The brand of the ice cream was called Charlie's Education Fund. That ice cream took in $179.05. That's a pretty good nest egg for an education, but there'll have to be some more eggs laid before we can hatch out a business course of any great extent. Besides what was taken in at the social, he already had an education fund which had been drained for other expenses till it was down to $48.40. Therefore, Charlie has at present, toward an education, $227.45.

Now, let's raise that. Who wants to have a hand in educating an orphan? Who wants to be one among thousands who are joining together with their dimes from Japan to Seattle to help a little boy make a true man? Then come to our ice cream social, August 3.

Of course, nobody wants you really to come, you know. This is the way you do it: You conclude to buy a saucer of ice cream at this social, and you send me the price for that saucer, knowing that you'll get no ice cream, and I put the money in Charlie's education fund. You say, "But I want some ice cream!" Surely you don't expect to get sure-enough ice cream at any kind of a social, do you? That frozen mixture isn't made of cream. No, no. You go to a social to have a good time, and if you can't have a good time by coming to this one (in imagination) I don't know where you would be satisfied. You won't have to sit in a hot room, or listen to instrumental solos, or hear long and tiresome speeches. You can just get up and go whenever you please. Now, do come!

You say, "But what am I going to get for my fifteen cents?" (Please note how artfully we have introduced the subject of what's to pay). What do you get? Not cornstarch and blue milk, doled out by the gill, to be sure; but the satisfaction of knowing that you are helping the helpless, and that if you hadn't sent that 15 cents for a saucer of ice cream Charlie would lack just that much of knowing all about book-keeping and shorthand and typewriting, and partial payments, and those other distressingly useful matters that help to make life worth living.

You say, "But why do I have to give 15 cents for a saucer, when last summer I only gave 10 cents?" I don't know what makes you so full of dispute and contention to-day, but I can answer you without hesitation. It's the Pure Food law. Everything has gone up. Not that the food is purer, but there is a law, and out of respect to it we must charge higher for things. The 10-cent magazines are now selling for 15 cents, and we are obliged to charge 15 cents for this ice cream because we want to get Charlie educated, and the price of education has gone up like everything else.

Last summer some gave ice cream socials in the towns where they lived—socials where real ice cream was eaten—for Charlie's benefit. The people were told all about Charlie, and they came and bought the ice cream, and when the ones who were giving the social had paid themselves for expenses, they sent what they had cleared to me to be put in the rest of our social receipts. That was a great help. Couldn't somebody reading this give a little social to neighbors and friends, and get something together bigger than 15 cents? Give your social on August 3, or as near that as you can, and let us hear from you.

Pleasant Valley S. S., Kingfisher, Okla.: "This $3.07 is our Children's day offering for Drusie. When the children heard about her all wanted to give their contributions to her. We are a small union Sunday-school in the country. We know all about the Av. S. and send best wishes."

A friend, Carthage, Ill.: "I must write and tell the Av. S. that I do love to read their letters, though I am old. God bless and keep them faithful. I hope Charlie will decide to stay, at least part of his time, with those who have done so much for him. I send a small contribution, to be equally divided between Charlie and Drusie." (I don't think a $1 bill as small as you do. Your hope is granted in respect to Charlie. He decided he ought to give up his vacation and help the ladies of the Home).

Sadie Pugsley, Woodbine, Iowa: "I send my sixth and seventh quarterly reports of the Av. S. I fear, however, they have not 'advanced' very much, for I find a week missing between them, and I intended to keep four consecutive reports." (This miss of a week will not seriously interfere with the year's work). "I can't remember how it happened, so I will lay it to the weather, although I don't live in Arkansas, either, I am thankful to say. I send my respects to Felix." (Nothing but this remembrance of Felix could have soothed my feelings after that kind of a fling at Arkansas. What there is about Iowa to make people so self-satisfied I never could find out).

Mary S. Hord, Gower, Mo.: "My class (Class No. 2) of the Grayson Bible school have collected a number of Sunday-school cards and papers, which we will send Drusie as soon as you give us her address.

The 393rd to join the Av. S.—that was way back in 1898—was Donnie Swift, of Billings, Mo. She was a little bit of a girl then, and her older brother, who sent in her name, was only 11. It was in the summer, in June, that they sent in their names as members, and now in the summer, nine years after, comes a well-kept Av. S. report from Donnie Swift. I am prouder than I can tell of these old members who still show an interest in the Av. S. Also comes Grace Everest, of Oklahoma City, with her tenth report. She secured one of our prizes last year.

Drusie R. Malott, North China: "Perhaps some do not know that soap is quite a luxury here in China. Only the officials and higher classes in China use it. The masses can hardly afford good water, much less soap. This was impressed upon me the other day when the woman who does my sewing told me she had no soap in her house, and that whenever she washed her little boy's head, or needed water for any particular purpose, she had to send out on the street and buy hot water. Hot water can be bought for several cash a can—a third or fourth of a cent of our money. How thankful you of the homeland should be for blessings which often you do not think of at all" (unless they get in our eyes. I hope no little boy who gets his head washed often will be wishing himself a Chinaboy). "May 27 the schools are dismissed for the summer, as that is wheat harvest this summer. Each year there is a certain date set for wheat harvest, and everybody that possibly can harvests on that day. Those with no grain of their own wait around the edges of fields till owners have finished gathering, then all rush in with their rakes, and oh! what a cloud of dust! You can hardly see the gleaners, but it doesn't take long for them to clean up a small Chinese field. I send loving greetings to all who help by prayers, words of encouragement, or gifts."

Don't forget August 3. Tell your friends about it.

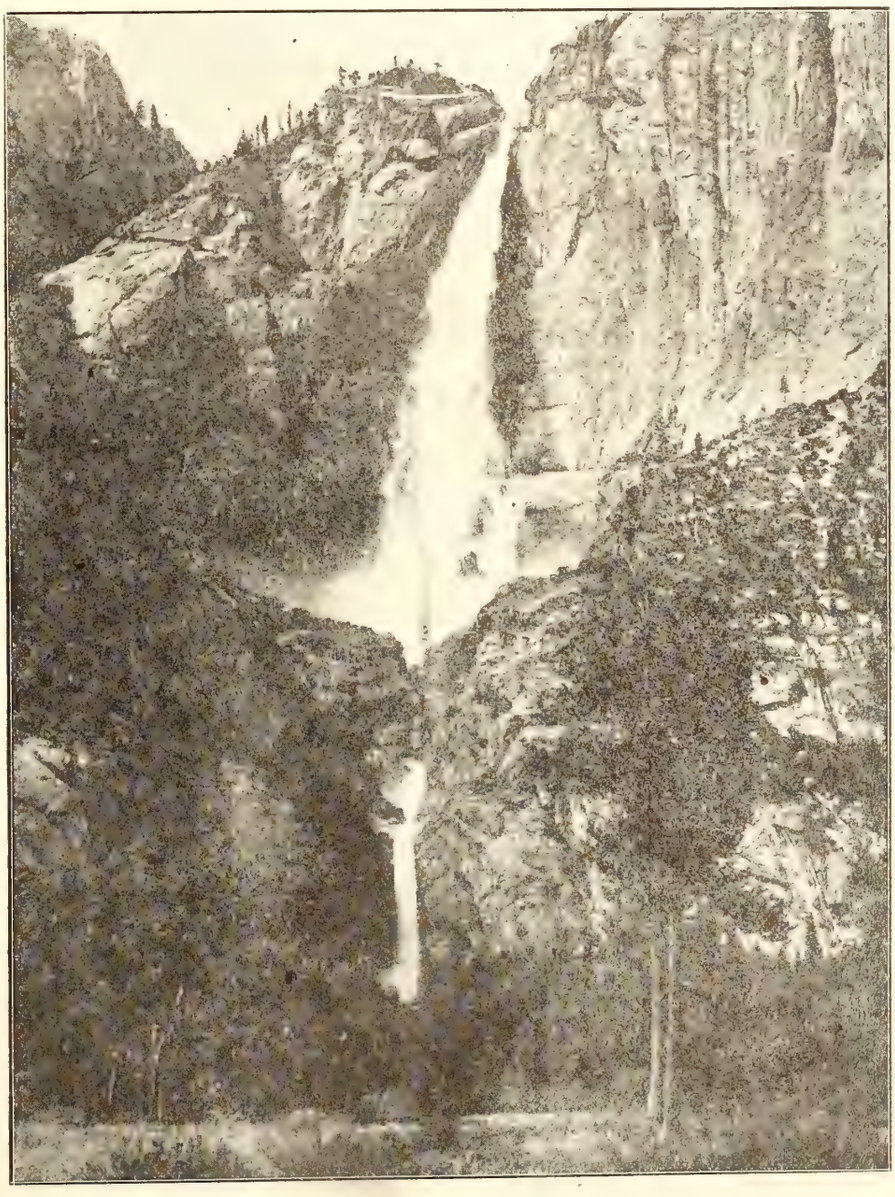
Advice to Girls.

Many a young woman who deserves a good man for a life companion has jumped in at a tender age and married a Johnny and gone through life embarrassed the rest of her days, observes the sapient and kind-hearted "Webb City Register." Johnny is all right as an ice cream boy, and as a slot machine with which to get chewing gum and bonbons, but when it comes to measuring up, in after years, with the men who do things and whose wives make up the budget of satisfied ones, he is down and out before the race starts. Girls, if you must marry, and you must if you would be happy, be sure and marry a man, or at least what is going to be a man.—Exchange.

Turning Knocks into Boosts.

Ike Newton fell asleep. An apple bumped into his slumbers. Ike rubbed the bump and looked at the apple. Then he discovered the law of gravitation. A Philadelphia man slipped on a banana skin and slid into a train of thought on the sidewalk. While people were laughing at him that Philadelphia man was looking at the banana skin. He was a professor. He had a laboratory. He bought a nickel's worth of bananas and started experimenting. Then he discovered that from the soft, white, creamy pulp he could make breakfast food, sugar, flour, cakes and candies, paper, alcohol, coffee, cloth, an imitation of scrambled eggs, an imitation of veal and mutton, an imitation of figs and raisins, a banana butter and a banana bread.



In his case the skin game was profitable. Here's a lesson that fortune and success are not merely knocking at your door; they are barking at your shins, digging you in the ribs, trying to uppercut and jab their way into your understanding. The next bump you get, don't call down maledictions upon it. Grab it by the hand, draw it to you and begin to get acquainted. Maybe it's a boost.—Exchange.

A World-Wide Training-School

IN EXPRESSION, IN SERVICE, IN FELLOWSHIP.*

By Francis E. Clark

The key-word of Christian Endeavor is Training, training in expression, training in service, training in living; training of the heart, training of the mind, training of the tongue; training of the boy and girl, training of the young man and woman; training to make men and women, training to make citizens, training to make effective Christians; training in the church, training for the church, training by the church.

The successes of Christian Endeavor have come in proportion as this thought has been developed; its failures have resulted from ignoring this principle.

I have just returned from a long and arduous pioneering journey in the "Neglected Continent," neglected to the last by Christian Endeavor as well as by other Protestant forces; but I have found that there, among the Andes and on the pampas, in the busy cities of this Continent of Opportunity, a far better name for South America, as well as where Christian Endeavor has been known and prized the longest; there as well as here and everywhere else, I say, the supreme work of the Society is training the church of the future.

In city and country, in the north and south, in the jungles of India, in the ancient walled cities of immemorial China, on the coffee plantations of Brazil, on the slopes of the Andes as well as the Rockies, among the Alps of Switzerland and where the Taurus Mountains lift their snowy peaks in the air, on the sunny shores of Australia and the multitude of Islands that dot the south seas, in the East Indies and West Indies, on the banks of the Mississippi and the Ganges and the Congo and the Danube and the La Plata, in every continent, in every clime, yes, in every nation of every continent, is heard every week the voice of Christian Endeavorers in prayer and praise and testimony.

What does this tremendous fact signify? It means that Christian Endeavor is a great world training-class in the expression of the religious life. It means also that there is a distinct need felt in the hearts of young Christians for such expression of the religious life. As the bird must sing, and the flower must bloom, and the lover must express his affection by gentle word as well as deed, so the young Christian must express his love if any love for God is in his heart; and the Endeavor meeting gives him his opportunity.

This expression should be sane, sensible, sincere. It had come about especially in Anglo-Saxon lands that Christians, particularly young Christians, had become tongue-tied and dumb in the expression of their love for Christ.

The pledge, always voluntarily taken, came to the rescue to unseal their lips, to touch dumb tongues as with a coal from the altar of God; and our sons and our daughters began to prophecy as in the days of Pentecost. While we do not insist on the use of this formula or any other special form of words, I venture to say that the little phrase, "I will take some part aside from singing in every prayer meeting," has done more to restore the idea of the healthy expression of the religious life to its normal place in the church of Christ than any other twelve words that have been uttered or written, simply because they have brought into this training-class of expression so many millions of conscientious scholars.

But, again, the Society has been far more a doing society than a talking society. Multiply the 70,000 societies by five, the average number of committees, and that by five again, the average number of members on each committee, and you will approximate the number of workers, who are also scholars, in this school of applied Christianity, the number who are being trained every week in actual, practical, definite work for Christ and the church; and, as these committees frequently are changed, twice this number, probably, in the course of the year go to this training-school of service.

But such figures are cold and tame compared with the glowing, human, Christlike work for which they stand. The uplifting meetings planned for, the souls won, the music that thrills, the sanctuaries that are beautified, the poor who are relieved, the sick who are visited, the prisons that are entered, the children who are made happy, the sailors who are cheered, the money that is secured for philanthropies, the pastors who are encouraged, the missionaries who are supported—all these things are being accomplished, while at the same time the doers are being trained for still larger service in this practical school of activity, a school that is never closed, that takes no vacations, that goes on in spring and summer and autumn and winter in every corner of every continent, quietly, unostentatiously training its scholars for the larger service of the days to come.

But because Christian Endeavor aims to be such a comprehensive training-school let me urge my older friends not to put all the burdens of church and mission upon the shoulders of the young people, and lay all sins of omission at their door, as some are inclined to do. There are older people as well as younger in the church. There are fathers and mothers as well as sons and daughters. If the congregations fall off, if the Sunday-school is diminished, if the week-night prayer meeting drags, if the missionary collection is smaller, I have known some ministers and churches and missionary secretaries to charge all deficiencies on the Endeavor society, forgetting that primarily the society is a training-school, and that they do not expect scholars while they are at school to do all the work of trained graduates. As well might you expect the boys in the grammar school to be the chief breadwinners for the home and leading citizens of the State.

However, we will accept the challenge made by even these unreasonable demands, and so far as in us lies we will, even while we are at school in Christian Endeavor, do the work of to-day, which is the best training for the larger work of that of to-morrow.

Once more, the Christian Endeavor movement is a great world-wide training-school in fellowship. One would think that Christian fellowship would be spontaneous, as in the early days of the apostolic church, and need no training; but sectarianism has been rampant and unrestrained so long that we need special training to get back to the first principles of Christianity. In the providence of God Christian Endeavor interdenominational unions have become established in every land. To-day here in Seattle our international union of the United States and Canada begins its convention, every session of which will be a training-class in Christian brotherhood.

Is it for nothing that God has established in all the world three thousand schools of Christian brotherhood, otherwise called Christian Endeavor unions? I cannot believe it. In His infinite wisdom He saw that the time was ripe for a new union of the forces of evangelical Christendom. Sectarians have fought against His plan, for sectarianism dies hard. Rival societies have been started to destroy this brotherhood, and in some places they have succeeded for a time; but on the whole, through our national, international, State, and local unions, every one of which is a training-school in interdenominational and international fellowship, the cause of Christian fraternity has gone steadily forward; and the outlook for its final triumph among the torn and rent divisions of Protestantism was never so bright as now.

But we cannot rest on our oars. The battle is only half won. The nations are still building ironclads. Some denominations are still fighting against the brotherly spirit of the times, which is the spirit of unity in Christ.

*An abstract of the annual address of the President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, delivered at the Twenty-third International Christian Endeavor Convention, Seattle, Wash., July 10, 1907.

Current Events

The Peace Conference.

It is tolerably certain that the Peace Conference at The Hague will not discuss the question of the limitation of armaments. The representatives of the United States will not introduce the topic because, for one reason, such a proposal is felt to be inappropriate as coming from the nation which already has the smallest per capita armament of any of the great powers. It would seem like insisting that all the others should come to our standard of military and naval equipment. But there are some important things which the Conference can do. One thing, which will probably be proposed by our representatives, is an agreement that the property of combatants, when not contraband of war, shall be exempt from seizure or molestation. It is important not only that war between two nations should produce as little disturbance as possible in the commerce of the world, but that it should interfere as little as possible with the ongoings of ordinary commerce of the nations which are at war. During our war with Spain, our Atlantic seaports were for a time congested with merchandise awaiting shipment which the owners were afraid to ship for fear it would be captured by the Spanish fleet, which was supposed to be cruising somewhere within striking distance of the Atlantic coast. England ought to be a strong supporter of such a proposal, for, more than any other nation, she is dependent for her daily bread upon the maintenance of a continuous supply of imported foodstuffs. England would starve to death in a few weeks if this supply were cut off. To be sure, England's immense navy is tolerably well able to protect British commerce, but it is a legitimate task to impose upon any nation to have to protect her food supply by war vessels. The rules of civilized war forbid firing upon the noncombatant citizens or subjects of an enemy. But is it not as cruel to starve a man as to shoot him? As Shylock truly said: "You take my life when you do take the means whereby I live." Long before we learn how to get along without war, we ought to be able to solve the much simpler problem of limiting the suffering which war entails to those who are actually engaged in it. Any agreement among the nations which will render war less of a disturbing influence in commerce and in the lives of the great masses of the people, even when their governments are fighting, will be a step in the right direction.

National Educational Association.

The fiftieth convention of the National Educational Association is being held this week in Los Angeles. This organization represents the teachers of the entire country, and its annual gathering brings together from ten to twenty thousand from all parts of the land. The association not only meets to hear addresses and discuss the current problems, but encourages systematic investigation of educational matters. Among the projects which the association has undertaken for the coming year are these: To devise a plan for teaching morals in the public schools; to investigate the practicability and the methods of industrial education in rural schools; to get a consensus of the best current opinion as to the proportion of culture subjects and "practical" subjects which should be included in the curriculum and the time which the combined school and college course should occupy; to study the causes and remedies for the shortage of teachers; to report on provisions for exceptional children in the public schools. Steps are being taken toward the affiliation of the association with similar organizations in other countries for the formation of an international association.

Mayor Schmitz Convicted.

Mayor Schmitz, of San Francisco, whose trial on the charge of extortion has caused almost as big a shake-up as the earthquake of last year, has been convicted and sentenced to five years in the state penitentiary. The Board of Supervisors, who have been in charge of the affairs of the city while Schmitz has been in jail and under trial, have passed a resolution declaring the office of mayor vacant by reason of the conviction of Schmitz, and have elected Charles Boxton as temporary mayor until a special election can be held to choose a man to fill out the unexpired portion of Schmitz' term of office. It has not often happened, even in the voluminous annals of American municipal graft, that the chief executive of an important city has appeared as one of the principals in an affair of this sort. It is greatly to the credit of San Francisco that the case has been handled so boldly and promptly, and with so little disposition to whitewash the culprit with the mistaken notion of saving the city's good name. The fact that San Francisco has had bad government, and has been victimized by an unfaithful public servant, is now known to all the world. But the world knows also the much more important fact that San Francisco does not willingly submit to that sort of thing. The city and its reputation were never in better condition than they are now, with the processes of material and moral reconstruction in full swing.

Hard Times Ahead?

Mr. John D. Rockefeller, a gentleman of reputed skill in matters of finance, asserts that the present condition of prosperity can not last, and that it is time for all of us to retrench, economize and shorten sail in preparation for the coming storm. Other financiers only less eminent than Mr. Rockefeller, tell us that there is not a cloud on the financial horizon and that, so long as we behave ourselves, there is no reason why the era of prosperity should not be indefinitely prolonged. The slump in the stock market is not taken very seriously by the people who deal in values and buy and sell real things for real money. For the first six months of this year the records show a considerable percentage of increase in bank clearings, railroad earnings, bank deposits and the output of the most important branches of manufacture. The Adams Express Company finds it necessary to lighten ship by throwing overboard ballast to the extent of a 200 per cent extra dividend. The great corporations, in spite of their scare about federal control, are planning large issues of stocks and bonds. The mania for speculation is about the only alarming symptom. An era of excessive speculation is always just above the falls. Perhaps this is what agitates Mr. Rockefeller. To the orderly soul of a man who has contrived to get the profits of successful speculation without the uncertainties incident to it, the blind gamble in stocks must be a horrifying spectacle. Mr. Rockefeller, when summoned into court before Judge Landis the other day to give information upon which the judge could assess a just fine against the Standard Oil Company, did not know the amount of the capital stock of that company, nor the lines of business in which it was engaged—except that he had the impression that it operated some oil refineries—nor did he know anything about its relation to other companies which are currently reputed to be in reality parts of it. Perhaps we should not attach too much weight to the gloomy prognostications of one who is so ill informed about even his own business.

A Cure for Discourtesy.

The task of enrolling the ten thousand teachers now in session at the National Educational Association at Los Angeles is not a light one. Perhaps the clerks at the enrollment bureau would have quite as good an excuse for getting impatient and cross and uncivil as does any postoffice clerk or any other public employe who has to stand at a window and answer the same set of questions four hundred times a day. But the secretary of the N. E. A. has a way of preventing his clerks from getting cross. He says: "These bureau clerks have my orders to lay down their pencils and go away to a room by themselves for rest the moment they get to the place where they can not give a courteous and kind answer and explanation to any question by any person." Barring exceptional instances, it is only the tired clerk who is uncivil. Of course there are those who are unaccommodating through sheer laziness or inborn grumpiness or defective early training, but generally the cause is mere weariness. And the cure for weariness is rest. Would it not be a paying business proposition for the proprietors of large stores to have rest rooms to which their overstrained clerks could occasionally retire to recuperate their depleted stock of good nature and courtesy?

Ahead of His Time.

President Buchanan is not now looked upon as a very able statesman or a very successful president, but a letter which has recently been discovered and published shows that he was half a century ahead of his time on the question of public officials receiving railroad passes. The letter, in spite of its ancient date, reads like a very modern document. Here it is:

Washington 24 March 1859.

Dear Sir:—I return the free ticket which Mr. Giddings has directed to be forwarded to me for the Northern Central Railroad, with as many thanks for his kindness as though I had accepted it. It has been the practice of my life not to travel free on any railroad, being opposed to the whole system of granting such privileges to individuals not connected with these roads.

Yours very respectfully,
James Buchanan.

Buchanan was right, as of course we can all see now. But it required a good degree of sagacity as well as of principle to see it in those days when there was no visible imminent peril from a "railroad power" in politics on any large scale. And yet the President must travel, we expect him to travel in a somewhat stately style, and the salary which he receives will not pay for that sort of travel. Congress ought to make an appropriation for traveling expenses or increase the salary of the office.

Union Among Immersionists.

A forward step has been taken in the matter of union between the Baptists and Free Baptists in an agreement which has been reached by a joint committee, by which their foreign missionary work may be done by the same organization. It is agreed that "The American Baptist Missionary Union shall conduct the foreign mission work of the two denominations, and shall use on its literature as its secondary descriptive title, 'The Foreign Missionary Organization of the Northern Baptists and the Free Baptists.' The terms of membership in the Union shall apply without discrimination to all churches and members of churches now included in the two denominations, and all honorary and life members of the Free Baptist organization shall be transferred to the Missionary Union. The Free Baptists shall have representation on the Board of Managers of the Missionary Union in proportion to their church membership, and shall have three members of the executive committee of the Union. There shall, also, be an assistant corresponding secretary in the foreign department of the Union from the Free Baptists, and for the earlier years of the Union a field secretary for work among the churches."

That is certainly a most decisive step, and its unanimous approval by the Missionary Union at the annual meeting in Washington, it having been first suggested by the representatives of the Free Baptists, would seem to indicate its general acceptance. We notice further that the Home Mission Society of the Baptists has submitted a plan to the Free Baptists, whereby they may unite in their home mission work. The plan involves the taking up of the general work of the Free Baptist conference by the Home Missionary Society, collections taken from Free Baptist churches, and members and churches to be admitted to membership on the same terms as those of Baptists. This plan does not propose to "have anything to say about the doctrines or practices of the local churches, nor attempt to decide about the union of churches in places where both denominations have churches, nor to interfere with the title or control of any property now or hereafter held by the Free Baptist church." This consolidation of mission work is to go into effect, if approved, January 1, 1909, and it is suggested that in states where the Free Baptist membership is 25 per cent of the Baptist membership that the consolidated societies use the name "United Baptists," and as a subtitle, "Union of Baptist and Free Baptist Societies."

These movements in connection with the action of the Baptists and Disciples in Winnipeg, recently noted in our columns, and the union of the Baptist church and the Church of Christ at Kenora, Canada, indicate a strong tendency toward the union of those who hold to believers' baptism, a regenerate church membership, the freedom of the local churches, and the New Testament as a sufficient rule of faith and practice. Such a consummation would be clearly in harmony with our Lord's prayer for the oneness of his disciples.

Who, Then, Is Free?

In a conference on Sociology, held at Sagamore Beach, a summer colony on the shore of Massachusetts Bay, sixteen miles south of Plymouth, one of the speakers, Rev. Leighton Williams, D. D., whose address, it is said by a reporter in "The Watchman," of Boston, "made the most profound impression," said: "I do not think any man is really free until he has conquered his fear, until he has conquered his pride, until he has conquered his selfishness." It can hardly be said that this is too high an ideal for a citizen of the kingdom of God, and yet it is bound to raise the question, in every candid mind, "Am I, then, a free man in Christ Jesus?" Who of us can say that we have entirely conquered all fear, all pride and all selfishness?

It is easy to see that so long as we fear death, or poverty, or loss of personal influence, or the defeat of the cause of righteousness, we are not wholly free. The man who has been lifted up by faith in Christ into fellowship with him, sharing his spirit, and catching something of his vision of God, and of humanity and its needs, has gotten beyond the region of these small fears which hamper and harrass the soul. Likewise the man who is proud of his intellectual powers, of his ancestry, of his social position, and of his spiritual attainments, is the victim of a limited vision of what is real greatness and power, and has not yet entered into the freedom which comes through the truth.

And what shall we say of selfishness? Who of us is free from its contaminating and blighting influence? Who of us is controlled in all his plans and purposes by the unselfish desire to promote human good and extend the reign of righteousness and of peace among men? Who of us can say, "Through Christ I have conquered self, and I am no longer seeking simply my own good and happiness, but am equally concerned for the welfare and happiness of my fellowmen"? What a world this would be to live in if selfishness were indeed conquered and all of us should seek his neighbor's good no less than his own!

Are we not all compelled to say, with bowed heads, as we face these questions, candidly and honestly, in the language of Paul, "I have not yet attained; I am not yet perfect, but I am pressing on toward the goal for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." But let us see to it that we are at least pressing on toward that ideal freedom which includes our complete deliverance from fear and pride and selfishness. This freedom can only be found in Christ, for whom the Son makes free is free indeed.

It Does Mean "Immersion."

He who can make a great statement that is both striking and true we respect. Sometimes, however, writers use forceful language without any foundation for its content. When an editorial writer writes such a sentence as the following, "It is beyond question that in the New Testament 'baptizo' does not mean immersion," he writes himself down as either misinformed, prejudiced or perverse, for beyond question in the New Testament "baptizo" does mean immersion. But the editor of the "Southern Presbyterian" says it does not. His reasons for his ex-cathedra statement are not such as we need now discuss. And as he is not fond of lexical authority we will not quote for his instruction such writers as Liddell and Scott, Thayer and Cremer, who, with a hundred other writers on this theme, agree that immersion is the primary meaning of "baptizo." The writer in the "Southern Presbyterian" does not quote a single authority in support of his statement, but drifts off into a discussion of Catacomb pictures and a statement that the baptisms of the Day of Pentecost could not possibly be by immersion. It would not be a difficult matter to reply to this argument, but the man who makes it would not permit himself to be convinced by us. We prefer to give a few quotations at random from some modern writers—the opinions among the older writers are just as one-sided in their support of the fact that baptism was an immersion—and not one of these writers we quote is, we believe, a member of a denomination that practices immersion. Take, for instance, Professor McGiffert, himself a Presbyterian, we believe. In his "Apostolic Age," page 542, he says: "The ordinary mode of baptism in the Apostolic age was immersion." To quote altogether a different style of authority, take the eminent European scholar, Professor Wernle, who says baptism was "preceded by a profession of faith, a confession of sins and prayer to Jesus, then the pure water cleansed the body and soul alike, and when the disciple came forth from the water he was accounted pure and a brother." ("Beginnings of Christianity," Vol. 1, page 133). For lack of space we must now be content with one more quotation from a modern authority. The "New International Encyclopedia" (1902), has this to say in its article on baptism: "In the primitive church the ordinary mode of baptism was by immersion, for which purpose baptistries began to be erected, in the third and perhaps in the second centuries."

We can not understand why a man of any common sense will, in the face of the scholarship of the world and the simple meaning of language, try to give the impression that immersion was not the original mode of baptism. We can understand why people, who belong to churches that have for years tolerated pouring or sprinkling as valid baptism, may argue that these may answer the purpose. When such elderly men as the editor of the "Southern Presbyterian" shall be taken from the arena, this will, we opine, be the only argument that will be presented in favor of the position of those who have abandoned, as a regular practice, immersion. But any one who is familiar with the history of the changes down the centuries knows that there is no real justification for changing, either in mode or significance, a rite authorized by the Master himself, and practiced universally in the primitive church, to a way that robs it of the beauty of its meaning and does dishonor to the man who would rather have it an "easy ordeal," than go down into the watery grave and rise to walk in newness of life with Christ Jesus our Lord.

Union Through Non-Ecclesiastical Christianity.

Dr. Francis Clark, in his presidential address delivered at the Christian Endeavor Convention at Seattle, very rightly characterizes the Endeavor movement as making for Christian unity. Indeed, one of the signs of the times is what one of our exchanges speaks of as "non-ecclesiastical Christianity," referring to the organized religious activities outside of direct relation to churches. Without a question such institutions as the Y. M. C. A. and similar organizations are strengthening their stakes and are promoting that Christian fraternity which is on the road to union. But the "Congregationalist" sees danger in this growing strength, for it believes this means a growing weakness for the church from which, in practice, if not in sympathy, these organizations are more and more withdrawing. Our contemporary says:

> What is the chief reason why the Christian Church is thus being shorn of its power? Plainly because our times demand that Christians shall work together. They can not work together when under the direction of rival organizations. Therefore Christian men and Christian women have formed associations to provide for the religious, educational and social needs of their communities. Half a score of denominations in a city of 10,000 people are struggling to maintain one or more churches each, in part by providing advantages so much superior to the others as to be strengthened at their expense. In one church a popular preacher, in another an expensive choir with elaborate musical entertainments, in a third a costly edifice left by some dead saint, depletes the congregations of the others, and calls itself prosperous.
> The only way in which the Church of Christ can renew her youth and vigor is for her members to get together in practical service. If they can not thus get together in the church they will unite outside of it, as they are doing. Unity in spirit with rivalry and division in labor is not the unity for which our Lord prayed, nor is it any real unity in the eyes of sensible men and women. The time has arrived when Christians in earnest can get together in the enterprises which they regard as essential to their Christian service. If the churches would survive as ecclesiastical organizations, they must unite in administering such enterprises.

It seems to us that this statement is an answer to the apparent hopes, if not the beliefs of Dr. Clark and thousands of denominationalists whom he voices when he says that thousands of Christian Endeavor conventions have been held, each one a training school in denominational comity and that they will continue to be held until sects, though still loyal to their own tenets, together wage war for the conquest of the world to Christ. And yet Dr. Clark seems to see a broader vision, for addressing the Endeavorers almost his last words were: "Glory in your fellowship and let no ruthless sectarian hand snatch it from you, for it is a training school for the universal brotherhood which one of these days, please God, will fulfill the Lord's last prayer that they 'all may be one as thou, Father, art in me and I in Thee, that they all may be one in us.'"

When our schools of theology are disclaiming sectarian names and our young people see some good in their neighbor we may have a hope that we are making progress towards a day when there will not be six sectarian churches in a town of a few hundred inhabitants and that there will be no "Christians of many denominations," but that they may all be one.

Notes and Comments.

In this hot weather season, when the temptations to forget the good precepts are especially strong, let us recall the following incident, which shows how a sermon was preached by proxy. A minister tells the story:

> I happen to own two dogs. These dogs in the two years of my earlier itinerant ministry were in constant use. They consequently became well trained, were the pride of their master and objects of praise on the part of all who saw them work.
> About a month ago I loaned them to a Christian man to take a load to the creeks. On his way he met a man who, like all other dog-mushers, was accustomed to seeing dogs work only under the whip and vile cursing of the driver.
> He stopped my friend and said to him: "That's a fine team of dogs you have there. That leader obeys every word you say to him, and you don't have to yell your lungs out either. Are they yours?" My friend said, "No, they belong to a preacher in town."
> "Ah now, come off, what you giving me? Those dogs don't belong to any preacher. You don't mean to tell me that a man has trained those dogs without swearing at them, do you?"
> "Yes, I do, and what is more they just got in from an 800-mile trip. They are neither tired nor poor."
> "Well, well, if a preacher can do that well with dogs, guess maybe he could tell me something worth while out of the Bible. What's his name?"

Following our comment on Mr. Logwood's statements of Mrs. Eddy's teachings on sin, we quote the following editorial note in the "Interior":

> Another proof that the Christian Science hierarchy—the coterie of men who "run things" in and around the "mother church" at Boston—are deliberately making over their religion even in the lifetime of its founder, may be cited from an article by W. D. McCracken in a recent number of "The Arena." Mr. McCracken is first reader of the "mother church," and probably the best known of the official lecturers of the cult. As may be judged from these facts, he is a very high hierarch. In this article he undertakes to define to the apprehension of the uninitiated the sense in which "science" uses the term "unreal." He says: "Paul, the great apostle, divided sharply between the eternal (real) and the temporal (unreal),—and so do Christian Scientists. Whatever phenomena then show the qualities of eternity and indestructibility, they call real; but phenomena that reveal themselves as passing manifestations only, they class among the unreal. Disease fortunately can not be counted among the eternal and indestructible manifestations of the universe. Disease is therefore unreal in this metaphysical sense, and only in this sense do Christian Scientists deny its existence. The same reasoning applies to the concept called sin. Christian Scientists do not then deny the existence of disease, of the material body and of sin as universal beliefs of the human race, but they affirm the unreality of these concepts, using the word 'unreality' in its metaphysical sense." This is at least intelligible. But by this token it is totally untrue to "Science and Health." Mrs. Eddy was never guilty of being logical, and certainly never intended to be understood in any "metaphysical sense." When she pronounced all material things imaginations of "mortal mind," she meant it literally, and imagined herself to have said something tremendously profound. But, of course, no intelligent person can accept such nonsense, and necessarily when intelligent persons who identify themselves with the church arrive at its philosophy, they are obliged to reconstruct it into something with a semblance of reason to it. Mr. McCracken's distinctions are exceedingly superficial and his definitions amateurish, but it is some satisfaction to know that the spread of the cult is not everywhere attended by total intellectual eclipse. If we must have Christian Science, let us have McCracken's reformed kind.

Dr. Cuyler finds this reason for the paucity of conversions: It is that men of the world see too little of Christ in the daily lives of many who claim to be his representatives. There is no argument for Christianity equal to that which is presented by a pure, earnest and noble life, inspired by the Spirit of Jesus Christ, and nothing repels like the daily contact with those who preach Christianity and make it odious.

The editor of the "Religious Telescope" has been reading of a certain Unitarian preacher who lost his position in a certain pulpit because of his baggy trousers. There were some very fastidious members occupying the pews and the seediness of the preacher became an eyesore to them. The editor's observation is that the world is fast passing beyond that stage where it regards a patched coat and soiled shirt as signs of saintliness. A few years ago some ministers were not averse to bragging on these things in the pulpit, some of them claiming, too, that they had never rubbed their backs against a college wall. The editor of the "Telescope" says: "The world has no particular use for a dude, for that is a bundle of nothing veneered over with pretension, nor does it fall in love with a man who prances around the pulpit desk on rhetorical stilts. That only means that he is trying to make words take the place of good sense and a well-prepared sermon." Ministers, as well as other men, should dress in taste and remember always that cleanliness is next to godliness. A man may be forgiven if he does not spend much on his clothes, but there is no excuse for him if he does not use soap and water. We agree with the "Religious Telescope" that a minister can dress neatly without being a fop and that the genuine mark of the saint is a holiness of character which has been attained by daily communion with the Father.

Probably the reason some subscribers are so slow in paying for subscriptions, says the "Examiner," is explained by an anecdote told by a countryman. On being introduced to one of his customers, he said with a musing air: "I don't think I know you, do I?" "Well, you ought to," was the reply. "I have traded with you for twenty years." "Always paid your bills, perhaps?" "Of course." "That accounts for it, I know the others."

Pentwater Musings.

After a succession of several bright days, in which the sunshine lay like the smile of heaven upon lake and wood, the heavens became overcast last evening with clouds, and a gentle rain came on which continued all night, its patter on the roof forming an ideal accompaniment for sleep. This morning the clouds continue to drip, and each leaf and blade of grass is bowed under its weight of moisture as it drinks in the refreshing and fertilizing rain of heaven. The sandy soil along this shore requires a large amount of rain, and the green, thrifty trees which crown these hills and ravines show that Nature has not withheld her generous showers. These rainy days have their function to perform in our lives as well as in the natural realm. There are moods of the soul in which dark, cloudy days, and the falling rain dripping from the eaves and the trees, are even more welcome and more in harmony with our feeling than the brighter days with cloudless skies and radiant sunshine. Not only is it true that "Into each life some rain must fall," but on most lives, at one time or another, the storm beats pitilessly from leaden skies. We are bound to believe, however, that just as the rain is as essential to the life and beauty of material things as the sunshine itself, so our troubles and disappointments, our sorrows and heartaches, have their necessary functions to perform in the strengthening of our faith and in the perfection of our characters. To understand that "these light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" is to find the key that unlocks the mystery of God's dealings with us.

It is wonderful how the all-encompassing Spirit of God, ever seeking to gain admission into the hearts and lives of men, uses not only the incidents of our human experience but the scenes of nature to impress us with God's nearness and goodness, and to draw the soul into sweeter accord with the divine will. Louisa M. Alcott gives us this interesting bit of religious experience: "I remember running over the hills just at dawn one summer morning, and, pausing to rest in the silent woods, saw, through an arch of trees, the sun rise over river, hill, and wide green meadows, as I never saw it before. Something born of the lovely hour, a happy mood, and the unfolding aspirations of a child's soul brought me very near to God. A new and vital sense of his presence, tender and sustaining as a father's arms, came to me then, never to change through forty years of life's vicissitudes." The Editor recalls distinctly a somewhat similar personal experience, dating back to the days of our Civil war. Sleeping one night in an upper story of a hotel in one of our southern cities, he awoke in the morning, after a refreshing night's slumber, and looked out through the window upon a scene of wonderful beauty, over the river near whose bank the hotel stood, and over the surrounding plain, all bathed in the radiance of the morning light. A new sense of God's goodness and of the beauty of the world which he had made, came over him, and there was an overwhelming feeling of gratitude and thankfulness for the divine love which seemed to enfold him and to warm his heart, as the sun was warming the earth. The memory of that scene, and of the emotions which it excited, has come down the years with us as one of the bright spots in those dark and stormy days. Was it not God sending a message of his love to a young man, far from home and amid dangers, moral and physical, through the shining river and the fair landscape, and seeking to renew and strengthen his allegiance to him?

Is there not a suggestion here of one of the important functions of a summer outing? It certainly affords an opportunity for coming into closer contact with Nature in her varying moods, and learning that God has other messages than those we read in our Bibles, or hear from our pulpits, by which we may be profited. It is the ceaseless repetition of the same things and the same experiences in our lives that makes life seem dull and prosaic. One of the blessed things about the summer outing is that it brings new scenes and new experiences with their new and more vivid sensations and impressions. Hence, our lives are enriched by such experiences, our horizons widened, and we come back home, when the outing days are over, with a new appreciation of the old home, and with a new set of memories and impressions which will abide with us, and a better understanding of the different ways by which God speaks to us and seeks to influence our lives for good. Those glorious sunsets and occasional sunrises which you beheld; that storm advancing over the lake, with all the colors of the cloud reflected in the lake below; that scene of quiet and beauty in the still woods, where a little group of friends had a picnic together; that fishing expedition on which you went; the stories told around the campfire at night; the new acquaintances which you made; that quiet hour of meditation along the sea or lake shore, or through the pathless woods; the opportunities you had on the Lord's day of meeting with other worshipers of God and joining with them in prayer and praise, and many another pleasing incident, will abide with you as a permanent possession as you take up the thread of your regular duties once more, and life will be sweeter and happier and, perhaps, longer, on account of them. Therefore, do not begrudge the time or money spent in a summer outing.

One need not be a prisoner in the particular spot which he selects as his summer home, though should he be so fortunate as to select these peaceful pines of Pentwater for his resting place, he will be loath to leave them even for a day. There are always little side trips to places of interest, round about, which one can take to avoid any monotony in his summer outing. Our household took such a trip on one of the loveliest days of the past week, going by the steamer "Kansas," which plies between Chicago and Pentwater and up north as far as Manistee. Our trip was to Ludington, twelve miles above Pentwater. We were prompted partly by business and partly by the pleasure of the ride up the lake near the shore-line, which, on a bright day, is a delightful ride. Ludington is quite a city and, like most of the cities along the shore, has gotten its start in the lumber business. Lake Hamlin is near there, a famous fishing resort, but we had only time to go out as far as Epworth Heights, headquarters for Methodism for these parts, where a summer Chautauqua is conducted. It is rather a pretty place, but lacks the splendid beach which we have at Pentwater and some other natural attractions. We returned home in the evening by a smaller vessel, over a lake so delightfully smooth that our young people were deprived of the interesting experience of mal de mer, or sea sickness, which we had promised them. On another day we put our supper in a lunch basket, and in the middle of the afternoon rowed up Lake Pentwater a mile, anchored at a place that promised good fishing, and got a nice string, including black bass, calico bass and perch. When supper time came we used the boat for a table, all-out-of-doors for a dining room, the lake for a finger bowl, and kept up the fishing, taking our turn with the fish in biting, until we had eaten one meal and secured enough fish for two others. Then we rowed back home over a smooth lake, reaching "The Pioneer" before dark, with no supper to get and no dishes to wash but, alas, with fishes to clean! But that is another story.

Speaking of cleaning fish, why, in the name of reason, has not some Yankee invented, long before this, some quick and easy method of getting fish ready for the frying-pan? This is the one cloud upon the sky of our domestic happiness a Pentwater. If there ever should be any family jars, aside from those which contain peaches and small fruits, they will result from this fish-cleaning business. Not one of us takes to it. A law has been suggested by the female members of the household that each one clean all the fish he catches, but the injustice of this to the legal head of the house will be apparent at once to our readers. This rule has the effect of a high tariff, which is likely to prove prohibitive if rigidly enforced. Now, Izaak Walton, so far as we remember, always just turned over his trout or chub to the cook and that was the end of it—until it came to the table. This was the "ancient order of things," and we are in favor of restoring it! The hot weather of the past week in the cities has caused a large number of inquiries from prospective visitors to this resort. Already a good delegation has arrived from Chicago, and others are expected in a few days. The great demand here is for cottages for rent, and on this we are short for the present; but there are good hotel accommodations in the village, at a very reasonable rate, and there is still room at the club house on our lake front. We are anticipating an unusually full season at these Pentwater resorts, and a sort of boom in Garrison Park.

"My Sanctuary" By Claris Yeuell

High up on Lookout Mountain, overlooking the valley below, through which a creek winds in and out in deep folds, is my sanctuary. It is surely founded upon a rock, and is itself a great gray cliff on which the tender and affectionate mosses cling in happy homage, thus affording cushioned seats more luxurious than those of which the Orient boasts.

The trees throw their arms around it caressingly, and one growing out of a joint in the center of the rock serves as a steeple. This is a delicate, dainty-fingered pine, so tender and pitying in appearance—even its leaves fall in consoling silence. A wild honey-suckle vine, appreciating the friendly aspect, creeps up it, and fastens its curling tendrils around the branches.

The bell which rings from this steeple is the voice of birds. The mocking bird, so generous with his song, rests on the topmost bough and "shakes from his little throat floods of delirious music." The chimes peal out until the stars welcome the night, when the full chorus of "insects pour forth their music in untrained harmony," the katydids taking the lead. The wind sings softly to the trees and plants, but breathes more ardent whispers to the shrinking pine. To the right in a little hollow is a clear stream which smiles as it slips over the amber pebbles, but laughs outright as it leaps the precipice in its course.

Growing up from a ledge below is a brusque, unpolished appearing hickory nut tree, but on examination it proves to be very warm-hearted, for a family of chipmunks, or ground squirrels, live in it, and this still more generous tree furnishes them with winter rations. Many a nut have I eaten here, and have wondered as many times which had the better right to them, the chipmunk or I. To be perfectly frank I have not decided yet.

How refreshingly sweet and dear are the memories of this cool retreat!

Here one may be with his head resting upon a green pillow of moss, and look into the soft serenity of sky and see the multiform clouds visit to and fro. As the eye becomes accustomed to looking upward it can discern the wild bee as it unswervingly flies to its home tree. Each piece of nature's handiwork contributes its mite towards making this place ideal; the flowers breathe sweet lessons, the birds pour forth entrancing song, the stones preach sermons, and the leaves of the trees clap their hands in acclamation. In this sanctuary the retirement from man gives the voice within more opportunity to become audible; the gentler attributes of one's nature spring freely in the quietness and the genial influence inhaled from the woody solitude; and Socrates' command, "Know thyself" is obeyed. An "Easy Chair" is here, inlaid with grasses soft and green and rocked by gentle zephyrs, to a seat in which our Editor is invited. A tripod also, on which his assistant may be seated, free from the importunities of irate and impatient correspondents. Come one, come all—but not all at once—its solitude is its chiefest charm, and worship with me in "my sanctuary."

A TOUCH OF NATURE.

Vacation Among the Pines

By Cephas Shelburne

Charlotte Perkins Gilman, in "A Sensible Vacation," says: "It seems to me as if this earth was planned for vacations, there is so much land suitable for them—beaches and mountains, and such inexhaustible water!" You can't plow beaches and mountains and the lake and the sea. God has left us these for our outings, and a precious heritage they are. Michigan is a great outing ground. To her many beautiful lakes among the pines come the tens of thousands for the cure of hay fever, throat, lung and other troubles. Set in a fringe of evergreen and surrounded by primeval forests is Long Lake. Here the tired preacher, in his "Uneeda Rest" cottage, finds a complete change amid the scenes and forces of nature, and feels this touch of nature and real life that makes even the best books and pulpits stale. Here, fragrant with the scent of the sweet-fern, wintergreen and balsams, and sifted through the pines, the breeze comes to us across the lake bearing the ozone of life—nature and man have met, "Then all there is in earth and sky blending in rapturous harmony"—this is health, real health, when one feels the pulsing throb of nature. Yesterday I held converse with an "old camper" in the eighties. He had every summer for sixty-two years pitched his tent by the Michigan lakes. I ventured a little talk with him about the "other world." He thought this world good enough and the other world would be lacking in his idea of a heaven if there were no Michigan lakes there. I could only comfort him with "the sea of glass." Summer always carries him back to his lonely haunts and his soul's refrain is:

"There's a sound that rings in my ears to-day,
That echoes in vague refrain,
The ripple of water o'er smooth-washed clay,
Where the wall-eyed pike and the black bass play,
That makes me yearn in a quiet way
For my old fly-rod again.

"Back to the old home haunts again,
Back where the clear lake lies;
Back through the woods
Where the blackbird broods,
Back to my rod and flies."

People in this hurrying world of ours have little communion with nature and know all too little of her free, open, honest ways. We hie away to the haunts of fashion and artificial amusement, these artificial fancies which do but profane the sanctity of nature, and we come back tired, disgusted and all out of sorts. But nature never disappoints, never deceives, never leaves us worse of body or soul for her companionship.

"Just safety and peace in the heart of the woods,
Far from the city's dust and din,
Where passion nor hate of man intrudes,
Nor fashion nor folly has entered in.
Deeper than hunter's trail hath gone
Glimmers the tarn where the wild deer drink;
And fearless and free comes the gentle fawn,
To peep at herself over the grassy brink."

Go with me by the lake or the river's brink, stand amid the tall spruce and hemlocks, and let us "list to Nature's teaching." Possibly, yea, certainly, if you have the poetic instinct, this little summer's vacation-touch of nature may awaken within us a deeper love and a firmer faith and a more beautiful consecration than a twelvemonth of precept within closed walls or from the printed page. He who holds converse with sweet nature knows God's "latest thoughts of beauty"; better knows "what God and man is," and has a larger conception of God as his Father. "The glory of the flower is the glory of God," and when we converse with and commune through the flowers then it is we shall have a deeper sense and a firmer faith in the ever-presence of God. To stand amid the evergreen trees and listen to the moan of the winds; to pluck the flower and behold its beauty and smell its sweets; to open the clam shell and find its pearls; to pick up the acorn and feel the mighty pulsations that throb and are hidden away in a single burr; to pull from the flag-bay the "cat-tails" and nearby the "water lily," and to know that

"In the mud and scum of things Something always, always sings."

All this is to learn that a vacation among the pines is worth our while, is health-giving and thought-provoking, and with all the rich treasures she brings to body and soul still—

"There's a language never spoken,
There's a song that's never sung,
There's a stillness never broken
By the sound of mortal tongue.

"There are waves upon thought's ocean
That shall never touch life's beach;
There's an innermost emotion
That is stranger to our speech."

If on a morning when summer's new life is flushing the veins of the earth, we stroll into the fields or the forests, and give ourselves up to what lies about us, nature has much to teach us. Nature is vocal with sweet sounds, musical with bird notes, the rippling brook, the fall of cataract, the crinkled grain bending and swaying golden-headed before the meadow's whisperings. "With chattering voice the cedar speaks, crouched grey on the barren hills," in contrast with the deep-toned mountain pine, while the waves, white-crested, shoreward come, bringing paeons of praise to him who is "above all and through all." Of books and libraries there is no end, and their study becomes weariness of the flesh:

"Shakespeare in my pocket, lest I feel alone;
Lest the brooding landscape take a sombre tone?
Good to have a poet to fall back upon!

"But the vivid beauty makes the book absurd;
What beside the real world, is the written word?
Keep the page till winter, when no thrush is heard!

"Why read Hamlet? What's Hecuba to me?
Let me read the grain-field, let me read the tree,
Let me read mine own heart, deep as I can see."

Time was when men dreaded the deep mountain valleys, the wilderness and the lonely mountain summit. To-day men flee into the fastness of the mountain, pitch their tents by the lily pond and 'mid "the leafy tongues of the forest," and in the solitude and majesty they find there breaks in upon them a new sense of the Infinite. Our eyes are opened and we cry, "O wondrous world of God!" To-day I wandered far into the wilderness. I sat on the shore of Little Bass Lake, as round as a well and as deep, fringed with pines, birch, balsams and firs.

It is evening. The shadows grow longer and stretch their lengths across the pond; the heavens are mirrored in the smooth lake; a shy duck floats double, "duck and shadow"; across the pond, on an old snag, is perched an eagle, while but a few rods away the familiar kingfisher darts for his evening's meal; at my feet are the lily-pods and the water lilies nod and slumber; a dull thud in the water, and we are startled by the muskrat that is taking a plunge, while the ringlets on the water indicate the point where the black bass is having his sport; happy birds hymn the goodnight song and fly away to drowsy evergreens to tuck their tired little throats beneath a folded wing. Down in the pond we hear the bullfrogs, while across the long, lone marshes comes the call of the whippoorwill, and from a neighboring tree the hoot-owl informs us that he is on night duty. Mid these scenes and sounds and evergreen boughs, with none to stand guard but the stately pine trees, I am in the heart of the forest, and, surrounded with this magnificence, and in this companionship of nature, I am overwhelmed in this marvelous wisdom and beauty till my soul is full of longing and my lips are moved to prayer:

"I love the woods.
Oh, give me but that leafy bower
On which to build my simple cot,
And I'll not ask for palaces,
Nor murmur at my lonely lot."

The Vexations of Vacation

By James Mudge

Some who see this caption will at once say their chief affliction is the absence of vacations, or their exceeding smallness when they come, and the paucity of purse that compels them to forego a thousand things which would fill their cup of happiness to overflowing. I sympathize with this feeling, having been there oftentimes myself. But I venture also to say that, after all, man is not so entirely the creature of circumstances, but that he may conquer outward conditions and win a real delight where limitations would seem to forbid it. It is with our leisure hours, be they few or many, as with those of activity; we may get much or little out of them in very close proportion to the amount of character we put into them and the manner in which they are managed.

Does vacation need vindication? We trow not in the case of the reflective. It is abundantly evident to those who think that to labor without intermission or relaxation through all the weeks of the year lowers the quality as well as lessens the quantity of the total output, and tends to multiform deterioration. A holiday rightly conducted may be a holy day in a higher sense than is commonly comprehended, ministering most effectively to the building up of body and soul into fitness for the service of God and man. But the right conducting is of primary importance. It is easy to spoil a holiday and to so misuse it as to defeat its essential purpose. To make it wholly satisfactory and successful, a good deal of planning is needed and is quite worth while. Also not a little independence of mind. Many people go to certain places and do certain things simply because others have found, or at least have professed to find, a joy in so doing. This is manifest unwisdom, for tastes greatly differ in this matter, and to follow fashion in it is most foolish. Whatever a man may feel constrained to do in conformity to custom when confined to his usual routine, let him by all means break away and exercise his freedom when released from the grind and drive of daily toil. If the sea charms him, or the mountains, the country or the woods; if he prefers to fish or shoot or drive or ride, so far as means permit let him indulge in these propensities. What can be more stale and wearisome and every way absurd than to come back from the one outing of the year bored, fatigued, disgusted, the opportunity missed, the very design of the endeavor defeated?

There should be a close relation between the vocation and the vacation. That is one way to avoid vexation, with its accompanying vitiation and consequent vituperation. It hardly needs to be said that change of scene and of employment is vital. The current of thought must be broken. New surroundings must awaken fresh emotions. The stress of life, the accent of impact of feeling and reflection must come from and fall on a different place. Then there is refreshment, recuperation, readiness to take up the burden again in better shape. He who has no vocation at all has no right to any vacation, can not indeed know what it means in its true sense. Only he who has earned by toil the respite which crowns it can enter into the joys of the release from application.

But I started out to speak of the irritations and annoyances which so often are permitted to mar our holidays and to present a few thoughts that may be helpful to some in this matter. For one thing, it is well to set forth with moderate expectations, not looking for Paradise to burst forth at the next turn of the road. "Blessed are those," it has been said, "who expect nothing, for they shall not be disappointed." Without going quite so far as this, let us at least moderate our hopes, our desires, our anticipations. It is not possible that all affairs can be pulled off to our liking. Total depravity may not exactly inhere in inanimate things, but there are certain to be occasions when we shall be tempted to think so. And the depravity of people will unquestionably come within our purview during our peregrinations. Trains will not always keep to their schedule. Conveyances will occasionally break down. Storms will interfere with our most cherished plans. Folks will be inconsiderate, thoughtless, selfish, obtuse to our desires and heedless of our needs. There will be difficulties which we had not looked for, interruptions that have no apparent justification, obstacles well nigh insuperable. What travelers have not been tried in this way? And how variously they have met these trials! Some are unperturbed. They take it as a welcome challenge to their ingenuity. They like a spice of adventure, something out of the common, not cut and dried. They find a stimulus in coming up against situations out of which they must work a way for themselves. Their spirits never fail. They are equal to any emergency and take a pride in so being. They rise to the call. They are serene, buoyant, cheerful, hopeful. Others—how easily cast down and disturbed, how full of complaints and evil prognostications, how hard to suit, how quickly upset, how unreasonable in their demands, what a sharp thorn in the side of those responsible for the excursion, how difficult to smooth over.

It is a keen test of character; much keener than is commonly afforded when we are so hemmed in by necessity and custom and routine that we have little freedom of choice or opportunity for showing what we really are. We learn what our friends are by going on a journey with them; we also discover ourselves. It may be turned—this latter part especially—into a most helpful means of grace. If we are chagrined and mortified at our manifest lack of self-control, if we are distressed at being so readily distressed, it may be made a prelude to decided improvement. On the other hand, if we ride the waves triumphantly we have a better right to self-congratulation or to magnifying the grace of God than before we had thus proved the grace. Christians have a chance to honor their Master under such circumstances in a way that is sure to be appreciated. They can scatter so much sunshine that the source of it will not be mistaken. They can speak helpful words, minister to minds uneasy, put a bright aspect on things doleful, minimize troubles and be the life of the party. Vexations may thus be turned into vivifications of low spirits, verifications of the promises of God and vocalizations of his praises.

Happy is he and wise who can plan his vacation so skillfully as to get out of it the largest returns of health and abiding benefit with smallest cost in money and fatigue. Still happier is he who is so rich in God's love, so plentifully dowered with a contented spirit that when he is deprived of that which he sees many others enjoying finds no murmur rising in his breast, but lays hold of the many sources of satisfaction still left him and chants his pean of praise to the All-Father with undiminished fullness of peace.

THE STORIES OF JUAN

By W. E. Garrison

These are the stories that Juan told me as we two sat by the camp-fire in the Canon de los Frijoles. Behind us rose five hundred feet of sheer cliff, honeycombed with the cave-rooms where Juan's ancestors had lived when the Caesars ruled in Rome. The half-moon slipped slowly westward just above the south wall of the canyon which faced us. The fire burned low, and the candle which I had set in my cave-room shone flickeringly through the narrow doorway and made a wavering spot of light on the opposite cliff which the moon left in deep shadow. We were deep in the heart of the cliff-dwelling country, a place of mystery, more mysterious still by moonlight, where any wild legend seemed more true than the most accurate deductions of science. In such a place, the presence of an Indian scarcely breaks the solitude. He becomes part of the scenery. But Juan and I were bound together by the experiences of many long trips through the mountains and the desert. Together we had sought out many an ancient and obliterated trail, found many a forgotten ruin, and endured the inconveniences of many a dry camp.

Around the camp-fire, conversation began. We had seen the tracks of a bear that afternoon up the canon and were planning to go after him before daylight the next morning.

The Coyote Woman.

"Juan", I said, "The people down at Zuñi say that the bears and coyotes and rattle snakes and all the other animals are really men, and that, away back in their own estufas where they hold their councils, that they take off their snake-skins or bear-skins these and look and talk just like other men. But if anyone happens to surprise them, they jump into their animal skins again in such a hurry that the man who saw them can't be sure whether he really saw them or just imagined it. Do you suppose it is really true that the animals are just a kind of men with animal skins on?"

"I don't know if it is or not," said Juan. "But the old men in the Pueblo say that some men can make themselves look like animals when they want to."

"Then I should think there would be danger of their being killed by the hunters."

"No, they can't be killed. Even if they got shot in the heart, it makes no difference. They run off just the same. Not many of these people live now, though. They were long while ago."

"You know," he continued, "there used to be pueblo up near Santa Cruz, 'bout three miles up the arroyo. You know where those old walls are. What they call it? Yes, San Cristobal de Santa Cruz. That's it. Some of those Indians after while went to live at Pueblo Bonita in Chaco Canon, and then they went out to Moki-land."

A pause. "Yes," I put in encouragingly, "they live in the Pueblo of Tewa now, on the First Mesa, and the Mokis call them the Keepers of the Trail."

"That so? Well, once when they lived up by Santa Cruz, there was a man there had a wife that could make himself like a deer, coyote, bear, snake, anything he please. This woman, he used to go round in the woods like a deer or bear, and sometimes men out hunting they shot her. She fall down like dead, but she always pull the arrow out right away and get up all right and run off, so they never kill her. Of course they never knew it was this woman. And the man that had her for his wife, he never knew she did this.

"Well, after while she die, all by itself. About one or three months after, her husband went out hunting. It was winter time and snow all over the ground, and that night he had to sleep out in the woods. While he was eating his supper a coyote come up to him and ask him for something to eat. So he throw a piece of cornbread and a piece of meat to it, and the coyote eat it. Then the coyote ask, don't you know who I am? And the man say, no, I don't know who you are. And the coyote say, I was the woman that was your wife that die month or two ago. Then it run away and don't say anything more.

"Well, you know that round mesa just below San Ildefonso. Well, there was a man had a trap down by that and the next morning he found a coyote in it and it was dead when he got there. The other man was there, too, the same time. They went to skin that coyote, and when they cut it open they found that same piece of cornbread and piece of meat that that man gave to the coyote that was the woman that was his wife that die month or two before.

"They say she must be witch, so he didn't care very much."

The Koshare.

"Why is it, Juan, that so many of the clans in the different pueblos have the names of animals?"

"I don't know. Only those men that belong to those clans know that, and they mustn't tell."

"How many clans are there in your pueblo?"

"Well, there's Deer, Bear, Turquise, Sun, Koshare—I guess 'bout seven."

"Which one is yours?"

"Sun."

"Does your wife belong to your clan?"

"No. Man always marries outside his own clan."

"Do the children belong to their father's clan, then, or to their mother's?"

"They belong to their mother's clan. Only the Koshare are not like the others. They are not born in it, but in some other clan, and are made Koshare afterward. They have to study a long while and learn many things."

"I suppose it is a great honor to be a Koshare?"

"Oh, yes."

"Who are the Koshares and what do they represent? Of course, I've seen them in the dances, where they have their faces painted white with black lines, and where they make jokes and play tricks on everybody to make the people laugh. But what does it all mean?"

"Well, they represent the Sun. You know all Indians came out of the earth at Si-pa-fi-ne. That must be somewhere up near Ojo Caliente. For awhile they all went naked. Didn't have any clothes at all. The sun was pretty hot and they all got burned brown. Then a man came along with a kind of cap or some pine leaves on his head, and gave the people some cotton seeds and told them when they got along farther south they could plant that and

QUIT WHITE BREAD
Could Not Get Strength From It.

A Yorkstate minister, who is interested not only in the spiritual welfare of his congregation, but in their physical well-being, says:

"I can now do an immense amount of work and feel no fatigue, for the reason that I am using Grape-Nuts food and have quit coffe entirely and am using Postum Food Coffee in its place.

"Myself and family are all greatly improved in health. We have largely abandoned the use of white bread. Upwards of twenty-five persons have changed their diet, on my recommendation. It is gladly given, because I know, from personal experience, whereof I speak."

It is a well-known fact that white bread is almost entirely composed of starch and this is difficult of digestion by many people particularly those who have weak intestinal digestion. The result of the use of much white bread is a lack of brain and nervous power to do mental work and it also creates intestinal troubles, because the excess of starch ferments in the intestines and makes the condition right for the growth of microbes; whereas Grape-Nuts food contains the needed starch, but in a predigested form. That is, it is transformed into grape-sugar in the process of manufacture, and delivered in the packages, ready cooked, and in such shape that it is immediately assimilated without hard work of the digestive organs.

The food also contains the delicate particles of phosphate of potash which, combined with albumen, is used by Nature to make the gray matter in the cells of the brain and the nerve centres throughout the body, in order to give strength and ability to stand long and continuous work. "There's a Reason." Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

raise cotton, and make some clothes out of that. This man that gave them the cotton seeds was the Sun. He went along with them for awhile, and whenever they got tired or didn't feel good and wanted to stop before they got to the right place, he danced and sang and played tricks and did things to make them laugh. That's why the Koshare do those things in the dances now and paint their faces white. They stand for the Sun that gave the people cotton to make clothes out of and made the people feel happy while they were going from Si-pa-fi-ne to the place down here where they live."

Montezuma.

"Well, Juan, you said that all the Indians came out of the earth at Si-pa-fi-ne. Did the white men come out of there, too?"

"No; just the Indians."

"Where did the white men come from?"

"I don't know. You're a white man. You must know."

"But where were the Indians before they came out?"

"Down below. There must be some kind of earth down there where they lived before they came up to this earth. I don't know what it is like, though. I guess people go back there when they die, if they've been good. If they have been bad, I don't know what."

"Didn't you tell me once that Montezuma was born at Ojo Caliente?"

"Yes; right at Ojo Caliente."

"That must have been soon after the people came out at Si-pa-fi-ne."

"Yes; not right away, but pretty soon. They hadn't gone very far, but the Pueblo Indians had gone off one way and the Navajos and Utes and Apaches another, so they were not together any more.

"You know, when all the Indians came out of the earth, of course the Pueblos came out first, then the Utes and Navajos and Apaches and the others. One day, before they had gone very far, the Navajos and Apaches and Utes got to throwing stones to the Pueblos, and the Pueblos said because they did that they would always be fighting. And you know those Indians always have been fighting, but the Pueblos don't fight very much.

"Well, a little while after that the Pueblo Indians were around near Ojo Caliente and all the people went up in the mountains to gather piñon nuts. There was an old woman and her daughter went out with the rest, and the old woman got tired and sat down under a tree. After while a man that she didn't know came up and asked could he speak to her daughter. She said all right. So he asked how many rooms they had in their house. She said two. Then he gave the girl three piñon nuts and told her to go home and put one piñon nut in the first room, the other in the next room, and to swallow the other without mashing it, and then to go to somebody else's house and not go home till next day.

"Well, the old woman and her daughter went home and did what the man say, and the girl swallowed the third nut and then went to somebody else's house. Next morning she went home. She went into the first room and found it full of corn, and she went into the next room and found it full of beans. Well, then, she knew she was going to have a child, and about noon Montezuma was born. This girl was his mother. I guess he didn't have any real father. I don't know who that man was who gave her the piñon nuts. I ought to ask the old men about that so I know.

"In six days Montezuma had grown to be a man. Well, one day he was walking around Ojo Caliente and he met God. He stopped and they shook hands, and God asked him who he was, and he said he was Montezuma, the Indians' god. Then God asked him what food he had for his people, and he said corn and beans and deer and bear and turkey and all kinds of wild animals. You know they got the corn and beans from those two piñon nuts I just told you about. Then Montezuma asked God what kind of food he had for his people, and he said wheat and cattle and sheep and chickens. Then God asked Montezuma what he had to shoot with, and he said bow and arrow and lightning. Then Montezuma asked God what he had to shoot with, and he said gun.

"Then they arranged for God to come to see Montezuma in Ojo Caliente, and have a big feast. So Montezuma had his people all get ready. They cooked blue cornbread and beans, and a kind of pudding made out of corn, and Montezuma whistled on a kind of whistle that he had and the deers and wild turkeys came in and they killed them and cooked them. When they got all ready God came and they had a big feast. God ate all those things and told Montezuma it was all right, very good. Then Montezuma said he like to eat God's kind of food. So God got up a big feast and had wheat and beef and sheep and all those good things. Montezuma ate and said it was good, and said he would like to have those things for his people.

"Then God said he would like to see Montezuma shoot. So Montezuma took his bow and arrow and shot into a tree, and the arrow went in 'bout that far (measuring off about two feet)—no, I guess 'bout that far (one foot). Then God shot with his gun and the bullet went in about the same. Then Montezuma shot with his lightning, and it knocked the tree all to pieces. God said that was too strong, he mustn't use that. If he let his people use that, pretty soon there won't be any people left in the world. So Montezuma say all right, he won't use his lightning any more if God give him his kind of food, wheat and cattle and sheep, for his people.

"So they do that. Then Montezuma say he has to go way south where there's a big lake. I don't know where it is. But sometime, he say, he come back again to his people, and while he's gone he want God to look out for them. And he say, too, that if God don't take care of them, and they get in trouble with other people, then he come back again right off and use his lightning anyway.

"That's the way old men told the story to me. I don't know if it's true or not. Now tell me where your people come from."

GIVER of all joy, our loving Heavenly Father, let our quiet times and hours of rest be filled with a delightful sense of Thy presence, and grant us health in times of pleasure that we may not offend against Thy law of love. Give us to see more of Thy thought in the beauty of the earth and of Thy purpose in the lives of men. Increase our sympathy with our brothers in their pleasure and their pain. Renew our strength, quicken our faculties, that we may be better fitted for the work Thou hast given us to do. We thank Thee for Thy fatherly love and care in the days gone by, for wayside mercies and for the satisfactions and compensations of our work. To Thee be praise for Thy continual goodness and for our hope of the eternal life with Thee. In the name of Christ, Amen.

A SMALL SECRET

Couldn't Understand the Taste of his Customers.

Two men were discussing the various food products now being supplied in such variety and abundance.

One, a grocer, said, "I frequently try a package or so of any certain article before offering it to my trade, and in that way sometimes form a different idea than my customers have.

"For instance, I thought I would try some Postum Food Coffee, to see what reason there was for such a call for it. At breakfast I didn't like it and supper proved the same, so I naturally concluded that my taste was different from that of the customers who bought it right along.

"A day or two after I waited on a lady who was buying a 25c package and told her I couldn't understand how one could fancy the taste of Postum.

"'I know just what is the matter,' she said. 'You put the coffee boiler on the stove for just fifteen minutes, and ten minutes of that time it simmered, and perhaps five minutes it boiled. Now if you will have it left to boil full fifteen minutes after it commences to boil, you will find a delicious Java-like beverage, rich in food value of gluten and phosphates, so choice that you will never abandon it, particularly when you see the great gain in health.' Well, I took another trial, and sure enough I joined the Postum army for good, and life seems worth living since I have gotten rid of my old-time stomach and kidney troubles."

Postum is no sort of medicine, but pure liquid food, and this, together with a relief from coffee, worked the change. "There's a Reason."

How to Have a Working Church—II

By George L. Bush

In the selection of persons who are to lead in any department of the church or to serve in any official capacity, great care should be exercised. It is not wise "to push into prominence conceited people who happen to have large purses or social conspicuousness." The best workers often come from homes of humble social rank; no one should be given such position "unless he has earned it by consecration to the Master's service." There are cases where the church has done some costly experimenting by making an officer out of a man in the hope of enlisting him in the work and keeping him out of sin; or some worldly-minded, pleasure-seeking woman has been given a class in the Bible school with a view to saving her. Unregenerate teachers are responsible for much of the leakage in our schools. Our young people are not likely to be led to Christ by teachers who forsake the prayer-meeting and the revival for the ballroom or card party. Men whose lives are openly at variance with both the letter and spirit of the gospel should not be tolerated upon any church board. The members can not be expected to work heartily under the leadership of those in whom they have little confidence and for whom they have scant respect. A general shaking up and weeding out would help to make working churches out of some who are dragging heavily and wearily along. A place should be found for every member and a determined and continued effort made to put each one to work. Seek to know what each one is best fitted for, and set him to work and see that he keeps at it. Ask the members to do things, repeat the request if necessary, and come back next day with a new one; don't get discouraged, never give up or let up! Consecrated people will ask for something to do, but more timid ones will have to be drawn out. Some ardent souls will do things that are indiscreet, but such are of more value to the church than the overprudent and fastidious sort. While a few may have to be held with a check rein, several will need to be spurred to a better speed. The minister will be pained by the lack of backbone in one from whom he hoped much, and worried by too much jawbone in another. Here is one to be cured of periodical backsliding and there another afflicted with perpetual pharisaism. Thus the good pastor must combine the patience of the mother with her children, the optimism of the teacher with his pupils, the persistence of an insurance agent and the good cheer of an angel of commerce. Such a combination will win, by an enthusiasm that is infectious, a persuasion that can not be resisted and a pressure that drives where it can not lead.

3. A wise organization of the forces. It is still the fashion, in some quarters, to condemn "church machinery." Sometimes good men are led to commit this folly. "This is an age of machinery. Everything is highly organized, in business, education, society and religion. The twentieth century is not the first or the sixteenth; and when it seeks to be any other century but the twentieth it simply makes itself silly. The time has come when the man or the church not alive to the importance of adapting progressive, modern methods to the demands of the day, will surely fail to hold their own. Competition is almost as sharp in the church as in business, and the pastor owes it to the great cause which he presents to put forth every effort, and utilize every legitimate means in carrying forward the work of the church. The one great need in the majority of our towns and small cities and in the rural places as well, is the introduction in modified form, of the modern methods which have been so wonderfully successful in reaching and saving men in the great cities." Many congregations are running in ruts, hoary with age, and the saddest part of it is, that the preacher seems content to let them run on or is afraid of results if he should shake them out. The order of service never varies, methods of work never change, all things continue as of old, the members have gone to sleep and the sinners have slipped beyond their reach. Our people have generally been very much afraid of innovations, and so have been slow about using new methods until their orthodoxy was approved by those who seemed to be in authority. Any plan that leaves most of the members idle and the community without suitable ministry should be abandoned. Methods that do not contravene any precept or principle of the gospel, and have been used with success elsewhere may be safely and should be speedily adopted.

The average congregation of to-day needs helpers similar to the seven men selected by the church at Jerusalem. This committee was chosen at the suggestion of the apostles to meet a real need in this church. It was a "business" committee on "daily ministration." It is hard to find any striking parallel between the qualifications and duties of this local committee and those of the later order of deacons. It is evident that the work had grown beyond the pastoral care of the apostles and these men were selected to assist them in ministering to this growing church. They were more like pastoral helpers to the apostles than any other church workers of our day. Preachers in the larger cities generally have one or more such assistants. They are also needed in the smaller places. If such helpers can be found among the elders and deacons, use these as far as possible, but feel free to select others who possess the needed qualifications and will do the work required. Paul did not hesitate to use women as well as men to help him in his ministry. The number of such helpers should be limited to the size of the field and their duties to its needs. In almost any congregation it is possible to enlist a volunteer band for such service. As an example of this method attention is called to the plan used very successfully by the writer in his own ministry:

> The Pastoral Helpers Band of the Dixon Street Christian Church is an organization which seeks to help the minister do Christ's work in our city. The members visit the sick and the strangers, care for the needy and the distressed, seek to win back the wayward, and enlist the indifferent, secure new pupils for the Bible School, increase the attendance at all the services, distribute literature, promote sociability, let in the sunshine, and in every way possible manifest Christ to Gainesville.
> MOTTO: "Not to be ministered unto but to minister."
> Trusting in Jesus Christ for strength, I promise to devote ..... afternoon each month to service for Christ and the Church, unless prevented by some excuse that I am willing to give to Him. It is understood that this work is to be done under the direction of our minister and the superintendent of the district in which I live.

There is also urgent need for the organization of classes for the systematic study of God's word and practical training in Christian work. Ignorance of the Scriptures is one of the chief barriers to larger service. The members hesitate about undertaking any definite work because of their lack of preparation for doing it creditably. Such classes should give the needed instruction and also provide practical training. There is a wealth of courses.

NOTHING IS LOST.

Nothing is lost! the drop of rain
That falls in silence to the ground,
Abideth still; its soul is found
Transfigured in the golden grain.

Nothing is lost! the lowly flower
That grows unnoticed by the way,
Lives well in praising, its short day,
The God who made it by His power.

Nothing is lost! the falling tear,
The word of comfort, lightly given,
Shall still abide in yonder Heaven,
When earth's rich fruitage shall appear.

—The church at Exira, Iowa, will have C. A. Polson, of Effingham, Kan., to minister to them. He preaches in both Swedish and English.

—C. F. Ladd, of Mendota, Ill., has been called to fill the Rock Falls pulpit until September 1, with a view to locating as permanent pastor.

—Miss Pearl Denham, who has acted in the capacity of assistant to several pastors, has just married Mr. O. C. Miller, at Bloomington, Ill.

—S. G. Fisher, of Woodward Avenue Church, Detroit, Mich., has taken unto himself a pastoral helper in the person of a wife. W. Hayes Miller, of Durand, in the same state, has also joined the circle of benedicts.

—The Virginia State Convention will be held in conjunction with the Piedmont Assembly, July 30-August 2. The place is Gordonsville, Va.

—Dean Haggard, of Drake University, is summering in the Rocky Mountains, and is to give a Bible reading at the Colorado Assembly at Gato.

—The congregation in Waynesburg, under the care of F. A. Bright, has just been presented with a beautiful individual communion service.

—W. L. Dudley is ready to correspond with churches with a view to locating, and desires to remain in Virginia. He may be addressed at Oranda.

—The First Church at Pittsburg is indebted to the Ladies' Aid Society for a handsome new communion table and a desk for the pastor's study.

—J. T. T. Hundley notes with pleasure the co-operation of every church around Hampton Roads in preparation for the great convention at Norfolk.

—W. O. Dallas, a recent graduate of the Texas Christian University, has been engaged as assistant pastor to J. B. Holmes at the church at Beaumont.

—G. R. Hull has entered upon the pastorate at Benton Harbor, Mich., and W. F. Wills, a graduate of Bethany College, has taken the work at Saranac.

—The Bible school at Alliance, Ohio, has just begun a contest with Brother Welshimer's great class, which is to continue during July, August and September.

—The church at Bakersfield, Cal., has abandoned all methods of raising money for any purposes, except by free will offering. Cal Ogburn is the minister.

—N. A. Stull having decided to go to Iowa, Walter G. Carter, who preached several times for the church at Vineland, Colo., has received and accepted a call.

—The congregation at Valley City, Iowa, is sending G. A. Hess, its pastor, and his family to their old home in Illinois, with salary continued and all expenses paid.

—We regret to learn that Flournoy Payne, minister of our church at Rifle, Colo., was taken ill on June 13, and that his sickness developed into typhoid fever.

—The brethren at Longmont, Colo., have called C. C. Dobbs, of Des Moines, Iowa. The pulpit will be supplied until September 1 by E. M. Miller, of Boulder.

—At Fort Morgan, Colo., our brethren have purchased the property of the United Presbyterian church, a brick building centrally located, and seating about 300 people.

—The church at Fayette, Mo., is to take on a new appearance in preparation for the protracted meeting to begin on July 23. Inside decoration will be attended to later on.

—The Southwestern Iowa District Convention will be held at Logan, August 20-22. The Northwestern district will meet in convention at Rock Rapids, August 27-29.

—C. C. Bearden has been telling the citizens of Clarendon, Texas, how they may improve their little city. It was in an excellent article contributed to the local paper.

—The second district convention of Missouri will be held at Odessa, July 24-26. The sixth district convention will be at Canton, July 29-31. Fine programs have been arranged.

—J. W. Ellis goes to Siloam Springs, Ark., to enter upon Bible lectures at the Chautauqua this week. He will give six lectures at the Bentonville Chautauqua, beginning July 21.

—The brethren at Albany, Ore., expect to go to Turner with a clean record, their mortgage having just been burned. The indebtedness has been a heavy handicap for a number of years.

—We have received, too late for other than the briefest notice, the program of the jubilee convention of the California churches, which is to be held at Santa Cruz, July 23-August 4.

—The church at Meeker, Col., has decided to secure a preacher as soon as possible, but the pulpit will be supplied for the time being by Jasper Bogue, who is to go to Drake University in September.

—M. C. Hughes, minister of the church at Bicknell, Ind., writes us that one of the best lots in town has been purchased and a neat parsonage will soon be completed. He reports the work in good condition.

—The Thirtieth Street Church, Newport News, Va., was dedicated on the last Lord's day in June, J. J. Haley assisting. On the same date a new church was dedicated at Mitchell, State Secretary H. C. Combs being in charge.

—F. Douglass Wharton writes from Plain View, Texas, that the brethren there are busily engaged in erecting a $6,000 brick church. The Sunday-school has been reorganized and a strong Ladies' Aid Society started.

—The decision of the Iowa convention to hold the next conference in tents at Des Moines, is a decision that may be followed by other conventions. In the South the brethren think nothing of spending a couple of weeks at a camp-meeting convention in the very hottest weather.

—Sumner A. Martin, who has been acting as city evangelist of the Chicago Christian Mission Society, is ready to consider work in another field, either as pastor or evangelist. He may be addressed at 2136 Congress street, Chicago, Ill.

—The church at Dunmore, Pa., has had a very prosperous year. All the missionary offerings were larger than those of the preceding year. The amount contributed by the members for all purposes was about $5,000. Richard Bagby is the pastor.

—T. L. Fowler has resigned at Minerva, Ohio, to go back to his old home church at Poplar Hill, Canada. That congregation has been after him for some time, and he agreed to return if they would build a new house of worship. This they have done and now claim his promise.

—William Ross Lloyd, who has been supplying A. C. Smither's pulpit, pronounces Grant K. Lewis "a dynamo of energy in this whole country." The Southern California secretary is not a big man in stature, but he certainly has the energy necessary for success in his field.

—It is expected that work on the new house of worship at Colorado City will be begun shortly. William Bayard Craig, who was Chancellor of Drake University when the minister, Brother Bower, was a student there, recently visited the church in the interest of the building fund.

—J. R. Blunt reports progress at Marionville, Mo. All the missionary enterprises have been remembered through this church, which for some years previous had done nothing for missionaries, partly because they had no regular minister and partly because they were erecting a new building.

—At the last meeting of the executive committee of the Foreign Society, Leslie Wolfe and wife of Zearing, Iowa, were appointed missionaries to Manila, P. I.; T. A. Young, Lexington, Ky., was appointed to Japan. Miss Eva May Raw, Marysville Ohio, was also appointed, her field of labor to be fixed later on.

—Finis Idleman was able to be present at the Iowa convention, though he showed the signs of his recent serious illness. Members of the Central Church, of Des Moines, have just given him and his wife a surprise in the presentation of an elegant phaeton. The gift was not from the church as such, but from individual members.

—Talmage Defrees has put out a weekly announcement sheet for the church at Frankford, Mo. We note that he gives considerable space to the San Francisco situation. One reason why many of our offerings are not as great as they might be is that the minister frequently does not understand the art of making announcements.

—We see a report that the church at Berkeley, Cal., has hope of securing I. N. McCash as pastor. Brother McCash has been doing good work for the Anti-Saloon League, having resigned an important pastorate to enter upon the temperance work. Whether he feels the time has come for him to get back to the regular ministry again we do not know.

—A splendid unity is being exhibited by our two churches at Fort Worth, Texas. The buildings are in close proximity, and the Tabernacle Church is pastorless. By invitation from them the First Church meets in their own building for the morning service and at the Tabernacle in the evening. J. J. Morgan, the pastor of the First Church, conducts both services.

—David Rioch and family sailed last Saturday on the S. S. "Furnessia," of the Anchor Line, en route to India. By the way, there are only two children in the family, not three, as announced in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST some weeks ago. Their visit to this country has been a delight to them and to the brotherhood at large. They go back to do some more pioneer work, and they will be followed especially by the prayers of the Union Avenue Church, St. Louis, Mo., and the East Dallas Church, Texas, whose living links they are.

Did you ever try an advertisement in the Subscribers' Wants columns of The Christian-Evangelist? Others have, with satisfactory results. Our "want ads." bring returns.

—The editor of the "Christian Courier" does not expect to be in his office this summer, having made arrangements to refresh himself by holding some evangelistic meetings. The change from his office grind will no doubt be a relief to Brother Faris. His son Ellsworth will look after the details that are necessary in the production of the paper. This will no doubt be a change from the lecture work he has been engaged in at the Texas Christian University.

—A. J. Bush has been in a meeting at Stamford, Texas. It is just fifty years ago since Brother Bush was baptized by John McCune in Boonville county, Missouri. From his early days, even before he united with the Church, he felt that some day he must be a preacher. For thirty-five years now he has been a minister of the Word, and under him between 3,000 and 4,000 people have been led to Christ. He writes that he is strong in both body and mind, and that his zeal was never more ardent than now. We rejoice with Brother Bush, not only in the fine record he has made in the service of the Church, but that he is still able to love and serve.

GARRISON PARK,

Pentwater, Mich.

We claim for this new resort what are the essential requisites of an ideal summer resort:

1. Freedom from depressing heat, with delightfully cool and refreshing breezes, coming over the water.
2. Boating and fishing facilities afforded by the presence of Lake Michigan, which the resort fronts, and Lake Pentwater, a smaller lake which lies in the rear of it.
3. Beautiful scenery—a combination of landscape and of lake views, which is unexcelled.
4. Perfect healthfulness of location, and the purest of water.
5. A beautiful broad beach and splendid bathing.
6. Cheap lots on easy terms of payment, with fine views of either lake, and abundance of shade trees.
7. The beginning of a summer colony, on virgin soil, where we may make the conditions ideal for realizing physical and mental recuperation, with religious privileges, in the midst of congenial companionship.

Pentwater is located on the east shore of Lake Michigan, a little over 200 miles from Chicago via the Pere Marquette Railroad, or 120 miles across the Lake from Chicago, and may be reached directly by the steamer "Kansas" which leaves Chicago Monday, Thursday and Saturday evenings, arriving at Pentwater the next morning at seven, or via Muskegon on any evening by the Goodrich line of steamers. The latter connect at Muskegon with the Pere Marquette Railway, and reach Pentwater at 11.15 a. m.

—J. R. Blunt dedicated a new church recently at Stotts City, Lawrence county, Mo. The membership numbers only about 30, with only two male members. T. H. Harland found this little band something over a year ago, discouraged and without leadership, but under his care they have taken on new life, paid off a debt to the Church Extension Society, and have a building free from all encumbrances. They have sent an urgent call for the county convention to meet with them in the autumn.

—G. L. Bush, whose articles on "How to Have a Working Church" we are now publishing, is one of the most popular of our Texas preachers. He is a son of A. J. Bush, who is just celebrating fifty years in Christian service. George Bush is, according to G. A. Faris, who has recently visited Gainesville personally, pursuing his usual methods, and ere long will have a promising mission in the eastern part of the city. Brother Faris writes in enthusiastic terms of the work in Houston, where A. F. Sanderson ministers and at Beaumont, where J. B. Holmes is the aggressive leader.

—We received a communication from Ernest C. Mobley with reference to Brother Tyler's visit to England, but the facts were presented in other letters, which we published. It seems strange in the midst of the excessively hot weather in St. Louis to receive a postal card from Brother Mobley, dated Southampton, June 25, and stating that it was still winter in old England. He reports one of the largest congregations on the preceding Sunday evening that he had had for a long time, and there were five conversions. Remfrey Hunt, missionary to China, who is now at his old home on a furlough, was to preach for him the following Sunday.

—All congregations within ten or fifteen miles of Albany, Mo., are interested in the meetings which Herbert Yeuell and Arthur Wake began last Lord's day. C. H. Mattox, the minister of the church at Albany, writes us that it is expected to follow up this meeting with other meetings, so that the whole county may be evangelized. Last summer stress was laid upon local option, and it carried the county two to one. Brother Mattox will have covered the larger part of the county with special meetings before this campaign opens. A fine location has been secured for a new church building in Albany, and it is hoped that this will be one result of the present effort.

—The foundation of the new church building at New Albany, Ind., is now being laid, and it is hoped to have the building completed by February of next year. We will have more to say of the style of the structure at another time. B. F. Cato has had charge of this work for about three and one-half years, entering upon it when the congregation was almost ready to give up through discouragement, financial incumbrances and other hindrances. During his pastorate there have been 385 new members added, and the missionary offerings are all taken. The congregation is now united and active. This is an excellent report that Brother Cato and the church at New Albany are able to present.

—The last Lord's day in June was jubilee day at Mitchell Park Christian Church, St. Joseph, Mo. A "joyful noise" was made over the fact that the congregation is now out of debt. At the afternoon service the pastors and some members from the other Christian churches, except King Hill, were present, and addresses were made by T. H. Capp, M. M. Goode, D. T. Short, J. C. Wyatt and C. M. Chilton. This church, which was organized in 1897, is a result of a Sunday-school started four years earlier. The present building was dedicated in 1903. The property is worth about $8,000, and C. A. Lowe is the minister who is making things go.

Jubilee Service in Denver.

The Central Christian Church, Denver, Colo., has raised $6,500 (will make it $7,000) to pay off all indebtedness, put the church building in first-class condition and make some improvements in the front entrance. The church is prosperous. In less than four years, since the present pastorate began, over 600 have been received into the membership. The Bible school has grown from 150 to 400, the missionary offerings from $100 to $1,300. We raised nearly $10,000 for church purposes last year. The Bible school holds the banner for the Rocky Mountain region, it raised $908.35 on its May rally day. We will give $800 to Colorado missions this year. Colorado is twice as large as Iowa and in all the state we have no more members than they have in Polk county. Colorado is filling up in every part and is prosperous. Vast irrigation projects are bringing a multitude of home seekers to us. No one else will look after this state if we neglect it.

We are planning aggressive mission work for this growing and beautiful city. Our dear old friend, John C. Hay, of Los Angeles, preached for South Broadway in the absence of B. B. Tyler. We have been holding union prayer-meetings, five churches, with the utmost success. Denver will be heard from after awhile. We are getting enthusiastic again. The long depression made some of the Denver members feel old.

About the San Francisco Offering.

After speaking on Sunday at the First Church, Hannibal, I leave for California. The hearts of the San Francisco representatives and our people in the stricken district are overflowing with gratitude to the great brotherhood for the kind reception they have given our message. It is, of course, too early yet to estimate the result of the offering. We wait in faith and hope and prayer. Brother Ford continues the work in Missouri until August 1. Brother Cave is closing in Kentucky and Tennessee, and Brother Russell has already returned to California. To the brethren of Missouri I beg to say that much depends upon the generosity of their gifts to San Francisco—how much they will understand a little later when announcement of some generous conditional gifts by Missouri donors is made. To the brotherhood at large I would say: If you have not yet taken the offering kindly arrange to do so as soon as possible. We are pleading for an offering from every church. Until we receive this, or a measureable approximation toward it, we can not permit our voice to be stilled. As fast as the funds are received at Cincinnati they will be forwarded to San Francisco, where they are urgently needed. If your church has taken the offering see that it is sent in as soon as possible. If it has not yet taken it, please arrange for it at an early date. Supplies may be ordered from Cincinnati. P. C. MACFARLANE.

For Church Extension.

The First Church, Pomona, Cal., has taken out a named fund in Church Extension. This is the first congregation on the Pacific coast to do this. Madison A. Hart is the pastor. The First Church, Portland, Ore., decided on Sunday, June 23, to create a named fund, making the second congregation on the coast to create a named fund in Church Extension. E. S. Muckley is the pastor at Portland. The Portland church was voted a $5,000 loan when they built four years ago, but did not use the money. The First Church, Seattle, Wash., A. L. Chapman, pastor, hopes to begin a named fund in September. This church received a $4,000 loan to build and has paid the loan. Church Extension now has twenty-three named funds. What church will create the twenty-fifth?

Recently the Board of Church Extension received a gift of $200 on the annuity plan from a good sister in Ohio. This is the board's one hundred and ninety-first annuity gift, and the board must receive many gifts on the annuity plan before the time of our Centennial when it is hoped to raise the annuity fund to $300,000. For particulars in reference to this plan address G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Waterworks building, Kansas City, Mo.

To the Brotherhood of Arkansas:

This is to introduce to you J. J. Taylor, of Lexington, Ky., who has accepted the work of corresponding secretary and evangelist of Arkansas. E. C. Browning, after eleven years of faithful and efficient service, lays down the work and a younger man takes it up. You will give Brother Taylor a royal welcome, I know. He must have something more than a welcome, however cordial. It is support and co-operation that he needs. He will visit you and help you just as fast as he can. Extend to him a loyal and liberal hand.

Little Rock, Ark. J. N. JESSUP.

W. F. Richardson's Anniversary.

An incident at the First Christian Church, Kansas City, Sunday morning, June 30, marked the day as one to be remembered by pastor and people. The occasion was the fifty-fifth birthday anniversary of W. F. Richardson, who is now in his thirteenth year as pastor of this historic church. Unknown to him the pulpit was decorated. As he entered the church for the morning service the entire congregation arose, gave the Chautauqua salute and sang "Blest be the tie that binds." There was then handed to him an appreciation signed by every member of the official board. The selections rendered by the choir were his favorites. This had the effect of deepening the impression upon him. In referring to the incident, he expressed his appreciation and referred to the uniform consideration which had been shown him and his family throughout his entire pastorate. In further recognition of the day a number of brethren and sisters, formerly members of First church, but now having their membership elsewhere in the city, were present. Two of these, having been members of the official board, assisted in serving at the table as they had done in days gone by. All were greatly edified by the spirit which prompted the incident and which ran through every feature of it, as indeed through the services of the entire day. BARCLAY MEADOR.

Ministerial Relief Trustees.

The Board of Ministerial Relief of the Church of Christ is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Indiana, and, according to requirements of the law and its articles of incorporation, there will be a meeting at the Central Christian Church, Indianapolis, Ind., on Monday, August 5, 1907, at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating persons who shall constitute the board of trustees for the ensuing five years. All contributing members and all duly accredited delegates from congregations of the Church of Christ contributing to the funds of the board have a right to vote.

A. L. ORCUTT, President.

Our International Convention.

Our annual national convention will meet in Norfolk, Va., October 11-17, 1907. We propose to make this a memorable occasion in the history of our brotherhood.

The Jamestown Ter-Centennial exposition in commemoration of the first permanent settlement of English-speaking people in America will present attractions of unusual interest and enjoyment and great crowds will be in this city in the month of October to witness such. We therefore respectfully invite immediate correspondence. We are now in position to make reasonable terms and to secure good accommodations for every one coming.

Take up this matter at once, and make your plans to be with us in October. All accommodations should be secured in advance so as to save inconveniences. Prices at hotels range from $1 up, European plan. Plenty of good homes in private families at $1 for lodging and 35 and 50 cents for meals.

J. G. HOLLADAY,
Chairman Entertainment Committee.
Address 507 Law building.

The above is a bird's-eye view of the village and lake of Pentwater. The lake extends much further, of course, to the right than is shown in the picture, while the channel into the larger lake is further to the left of the picture, near where the boat is seen standing at its dock. The railroad in the foreground is on the same side of the lake as Oceana Beach and Garrison Park, which front Lake Michigan, which is three or four minutes' walk distant. The highest point of Garrison Park commands not only the view offered in this picture, but a much wider one, including a broad sweep of Lake Michigan.

A Good Year for the Foreign Society.

This has been a good year for the foreign society. The hand of the Lord has been present on every side. The great spiritual impulse awakened at the Buffalo convention has not expended itself even yet. The foreign missionary rallies in the early part of the year touched high water mark. The preachers and other leaders took exceptional pains in preparation for the March offering. Extra effort was put upon children's day. To the end of June there had been a gain of 255 contributing churches. Not only so, but there has been a gain of more than $10,000 in the receipts from the churches, as churches. The Sunday-schools have gained $5,978 in their gifts. The annuity account shows a gain of $11,592. And the total receipts for the first nine months of the missionary year amount to $193,232, a gain over the corresponding nine months of 1906 of $16,059. These figures are encouraging indeed. However, there has been a loss in bequests of $7,029, also a loss of $2,548 in individual gifts.

Nine months of the missionary year have gone. We have only three months more before the books close.

Good reports come from all the fields. The schools are prospering. The evangelists report large numbers of additions. The medical staff is doing a mighty work through the hospitals and dispensaries. Many new buildings are in process of erection. Altogether the work moves forward most encouragingly. So far it has been a good year and we press on to its close with renewed earnestness.

F. M. RAINS, Sec.

The receipts of the foreign society for the first eleven days of July amounted to $14,763, a gain of $3,278 over the corresponding time last year. There was a gain of sixteen contributing churches and 119 Sunday-schools. The total receipts to July 11 amount to $207,995, a gain over the corresponding time last year of $19,337. There has been a gain of $8,163 from the Sunday-schools and $11,583 from the churches, as churches. We can certainly reach the $300,000 if every church and school and friend will do his full part.

Missouri Endeavorers, Attention!

For all matters pertaining to this work, pledges, etc., write to Henry W. Hunter, the new state superintendent of Christian Endeavor, Mt. Washington, Mo., Box 43. Keep in touch with him, he is at your service.

A. C. M. S. Reports for June.

All friends of home missions will rejoice to learn that the total receipts for the month of June was $20,833.66, which is a gain of $2,195.06 over the month of June, 1906. The gain in total receipts from the beginning of our missionary year to the close of June, is $1,263.95.

The offerings from the churches show a splendid increase, the gain in receipts for the month of June being $3,333.51; and the total gain in church receipts from the beginning of our missionary year to date is $4,640.85.

All of this is great cause for rejoicing, and leads us to believe that if we work with a will for the next three months we can certainly report the greatest offering for American missions in the history of the American Christian Missionary Society.

The churches giving larger offerings this year than last aggregate 211; 244 churches that contributed nothing last year have made an offering this year, thus becoming enlisted among those churches who are the friends of home missions.

An Historic Kentucky Church to Be Remodeled.

The First Church of Hopkinsville, Ky., is now three-quarters of a century old. The house in which it has worshiped during the fifty-seven years just past was given over to the builders to be remodeled on the morning of June 17. The sixteenth of that month being Sunday, the congregation on that day took a loving leave of the dear old place, and the historic church left the historic walls for many alterations to be made before it should come again within them.

The improvement of the old house will occupy several months. Its extent is indicated in part by the accompanying pictures. The building will be enlarged on three sides, and will accommodate, when completed, a graded Sunday-school of 600 members on the first floor, and an audience of 900 members on the second floor; i. e., its floor space will be more than doubled. The house will have a modern equipment, including electric lighting, electric signal system for the Sunday-school, Sunday-school office, Sunday-school postoffice and check room, pastor's rooms, kitchen, parlors and many class-rooms. The style of the house will remain essentially unchanged, it being a modification of an old English type named "Tudor Gothic." It is estimated that the improved property of the church will be worth not far from $50,000.

More than $17,000 was raised within a week for this improvement. No rich person belongs to the church. Within eighteen months the church had already expended thousands of dollars in rebuilding the main building of South Kentucky College and in building the Woman's dormitory of that institution. Nor have gifts to missions and charties suffered any dimunition on account of these special gifts.

There was, of course, much of the sentiment in the hearts of the congregation which would have left the sacred place untouched. The people remembered with a touch of reverential feeling that it had echoed the voices of great orators from Alexander Campbell to E. L. Powell. Those scholar-pastors, Henry T. Anderson and Enos Campbell, stood before their mind's eyes afresh and clothed with a new dignity spoke their effective messages in the familiar place. They heard again in their imaginations Alexander Cross speaking his last words when the old walls were new before he went to Liberia to die for her people. And then they reflected how their fathers and other Disciples in neighboring churches had purchased the freedom of Cross (for he had been a slave), and how Enos Campbell had taught him in his house. And marriage and funeral, and revival and regular services, and representative assemblies of the Church of Western Kentucky had sanctified it. And here they recalled South Kentucky College, the object of the long-continued and tender interest of this church, had its first sessions. And yet, despite these memories, no word of objection has been spoken by any member of the congregation against the improvements. On the contrary, all recognize the changes which are going forward as a part of the just and inevitable price to be paid for a better equipment of the church for its high work.

The Old Building.

The Remodeled Church.

The facts of the congregational life which have suggested and demanded these changes are chiefly the growth in membership of both the church and the Sunday-school, and the enlarging ideals of church life which are cherished by the church leaders. The church numbers now about 700 and the Sunday-school more than 300. From April 1, 1906, to April 1, 1907, the church received more than 200 members. The Sunday-school is growing steadily toward the goal it has set itself, viz.: a membership of 500. But the leaders seek much more than members; and this expenditure of more than $20,000 looks forward to an increase of spiritual efficiency as its chief end. The Sunday-school is to be more carefully graded, its teachers more carefully trained, its classes provided with maps, charts, tables and, when desirable, with separate rooms. The services of the church are to be made more orderly, more solemn, more impressive, more fit to rest the weary, to comfort the sorrowing, to arouse the indifferent, to turn sinners to Christ. The building enterprise is only the beginning of the spiritual enterprise.

What the church at Hopkinsville is doing has conscious reference to her relation to other communities than her own. Owing to the facts that Hopkinsville is the headquarters of the South Kentucky Missionary Association and the seat of South Kentucky College she has exceptional opportunities to make herself widely felt; and she is not forgetful in her present activity of these opportunities.

It is expected that the house will be ready for occupancy again about November 1.

New York State Convention.

In 1863, during the last days of the month of August, I attended a convention of the New York Christian Missionary Society in South Butler, a beautiful village of a few hundred inhabitants, located in Central New York, and last week I was present as a delegate from the Central Church of Christ, Syracuse, at the forty-sixth annual convention of the same missionary society, held in the new $90,000 edifice of the Church of the Disciples of Christ on East One hundred and sixty-ninth street, New York city. I do not recall a single person who was present upon both of these occasions other than myself. The history of the Disciples of Christ in the Empire State could be read with increasing interest were it preserved in printed form since that time.

In 1863 no organizations of the Disciples were in existence in the city of Rochester, Troy, Watertown, Elmira, Brooklyn and Syracuse, although in the latter city the lamented Dr. W. A. Belding had inaugurated a mission work in the city hall early in the year.

A part of the unwritten history of these more than four decades is that Syracuse has two growing congregations—one nearly self-supporting, Troy a large and active congregation and another nearly half supporting, Watertown and Elmira completing in the past year beautiful and convenient church homes, Watertown this year bidding good-by to any help from the state society, Rochester two churches—one practically and the other partially self-supporting. Buffalo now has two of the largest and most flourishing congregations in the state, besides a smaller organization, which is forging to the front as also a mission point or two.

North Tonawanda is fortunate in having two large and active congregations besides the Northern church at Tonawanda. Greater New York now contains six congregations, the youngest of which only is securing any aid from our missionary societies.

Under the supervision and aid of the state society churches in other places have been established, and while the growth has been painfully slow it has been characterized with a permanency that is pleasing.

In population, wealth and enterprise and the concentration of its people in cities the Empire State presents one of, if not the most inviting home mission field in all the states of the Union, and yet for years the Disciples of New York state have been sending their money, their young men, their prayers, their energies and hundreds of individual members into the great West without a murmur.

Outside of Greater New York we have some thirty cities of 10,000 and more population. It is not, therefore, a wise plan and an excellent proposition to missionize and establish churches where the people are and the money is.

This is the feeling of the New York state Disciples to-day and it entered into their considerations at this, their 1907 convention.

In a state with a possible 10,000,000 population and incalculable wealth, can the possibilities for missionary enterprises be greater than here? Is there any more inviting territory, any more enticing promise of productiveness?

No state missionary society, comprising less than fifty churches or 9,000 Disciples can present a better record in substantial numerical growth and contributions to state and other interests than the New York society, and yet it is hampered for means to enter any of our numerous cities. We want the great work to look this way occasionally.

The New York Christian Ministerial Association opened its session on June 25 with B. S. Ferrall (Buffalo), vice-president, in the chair. S. B. Culp, of Watertown, led a devotional service and J. S. Raum, of Troy, made an address on "Incentives to Soul Winning." An interesting paper was presented on "Our Evangelists and the Union Meeting," by M. L. Bates, of New York city, which incited much discussion. The afternoon addresses were as follows: "The Ministry and Secret Societies," by L. S. Cost, of East Aurora; "The Possibilities of Our Work in the East," by L. N. D. Wells, of East Orange, N. J., and the "Mission of the Church Choir," by Anson G. Chester, of Buffalo, the latter containing a vein of rich humor.

In the evening J. P. Lichtenberger, of New York, gave us an "Illustrated Travel Talk on Palestine," of absorbing interest, using a stereopticon. Preceding the lecture Mrs. J. S. Raum, of Troy, gave a reading with excellent dramatic effect.

Wednesday morning the New York Christian Missionary Society began its sessions with a devotional address by Arthur Braden, of Auburn. The devotional address is a new feature with our state society and takes the place of a prayer and praise service. No one is permitted to enter or leave the room during this service. Dr. Eli H. Long, of Buffalo, president of the missionary society, presided at the business session and appointed his working committees and received reports from the several mission points. The address of E. M. Todd, of Tonawanda, upon the theme, "Evangelism for the Times," was replete with fresh thought and exceptionally good. Brother Todd has gone to Manchester, N. H., to take up the work there under the auspices of the C. W. B. M. Another excellent address was delivered by C. J. Armstrong, of Troy, with "A Glorious Church" for his subject.

The afternoon session was opened with a devotional address from J. A. Serena, of Syracuse.

S. J. Corey, from everywhere, was present to present the cause of foreign missions. After which Professor Herbert Martin, of New York city, read a carefully prepared and thoughtful paper upon Bible school interests, which attracted close attention.

C. G. Van Wormer, of Syracuse, presented a brief article on church finance, the principal thought of which was the church deficit and how to avert it. This was followed by an interesting talk on church finance by A. E. Williams, of Buffalo.

The Men's League of the Churches of Christ, judging from its first annual session, is a permanent feature of the Christian Missionary Society. Dr. A. G. Doust is president and E. A. Olley secretary, both of Syracuse. It is auxiliary to the state society and has for its fundamental purpose to enlist the men of our churches in local and state mission work. The league is the result of a suggestion made by President Long and has already proved its usefulness.

A much larger representation of men was in attendance than in former years and manifested an increasing interest in missionary matters.

Dr. A. G. Doust presided over the men's meeting and many practical things were discussed, after which Eli A. Long, of New York city, gave a highly intelligent talk on "The Relation of Men to the Bible School." At 6:15 some sixty men sat down to a men's banquet, the first in the history of the state missionary society, but this will now become a permanent feature.

Nearly all the churches in the state were represented in the men's league session and by men coming from the various vocations. It was considered a success in view of its initial meeting. Its first year's officers were re-elected and E. A. Olley, of Syracuse, secretary, was elected a delegate to the national convention to represent both the league and the state missionary society.

D. C. Tremaine, corresponding secretary and state evangelist, at 8 o'clock occupied the attention of the convention with a comprehensive report of the year's work which exhibited substantial progress and much encouragement for the coming year. Carey E. Morgan, of Paris, Ky., was present to address the convention in the interest of home missions and right well he did it.

Robert Stewart, Rochester, gave a devotional address. "The Crown of Righteousness" was the theme.

C. C. Crawford, of Elmira, occupied the time of the Christian Endeavor period with an address upon "The Spirit of Service," while O. H. Phillips, of Braddock, Pa., spoke upon "Our Centennial." This closed the Thursday morning session.

The afternoon was given over to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions session, with Mrs. Laura G. Craig, of Buffalo, presiding. Miss Mary Graybiel, India, and C. C. Smith, of Cincinnati, were the principal speakers, the latter speaking twice.

Friday morning J. F. Green, of Rochester, made the devotional address and O. G. Hertzog spoke upon "Our Educational Interests," preceded, however, by an address from Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, upon "Church Extension."

S. T. Willis, for eighteen years pastor of the One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Street Church, being broken in health, was unable to publicly extend a welcome to the delegates, but M. L. Bates, of the Fifty-sixth Street Church, very entertainingly performed this service for him. D. C. Tremaine, state secretary, responded to the address of welcome.

The delegation this year was an unusually large one, reaching an enrollment of over 200 names—134 being from outside of Greater New York, and the large number of preaching brethren recently located in the state was noticeable. The spirit and personnel of the convention were distinguishing characteristics and the convention must be considered one of practical results.

The committee on mission appropriations readjusted its methods of allotting the same, asking for a reduction in making requests of 25 per cent per year for four years unless in exceptional cases which are to be passed upon by the state board. It was thought this would operate favorably in releasing our funds to use in new places.

It was decided also that in coming state conventions more time should be given to state interests and its problems. This could only be accomplished by arranging upon the program for three representatives of our six affiliated societies in any one year.

This seems to be a just and equitable plan and met with general approval. The Disciples of the Empire State as well as the brotherhood at large are awakening to the importance and magnitude of the work here, hence the reason for the proposed changes.

Another proposition was considered of a vital nature and presented in the form of resolutions, which were accepted and held over for discussion and adoption or rejection at the next annual meeting. The substance of the resolutions was that all churches in the state receiving financial aid from the state society shall be considered mission churches and so published in the minutes.

Also the state missionary board shall have a controlling vote in the selection of a minister for all such mission churches and its funds shall be under the general direction of the board.

Also mission churches dependent upon the state society for their support shall be required to execute an ecclesiastical mortgage in favor of the state society and which shall remain in force until reasonable prospect of permanency is in evidence. A motion provided for the publication of the resolutions in the annual minutes and to be acted upon at the 1908 convention.

Dr. Eli H. Long, of Buffalo, president of the New York Christian Missionary Society for the past eight years, was re-elected and still maintains his reputation as an ideal presiding officer and a loyal and wise guardian of the society's interests.

The convention adjourned Friday noon, June 28, to meet in Watertown in 1908.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

G. H. Hinnant, of Atlanta, just returned from the Bible College, Lexington, Ky., is at work in the "Franklin field." He is now in meeting at Baldwin.——J. H. North Carolina.

I have just returned from a brief visit to North Carolina, where I went to hold a meeting at Washington. There were fifty-seven additions to the church, and everything left in good order. This is the only successful meeting that the town has had in ten years, and the brethren are hopeful for the future, now that the shell has been broken. The aristocracy holds strongly to the Episcopal Church and refuses to hear anything from "man-made" churches. Much prejudice exists even among people who ought to know better, and who have been trained in evangelical faiths. A. B. Cunningham is the minister at Washington, and president of the State Board. He has a strong hold upon all classes, and is regarded as an able expounder of the Word. Here, W. G. Walker, the corresponding secretary of the state, lives. He is accomplishing a great work in the face of many discouraging features. His help in the meeting was invaluable. I will be in the state the greater part of the time from now until December. My next meeting will be with the Belhaven congregation. A. B. Wade is the faithful minister. E. B. BARNES.

The Cedar Rapids Meeting.

Closed our meeting at Cedar Rapids, Ia., under the leadership of the First and Second Christian Churches of that city, with results which were very gratifying to all concerned. G. B. Van Arsdall, pastor of the First Christian Church, with whom I did all my correspondence, has certainly done a splendid work in Cedar Rapids, and won for himself a large place among the people of the city.

The First Christian Church is splendidly located, though the building is not large. We held a meeting the first two nights there, and then the house overflowing, we were invited by the pastors and members of the Methodist Church to use their building, which we did for the rest of the week. Then we went to the Auditorium, which will accommodate between 2,000 and 3,000 people, and we had large audiences continuously during the meeting. Several of the best business men in the city are in the First Church, and we found the membership to be broad-minded and thoroughly consecrated to the work.

The church on the west side of the river, where F. E. Smith ministers, is a younger congregation, but is certainly a live one. Brother Smith took charge of this church July, 1906, and up to the time the meeting began received fifty-four members, nineteen of whom were received by primary obedience. The Sunday-school numbered sixty, and the church membership was 140 at the beginning of Brother Smith's ministry. On April 30, just before the meeting began, he had 160. There were 557 converts in all in our meeting in Cedar Rapids, and I don't know the exact number received in the two churches, but the results were very nearly equally divided.

The First Church is considering a new building proposition, and it will be absolutely necessary for the Second Church to enlarge their borders if the great work they have well begun is carried on.

Brother Smith is president of the Ministerial Association, and the Church of Christ is winning a name not to be ashamed of in Cedar Rapids. Our pastors invited the members of other churches to work with us, and assured them if converts desired it, they would be permitted to go to other churches. Probably 100 may do so. The meeting was a great uplift to the city.

Kansas City.

The ministers of Kansas City and vicinity had their annual dinner with the Central Church of Kansas City, Kan.——A grand Christian Endeavor rally was held July 5. Claude E. Hill, national superintendent of C. E., was the speaker.——Nelson H. Trimble, who has been in Drake University the past term, has entered upon his duties as assistant to Geo. H. Combs at Independence Boulevard Church. He is ably assisted by his wife, who was formerly Miss Martha Stout. This progressive church has engaged the Brooks brothers for a meeting in the fall. The Neff sisters, of New York, are to assist in the singing.——Sherman Hill, who supplied for George H. Combs at Independence Boulevard last summer, is doing so again this summer. Brother Combs is with his family at Macatawa and will be absent until September.——The Budd Park Church has raised money to build a basement on its new lot on St. John avenue at the northwest corner of Budd Park. About $6,000 will be spent in construction.——The approximate membership of the Christian churches of greater Kansas City is 7,500. This embraces twelve churches on the Missouri side and four on the Kansas side. In the eldership and deaconate of these churches there are 250 business men.——The latest reports show an enrollment of 5,142 scholars in our Sunday-schools and 445 teachers. The increase in a year has been 1,192 scholars and 89 teachers.——The new tabernacle, which is the forerunner of what will be known as the Roanoke Boulevard Christian Church, has been dedicated. It is a frame structure 30 by 50 feet, and was erected for the most part by the ministers of Kansas City churches with their own saws, hammers, etc. The dedication sermon was preached by W. F. Richardson. Enough money was subscribed to pay for the material used in construction and leave a balance of over $200 to apply on the lot. A very promising Sunday-school has been started. The location is at 40 and Wyoming streets, in the southwest part of the city about a mile west from the Hyde Park church.——Burris A. Jenkins, whom Kansas City gave to the brotherhood, has been spending a few days here with his mother, Mrs. S. H. Jenkins. The primary object of his visit at this time is to receive treatment at the hands of a local surgeon. That he has been suffering for some years with a trouble in the knee which has been diagnosed by physicians far and near as rheumatism, is well known. A recent X-ray examination revealed a local trouble due, it is believed, to an injury received when a child. A month ago a treatment was given him here and now he has been given a second treatment which it is believed will fully relieve him. In this hope his friends here heartily join all who know and love him throughout the brotherhood.——A few weeks ago fifteen of our Kansas City ministers with their families spent a day at Swope Park. Ball playing was the chief amusement of the preachers, while the women and children found ample amusement in other ways. After dinner the ministers held their weekly conference under the trees. This meeting was an impressive one. Particularly so because of remarks made by T. P. Haley, whose pastorate here dates back to a time when there was but one instead of sixteen Christian churches in Kansas City. Said he, "I may not meet with you again soon." By which it was understood that he was going to his summer home and the date of his return was indefinite. He spoke of some of his cherished hopes concerning the churches of greater Kansas City, especially along the line of a closer fellowship in every vital relation. As to his personal feelings he said: "No lover ever went to his sweetheart with greater joy than I have gone to my pulpit. If I had a hundred lives to spend I would spend them all as I have spent the one given me. I have received of my brethren far above my deserts, and my counsel has been given consideration far above its merits." Brother Combs, chairman of the meeting expressed the feeling of all present when he said that Brother Haley's words which suggested the thought of his retirement from the active ministry, darkened the picnic day and gave to all a very real ache of heart. He then spoke of Brother Haley's fatherly care over all the preachers who had been with any of our churches in Kansas City during the past twenty-six years. His every word, so full of appreciation of Brother Haley's love and devotion, expressed what was in the hearts of all.

From Charleston by the Sea.

I am writing this on the last day of my first year's ministry in Charleston, S. C. It has been a year of much joy. God has richly blessed our efforts in behalf of the heavenly kingdom on earth. During the year there have been 21 additions to the church—15 of these by primary obedience. There have been some removals and one death. Sixteen hundred and two dollars has been raised since October 14 toward our debt to the Board of Church Extension. This has been really a remarkable work. I have never seen more liberal giving. And it was giving that meant true sacrifice. At the same time we have given more than $150 for missions. The church has also voluntarily asked that the appropriation from the A. C. M. S. be reduced $100. Our people are poor, but they are learning the joys of burden-bearing.

We are sorry to lose C. E. Smith from the state. He is now in Altoona, Penn. He is a good man and did good work.

S. D. Colyer is doing splendid work in Orangeburg. He is one of our best preachers. Under his leadership the church has determined to build a $15,000 house of worship. They are making good progress toward that end. Brother Colyer has pledged $1,000 to the building fund. He is ready to hold a few evangelistic meetings, the proceeds of which will be devoted to the building fund. The church that procures his services will be most fortunate. Brother Colyer is not as well known as his works and ability merit. He who works as a pioneer on the mission field is too often forgotten by his brethren in the great centers of our activity. Brother Colyer is a man of consecration and is successful.

It would be a splendid thing if some of our preachers ministering for wealthy and large churches in Missouri, Kentucky, or Illinois could be turned loose in South Carolina and other mission fields. Why is it that there are to-day so few men to walk in the footsteps of the pioneers like Samuel Rogers, William Hayden, etc.? They made history and to-day their names are honored by all. He who works on the mission field will make a name that will be honored in the generations to come, if he works well. And always God raises up some one to take his place. If 1,000 preachers of our brotherhood would volunteer for the mission fields it would do more for missions than all the sermons they may preach at home in a lifetime.

South Carolina needs men of the greatest ability and consecration. It needs men who are willing to sacrifice. It needs men of patience. South Carolina has sent out a number of young men who are preaching in other fields or are now preparing for the ministry. They can do no better than to return to their home state and preach to their own kindred and friends and neighbors. Their fathers fought for their homes. The soil is sacred with the blood of the patriots. There are great battles to be fought here to-day under the blood-stained banner of our Savior.

Brother Stanley R. Grubb is busy now superintending the construction of a house of worship for our Capital City.——The churches along the southern border of our state held their annual union meeting the last Lord's day in June.—— Our Bible school will give its children's day exercises on the first Lord's day in July. The church and Bible school expect to have a share in a station on the foreign field.——The church in Charleston is planning to hold an evangelistic meeting the coming winter.——The Joplin First Church honors the writer by continuing him as their living link on the home field.

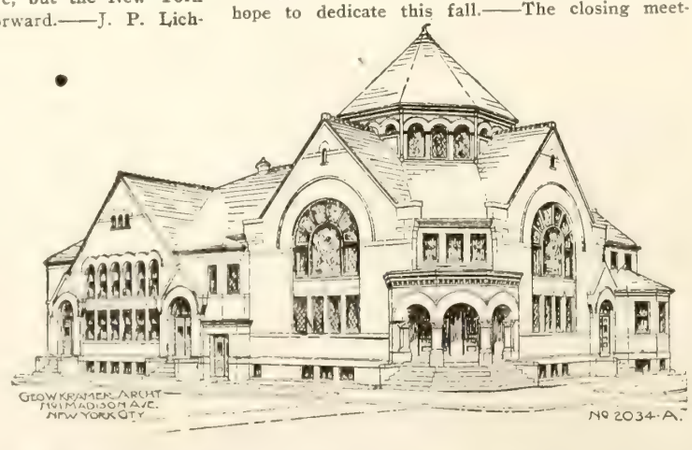
Scoville at Muncie.

We closed our meeting with the Jackson Street Christian Church, Muncie, Ind., June 10. The visible results of the meeting were 626 people who came out for Christ and the church. The exact number received by primary obedience I do not know, but there were not many who had been members of churches elsewhere. The one remarkable thing about this meeting was the large attendance throughout the meeting at all the services.

The brethren rented the largest auditorium in the city at an expense of $140 a week. They spent over $400 for fine new chairs. These were sold at the close of the meeting for almost as much as they cost.

The meetings were successful in every way. The offerings received easily met all the expenses connected with the meetings. W. H. Allen, the pastor has been earnestly at work since taking the pastorate of the church a year ago last December. His predecessor, Brother Reynolds, did a great work in raising the old debt that has been hanging for years over the church and which kept the church from coming to the front. Brother Reynolds lives in Muncie, and was faithful to his successor and was a splendid worker in the meeting.

In the eighteen months that Brother Allen has been the pastor, 205 people were received in the church preceding the meetings, seventy in a two weeks meeting conducted by himself in April last year. The Sunday-school was not large, only 150 at the beginning of Brother Allen's pastorate, and the very largest attendance ever had before the meeting was 300. The best day in the Sunday-school during the meetings was an attendance of 500. Brother Allen says there were only 19 in prayer meeting the first night he was in the church, and the largest prayer meeting was 75, while on June 19 there were at least 350 at the prayer meeting, where several made the confession and 11 were baptized.



God's blessings lie close to his gifts, and the growth in giving has had much to do, we believe, with the preparation for the larger meeting. In 1904 the church gave $7 to the Ministerial Relief; in 1905 they gave $30; in 1906, $60. Home Mission offerings likewise steadily increased, until this year they became a living link, taking the offering the first Sunday Brother Ullom was with them. A great missionary offering is a good thing to prepare for a meeting, and a great meeting is a good preparation for a great missionary offering. In 1904 they gave $68.40 for foreign missions; in 1905, $110.06; in 1906, $137.07; in 1907, $240; and the bugle was sounded out during the meetings that the church would make a strenuous effort to become a living link in foreign missions next year.

Two things should receive especial mention. One is the large Sunday-school class of men only, taught by Ernest Wiles, who is principal of the City Schools. He had over one hundred men in his class on one Sunday during the meetings. Brother Wiles was one of the early singing evangelists of the Christian Church,

New York.

We feel rather lonely so far away from the whole brotherhood over here, but the New York work is moving steadily forward.——J. P. Lichtenberger and wife have recently returned from a trip through Palestine. ——Brother Willis is home from Kentucky.—— Brothers Bates and Lichtenberger have their heads together, and we may look for a great metropolitan church on Manhattan in the near future. —— Brother Rounds is doing splendid work at Flatbush, Brooklyn. Green Point, Brooklyn, is making an effort to support an evangelist in its own field, to be employed continually in street meetings. Sterling Place Church, I believe, is still looking for a pastor.——The Disciples' Union, of New York, has recently been changed from a union of individuals to a union of the churches. All our churches are now represented, and we are organizing for a more aggressive work.——East Orange is busy with a new building, which we hope to dedicate this fall.——The closing meeting of the New York Ministerial Association was held with us in East Orange, and I was elected as president for the coming year.

went into Ann Arbor, and has grown in every way until his influence is felt in every corner of the city. He not only has tremendous ability, but is thoroughly consecrated to the work of Christ and the Church. We ought to have just such men in the schools in every city where there is a Christian Church, and our Brethren ought to see to it that our people are represented among the teachers of the schools.

The slum work done by Dr. Betts in these meetings was remarkable. Not only did he inspire many who were downcast to the better way, but he held a great meeting for men in the jail which was so effective for good that the sheriff invited him and his wife back for dinner and another visit to the jail.

A Good Meeting at Okmulgee, I. T.

Viewed simply by the number of additions, of course there have been greater meetings, but fifty-seven additions is not the only measure of greatness to be considered in a revival meeting. In fact it is oftentimes the least thing to be considered. This was a splendid meeting, not only from the number of additions, but also from the character of those who have been brought into the church, there being many noble young men and women and heads of families among the number.

Never has it been our privilege to listen to the gospel presented with greater power than it was by Brother Mitchell in this meeting. He does not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, yet he does it in such a sweet-spirited manner that no offense can be taken. Members of the other religious bodies participated in the services and showed great interest in the meeting. Will J. Slater was the singer.

The church has been greatly strengthened, and will enter into the work with renewed vigor. New classes have been formed in the Bible School, the Endeavor Society has received new recruits, and the whole church has been placed in better condition for service. We are now planning a vigorous campaign for primitive Christianity in this community. The additions are as follows: Confessions, 42; letter and statement, 11; reclaimed, 3; from another body, 1. Total, 57. D. N. MANLEY, Minister.

Ministerial Exchange.

E. W. Brickert, Martinsville, Ind., would be pleased to hold some meetings this summer and fall.

Any church desiring the services of an evangelist, or pastor, may address, "Minister," in care of W. F. Evans, Duncan, I. T.

J. E. Sturgis, singing evangelist, Butler, Ind., has open dates for October and December.

I. H. Teel, pastor of the church at Visalia, Cal., has a vacation of one month which he hopes to spend holding a meeting. He will go any reasonable distance for collections.

The church at Maysville, the county seat of De Kalb County, Mo., wants a preacher, and can pay about $900 for full time. Address J. Wood Cline, at that place.

J. H. Stuckey, whose address is 243 Ruby street, Kansas City, Kan., can supply churches within reasonable distance of that place. His membership is with the North Side Church.

H. E. Winters, of Fletcher, Ore., would like to make an engagement with some evangelist as a singer. He has been studying for this purpose at the Texas Christian University, and has a barytone voice. He can give good references.

P. T. Martin is open to hold a meeting or two during September and for part of October. Address, Blue Hill, Neb.

F. B. Thomas, of the Christian Church, Kansas, Ill., writes us that he can put a congregation in touch with a capable young minister whose wife is a good worker and who could take charge of a choir. Salary $750 to $1,000.

The church in Vancouver, British Columbia, is needing a preacher. The salary that can be paid is $800. The plea for primitive Christianity is hardly known in this, the largest and most important city in British Columbia. There is a devoted membership of thirty disciples, and the call is a missionary one. Address, C. W. Simpson, care of Y. M. C. A.

J. W. Libbey, of Blue Jacket, I. T., writes that some church located in a college or university city can secure a young preacher of fine ability, who is desirous of doing more work in school. He has a rich barytone voice and can direct a choir or orchestra.

The church at Clearwater, Kan., desires members of the brotherhood to locate at that place. Address, Harry Walston, Pastor.

Mormonism is the name given to a sect having headquarters in Utah. They call themselves Latter Day Saints.

The two books which they claim as modern revelations are the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrines and Covenants. They place these beside the ancient Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, and claim that they are of equal inspiration with the Scriptures. They claim that the Old Testament is especially for the Jewish church, the New Testament for the European Christian church, the Book of Mormon for the American Christian church, and the Book of Doctrines and Covenants for the Latter Day Saints.

Their books are based on the romances written by Solomon Spaulding, a Presbyterian clergyman of Western Pennsylvania. He called these romances the Manuscript found. They give expression to his belief that the Aborigines of America were the descendants of some of the tribes of Israel.

The Hierarchy in the Mormon church is of two classes of priesthood: The Melchizedec, which is the higher; and the Aaronic, which is the lower.

The Mormons practice baptism by immersion. They celebrate the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, using water instead of wine. They teach plainly that God exists in the form of man. Brigham Young once preached boldly that Adam is our Father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do.

The Mormons teach that Christ is less than God, and deny the personality of the Holy Spirit. They teach the pre-existence of human spirits, and declare that multitudes are now in waiting, desiring to come to earth."—The Young People's Lesson Quarterly.

Brigham Young and his Mormons settled in Utah sixty years ago, in 1857. Up to that time the region was practically unknown.

The hierarchy there set up is "highly organized, diabolically active, and amazingly successful in winning converts; hostile in every fibre to evangelical religion, to constituted government, and to the highest American ideals."

Mormonism teaches that Adam is God, denies the supernatural birth of Christ, teaches that there are many gods, holds that God is a polygamist and that polygamy is a sacred duty, and considers disobedience to the Mormon priesthood to be a damnable sin.

Mormonism has no fellowship with the Christian churches, but regards every one a heretic that does not accept the "revelations" made to Joseph Smith.

The first appeal for Christian missions in Utah came from an army general, who was himself a Roman Catholic. Missions to the Mormons began at once, in 1865.

The first mission to the Mormons ended in murder, and it was years before Christian preaching in Utah was safe.

There are now about three hundred thousand Mormons. They hold the balance of political power not only in Utah but in several of the other Western States.

The Mormon missionary system is probably the most effective in the world, and it should be opposed by equally earnest efforts of the Christian church.—Endeavorer's Daily Companion.

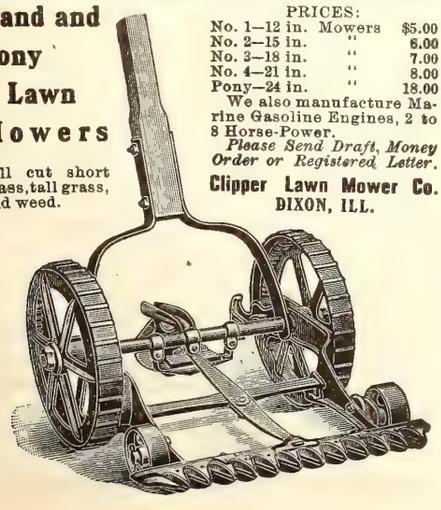
Is the Bible Safe?

Topic July 24. Jer. 36th Chapter.

From the reading of this chapter it might be inferred that the Bible is in danger of being destroyed, as Jehoiakim burned the roll of Baruch, the scribe. In answer it may be said the Bible has come down through the ages of persecution, by sword and flame, through wars and mighty conflicts of brain and brawn, and has weathered the stress of sciences, true and false, the attacks of infidelity and of false friends, the misrepresentations of creeds and confessions and the bewildering commentaries of the learned and of the unlearned, the assumptions of those who called themselves wise, the equally arrogant dogmatism of the ignorant and bigoted traditionalists, higher and lower critics, fanatics and common and uncommon fools—and survived, like the servants of the living God, without the smell of fire upon it. And the Bible never held a securer place in the thought and affections of mankind than it does to-day. Old creeds are breaking up, old faiths are being restated, old doctrines denied and dumped into the junk pile of the past; big men and little men, saints and scoffers, and just common sinners, each have said their say and ceased to be; and the last word has not yet been said, nor will be, till time shall be no more. The faithful have been fearful and faint-hearted at times, and there are those who tremble at the toppling of old traditions, the leaning towers of the learned of the past, forgetful of the psalmist's splendid declaration of faith, reinforced by the apostolic statement: "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory thereof as the flower of the grass. The grass withereth and the flower falleth; but the word of the Lord abideth forever. And this is the word of good tidings which was preached unto you." 1 Pet. 1:24, 25.



Therefore let us put away our foolish fears and unbrotherly controversies about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers. Paul did write some things hard to be understood, which some still twist to their own destruction, and to the confusion of others. But if all the world of busy and bothered folks would just make an honest effort to live up to the teachings of the great apostle that are perfectly simple and plain what a transformation of lives and of social and civil and religious relations there would be! Is the Bible true? Try it, test it, live it! More, love it and all may know of the doctrine whether it be of God or men. It is the Master's challenge: "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know of the teaching, whether it be of God, or whether I speak from myself." John 7:17. This is the Bible's challenge to the race. The record God gave of his Son stands or falls by this supreme test. Not the carpings of critics, bigots and blatherskites, but the pitiful failures of professed believers hinder the progress of the Gospel. Yet, spite of all, mightily grows the word of God and prevails!

The Bible is safe, at any rate, until somebody writes a better. So rest easy on that score. There is a story of a young fellow who presumed to scoff at the Bible and sneer at believers, asserting that he could write a better. He couldn't see anything wonderful in the beatitudes or in the sermon on the mount. A friend who was listening to his foolishness took pencil and paper out of his pocket and handed them to him with the modest request to please write a few, just a few, beatitudes, and he would be excused from writing another sermon on the mount, as that might prove a bigger job than he anticipated! His friend and the world are waiting for those beatitudes! O friends of mine and of my Master, friends of humanity, till you find something to really and rejoicingly take the place of the old Bible, let us keep it, for what it does for us here, for what it offers us hereafter. When you really find something better pass it along to hungering men and women. But don't take away the pilgrim's staff and the children's bread. Meanwhile it is safe to follow the old Word and the old Way, which for us is a "new and living way whereby we draw nigh unto God."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

The Golden Calf.—Exod. 32:1-8, 30-35.

Memory verses, 34, 35.

Golden Text.—Little children, keep yourselves from idols.—1 John 5:21.

As the record stands, it is represented that a very considerable body of legislation was delivered to the children during their encampment at Sinai. This included three principal elements: first, and most important, the Decalogue, giving certain fundamental principles of religion and morality; second, a somewhat extended group of precepts (the Book of the Covenant) regarding the administration of justice between man and man under the social and industrial conditions of an agricultural and pastoral people; third, a still longer and more detailed exposition of the precise method for constructing and operating the paraphernalia of worship. This last group of laws occupies chapters 25-31. They are said to have been delivered to Moses by Jehovah in person during the forty days which Moses spent on the mountain. No one can read them through carefully without feeling that these minute details as to the number of hooks to be put in the end of a curtain, the particular herbs and extracts to be used in manufacturing incense and anointing oil, the pattern and trimming of the priestly robe, and all the other ritualistic minutiae, are in strange contrast with the simple and lofty truths of the Decalogue and even with the wise and just decisions of the Book of the Covenant. Even more does this apparently extreme particularity with reference to the mere external machinery of worship contrast with what we know of the character of God through later and fuller revelations. This contrast suggests a problem which is worth thinking about.

The people were discouraged, and perhaps a little bit frightened by the long absence of Moses in the mountain. They were a very religious people. Most primitive peoples are. They felt assured of the impossibility of successfully accomplishing anything without divine aid. They also felt sure that divine aid was impossible without some symbol of the divine presence. Moses had hitherto, in a way, served this purpose. He could come back with shining face to report to the people an interview which he had had with Jehovah and could carry Him their complaints and petitions. But now Moses had gone. Perhaps God was gone too. How could they tell? They would appeal to Aaron to find them some other way of communication with God, some other representation of his presence.

Israel's idolatry at this time was not fundamentally a defection from Jehovah to some other God, but a change in the way of worshipping Jehovah. It would have amounted to the same thing in time, for Jehovah worshipped under the form of a calf would soon come to be a very different sort of deity to them. Aaron, however, understood that they wished merely a new way of worshipping the same God, for after making the calf he proclaimed a "feast unto Jehovah."

God expressed his purpose to consume the nation for its sin, but after the argument of Moses, who reasoned with him as a man might reason with a well-meaning but hot-headed friend, we are told that "Jehovah repented of the evil which he said he would do unto his people." In such colloquies as these, we see the anthropomorphism of the Hebrew view of God in its most extreme form. As a literal record of facts or as affording any insight into the mental processes by which the divine mind reaches its determinations and forms its plans, such a passage has but little value. It needs to be corrected by what we now know of God through revelations which had not been given at that time. Perhaps, indeed, such passages were never seriously intended to be taken literally, but merely to convey the central thought of the extreme indignation which God felt toward the people who had set up the image, and to indicate to the nation as vividly as possible that it had had a very narrow escape from destruction.

Aaron appears to very poor advantage in this whole episode. First he tries to throw the blame on the people. "Thou knowest the people, that they are set on evil." This was doubtless true, so far as it went, but it was no defense. It was his business to check the evil tendencies of the people, not to serve as the instrument for carrying them out. Probably Aaron was apprehensive lest, if he should refuse, they might put him out of his office and appoint a new priest. Would it not be better for him to keep his influence with the people by acquiescing in their present desire, and later on he might be able to lead them by easy stages back to a purer form of worship? Anyway, this is a practical world and we must take it as we find it. We mustn't be dreamy idealists. The public wants a calf, and if I don't make it somebody else will. The public also wants a priest for its calf, and if I don't take the office some one else will. So, rather than put an end to my usefulness by getting out with the people, and rather than lose my job, I will make the calf and be its priest. So reasons Aaron. Did such reasoning cease with Aaron? Does it ever appear in modern politics?

Then Aaron tried to shift the blame in a vague way on to mere chance. I took the gold and cast it into the fire and—"there came out this calf." Just "came out." Nobody made it. Nobody is responsible for it. It simply "came out." In making this cowardly and transparently false excuse, Aaron sins in much company. Who of us does not blame his luck, or circumstances over which he has no control, for things which he secretly knows to be his own fault? We cast our gold or our time or our talents into the fire of the world's busy life, and the product is—perhaps a calf, or worse. But whatever it is, it does not simply "come out" as dice roll out of a box. It comes out, in the main, what we make it. If it is a bad job, the blame is our own.

Moses offered to atone for the sin of the people. The subject is too dead to discuss here, and the data given here are not particularly important or decisive for such study. But note, first, the sacrificial spirit: "Blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book." Note, second, the rejection of this offer of vicarious suffering. For Jehovah said: "Whoso hath sinned, him will I blot out of my book."

By E. A. Child.

Not in the clamor or the crowded street;
Not in the shouts and plaudits of the throng,
But in ourselves are triumphs and defeat.
—Longfellow.

Now when they heard this, they were pricked in their hearts, and said—Men and brethren, what shall we do?—Acts.

Hero Worship.

The president threw his great coat about himself and started for his home, when to his surprise he saw the college building lighted in various parts.

Going into the hall he peered into the Y. M. C. A. rooms. There he saw some 500 or more of the students, in deep meditation. He listened but a moment and the object of the meeting was obvious.

Lashed by conscience over the way they had deserted James in his manly stand for the true course, they were now seeking to atone for their mistake, each one feeling that he was personally responsible, in a degree, for the murder (as they supposed) of James Gordon. One was praying: "O God, forgive us individually and collectively for our cowardly attitude toward our fellow. When he needed our influence and our sympathy, we deserted him shamefully.——"

Passing on to the faculty room, he saw a similar scene. Professor Haberton was finishing a prayer, thus: "O my Father, if it be possible, forgive thine unworthy servant for his opposition to the truth, and for seeking the praise of men more than thy glory. Thou knowest that I have spent my time these years in this institution seeking my own advancement, while multitudes of students have gone in and out of these doors rather confirmed in unbelief than helped to see Thee and to understand thy Word——"

Thus he prayed as one who felt deeply condemned for sin, as one who expected impending ruin to fall upon the institution from which he derived his comfort and living. He was sorely troubled over the certain condemnation which he knew would fall upon his head for the part he had taken in the matter which led to Gordon's supposed death, for no one seemed to think, up to this time, that he could recover.

The president walked in, and as he did, all arose as if some dignitary of state had entered.

"How is Gordon?" They all gasped as if expecting unwelcome tidings, each showing more or less signs of intense agony and gloom.

"I am happy to bring you good tidings," said the president, as he laid off his great coat. "The doctor is sanguine of his speedy recovery, and yet he tells me that it is nothing short of an absolute miracle. We can account for it in no other way than that it is in answer to his mother's prayers. I 'phoned her at about 9 o'clock, and the doctor tells me upon consulting his notes, that from that hour on he was successful in the operation upon the ribs, which he saw no way of accomplishing without a fatality.

"He also says that contrary to all former experience, the frost disappeared from the hands without applications, and there seem to be no evil effects upon the flesh, except perhaps some swelling, which would not be strange.

"James is sleeping as soundly as a child with his mother and a trained nurse at hand, and the doctor yet within reach in case any emergency arises."

The professor of vocal music instinctively struck up: "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and all sang it with a zest they had not known before, glad to be relieved from the stress of mind and terrible forebodings they were under. The students heard the praise meeting that was proceeding from the faculty room, and immediately took up the song, although they had not yet learned the good news. One of the professors went over with the president's word and an announcement for chapel at 4 o'clock, p. m. the next day.

The clock in the steeple was just striking 2 as all filed out quietly, having held a continuous session of four hours, spent in addresses, confessions, exhortations and prayers. They had come together, not by any call or prearranged notice, but spontaneously with a sense of concern for the life which they each felt to some extent responsible for having betrayed to death by their individual conduct.

Some had doubtless been led into the opposition to James' stand, after hearing the exaggerated reports of his words, uttered in Professor Haberton's room. And others had taken a stand against him, when they saw that it was the popular thing to do. However, strange as it might seem, James did not have an open friend left in the whole school the day after the contest, except President Brown, and a young lad, of whom we shall learn later. Even the young man whom he had trained and who got the prize, in justification of his own position was obliged to condemn James, when put to the test by his fellows.

Now as a knowledge of the tragedy spread among them, they all seemed to feel a common condemnation and came together at the Y. M. C. A. headquarters, to consult about the matter, with the result that scores were led to consecrate themselves to a more conscientious and consistent life than they had lived before.

James was now their hero. His life, that had been so near lost to them, seemed most precious now, as they learned that there was a possibility of his recovery. And since they might yet have an opportunity to atone for the wrong they had done—they were glad beyond expression.

Strange that they had not been moved with considerations for their fellow while he was being crucified upon the cross of public opinion, for a righteous stand. But such is the spirit of the world which possesses even professing Christians at times, while they are under the spell of influence from a popular movement or holding. Organized as we are in about all of our Christian activity, it is impossible but that such will be the case, and offenses will come, and martyrs must atone for the sins of each generation in its turn. So shall be filled up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ, for his body's sake, which is the Church.

The faculty remained a few minutes longer to have the president confirm some work which they had done earlier in the evening. The first was to rescind the action suspending James fom school. Another was a resolution commending him for his manly stand against the gambling evil of the school, and some recommendations to the board of trustees looking toward the reformation of the evils which had been at the root of the matter.

These were just what President Brown had long wanted to see brought forward and only too gladly affixed his name and the seal of the college, to each document as it came to his hand.

At Chapel.

At 4 o'clock the chapel was crowded to overflowing, many of the citizens had caught the news and anxiety of the college people and had crowded in. All the pastors of the different churches were there. Many of the trustees had come in also at the alarm.

President Brown announced that the next day should be devoted to thanksgiving and praise to God for the marvelous deliverance which had been manifest in their midst. He stated briefly and carefully the whole affair, from the day before the contest, then turning to Dr. Reid, he requested him to make a statement of the present condition of his patient.

The doctor stood forth, six feet tall, with massive frame slightly bent, his white beard and hair showing his three score years, with every feature a man in whom men could have confidence.

He looked over the great audience. Several thousand persons had gathered with eager expectant faces. A hush like the pause before a storm came over them as he hesitated. He saw in the audience several physicians, two of whom were members of the board of trustees. He knew that they were would-be rivals of his, for they had sought to displace him, and but for the timely action of the president in his behalf, they would have done so at the last annual meeting. He also saw several ministers, whom he knew to be somewhat unfriendly to the college, belonging as they did to rival denominations from the one to which the college belonged.

His eye swept over the faculty, and he saw Professor Haberton, whom he knew to be a subtle, time-serving man, upon whom he could not rely. Also, there was the professor who had been imported from Leipsic, and the professor of applied sciences. These he knew had given their early lives to metaphysical research, and their holdings along the line of religious topics were anything but what he considered orthodox.

The German professor had denied the validity of all New Testament miracles and had said in his presence that so-called healings and miracles were only overwrought imaginations of diseased minds.

And he had heard the professor in applied science speak of belief in prayer as "rank idiocy." "It is preposterous to suppose that natural laws could be disturbed by the voice of man, uttered upon the air to an unknown and an unseen God," said he one day while Dr. Reid was visiting his class.

Dr. Reid knew that these men were held in high esteem by the trustees, and a sickening feeling came over him as he took in the whole situation at a glance.

Should he speak the truth that had forced itself into his mind at that time, or should he claim a conservative position, and hold the knowledge which had been given him for that occasion, to some other time? President Brown expected it and his better self demanded that he should stand squarely on the facts without swerving a hair's breadth. As he thus wavered the scripture which had been his reading that morning, came like a flash through his mind. "He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully." He began slowly:

"I have no new nostrums to offer, no new cures to advocate; but I devoutly believe that there has happened in our midst a marvel that has scarcely ever been equaled, except in the time of our Savior and his apostles. While the dead has not been raised, yet something as marvelous to my mind as that would be, has happened under my eves.

"I deeply regret that I was unable to have had associated with me a council of physicians, but as it was, when I 'phoned for such assistance, all were absent from their offices, and those to whom I sent messengers, had been called away from their homes, so I was left to do and behold alone what seems incredible. But I must tell you faithfully what has happened.

"At first I thought it an impossibility ever to draw the ribs out of the thoracic cavity, and I was about to abandon the effort when the patient sneezed, as I was making a lateral presure of the ribs with one hand and holding up the overturned body with the other. from the region of the abdomen. To my surprise all three of the displaced bones came into place and the back filled out in natural form, except some inflammation and congestion of the flesh, due to the bruises. My amazement was so great that I almost lost my nerve at such good fortune. But making a note of this, with the time at which occurred, I proceeded to examine the hands. Imagine my amazement, when I found the flesh warm and soft and glowing, which but less than a quarter of an hour before, was hard and white with frost. Was I dreaming or was it a miracle? I made a note of it in my diary, and proceeded to cleanse the bruises and other disabilities of the patient, putting him in a comfortable sleeping posture, and he seemed to be resting and was in fact sleeping as soundly as a babe when his mother arrived on the midnight special.

"We had a talk with the mother, and President Brown will tell you that she held us spellbound with teaching such as we confess never to have heard before. She is a firm believer in prayer for the sick, and expects answers from a present and all-powerful God, when she prays. I have compared my notes with those of the trained nurse, who is an expert stenographer, and find that the mother's prayers for her son while coming on the train, were simultaneous with the wonders of which I have told you.

"I find the patient convalescing this evening in a normal condition, eating and sitting up in perfect control of his faculties. The hands are without soreness, and the other bruises have lost their ugly appearance and but for my insistence to remain quiet, he would have appeared in chapel to bid you a farewell, for he will return with his mother on the 5 o'clock train."

At this two thousand students arose and shouted: "Hurrah for Gordon! Hurrah for Doctor Reid! Hurrah for President Brown!" The organist struck: "All hail the power of Jesus name," and it was sung with a zest and abandon that might have characterized an old time camp meeting. The students lost all concern for class distinction or chapel order but took the whole house by storm, plunging across the aisles, shaking hands with each other and with the citizens, calling out one to another: "Let's see Gordon off! Hurrah for the train. Just time to catch the down street cars!" And all went away pell mell, without being dismissed or awaiting for further orders or announcements.

The Giver With the Gift.

In a recent divorce case the husband, when asked if he ever made his wife any Christmas or birthday presents, replied: "No; I am sorry to say, I never did. I gave Mrs. ——power to draw on my bank account and to buy anything she wanted. I was mistaken. That was not all I should have done. That did not take the place of my buying things and taking them home to her."

It is astonishing how little even the majority of husbands know about the feminine nature. I recently heard a young wife say that she would rather have her husband bring her a bunch of violets than give her ten times the money they cost. But she said she could never make him appreciate the fact that money was not all that she needed.

I know men who never think of taking home a bunch of flowers to their wives. They either think it unnecessary extravagance or that if their wives want flowers they can get them themselves. They do not realize that women prize the little courtesies, the little attentions and evidences of thoughtfulness more than money. It is the invitation to the little outing or vacation, the little trip to another city, the bringing home of books and magazines, or tickets to the concert or lecture—it is the hundred and one little things that make the average woman happy, and not merely the fact that her imperative wants are supplied in a lump sum.

Most men overlook the fact that it does not take so much, after all, to satisfy the average woman. It is largely the question of the right spirit, of doing the things which indicate thoughtfulness. Just giving a wife a check once in a while, no matter how large it may be, or telling her to draw as much as she needs from your bank account, will not satisfy a womanly woman. It is yourself she wants with the money.—Success Magazine.

Marriage As We Make It.

Sometimes it would seem as if marriages which are not made for love hold better than those which are; since the mutual expectations are less, so also are the disappointments.

People must change; but if they can not change together, if the love they had when they were young does not mellow into a habit of warm affection as they grow older, then at least let them consider first their obligations to one another, and bring all the pity, all the forbearance, all the kindness possible to the contemplation of their compact before they break it. If it were so worth while—worth anything—then, is it worth nothing now? Is there not something to be built on a foundation that promised happiness?

Since people can not in general be induced to think long before they enter the married state, they might at least be brought up to make the best of it afterward. Boys and girls might easily be educated more than they are now with the view of making them better husbands and wives, better householders and housekeepers, better fathers and mothers, better comrades to one another. Then if love struck them like a bolt from the blue, they would still be able to go about their business with some faint idea of what those businesses were going to be, and, if they had made mistakes, to bear the consequences of those mistakes just as long as there was dignity in endurance—and perhaps a little longer.—Caroline Duer, in The Delineator for June.

The Right Time.

By Hilda Richmond.

Once more the June bride is with us and the papers are filled with accounts of weddings, to the exclusion of other important happenings. From the modest announcement of four or five lines to the graphic details of the society event that has been looked forward to for weeks we are all interested, and it would be a churlish person indeed who had not a smile and a good wish for every bride everywhere. Whether robed in white cotton goods made up with her own hands, or in a Paris creation imported at the outlay of a small fortune, the bride is always credited with being charming, accomplished and beautiful. Happy is she if to all these desirable things she can add common sense and good temper, for in her new life she will need these qualities more than ever before.

The time to solve the divorce problem is before the marriage ceremony takes place, though that doctrine apparently has few adherents. The young people who reverently plight their troth this June, after long acquaintance and intimate knowledge of the faults of each other, knowing in their hearts that the marriage is truly "made in heaven," will not add their names to the long list of legally separated husbands and wives.

Some pessimist has remarked that many a girl would have no reason to marry if her wedding outfit should suddenly be destroyed, and one is tempted to believe the statement in certain cases. If ever the time comes in the lives of young men and women to be serious and reverent and thoughtful, it is when the life compact is about to be formed. The certain knowledge that after the ceremony is performed nothing but death could dissolve the bond, might stop some of the heedless marriages; but, as it is, too many young folks enter married life with the idea that if they do not find it to their liking there is an easy way out of the difficulty.

While no happy marriage can exist without love, neither can it stand the storms on love alone. There must be a host of other factors, each important, though secondary, yet essential to domestic peace and joy. The husband must possess the ability to make a suitable living for his family, must not be lacking in manly virtues, and should be of a disposition calculated to make his wife happy. Many a high-strung man has fallen violently in love and, for that matter, has been in love with his wife all his life, and yet has wrecked both his happiness and her own because their temperaments were exactly alike. Unfortunately people fall in love with the wrong persons quite often, but it does not follow that they should plunge blindly into matrimony for that one reason. It may be the very thing that should keep them apart all their lives, for if they truly love each other, they will not be selfish to rush into misery for all time. A selfish, idle girl, or an intemperate, worthless young man, may fall in love with the same ardor which the sweet, housewifely maiden and the sensible, worthy young man experiences, but the man or woman who, knowing these things, takes a life partner wholly unfitted to help make a happy home deserves scant pity.

So let us hope that the present crop of brides and bridegrooms have carefully and prayerfully considered the whole question before the fateful vows are to be taken. Let us earnestly pray that they may be looking forward to homes of their own, no matter how humble, and that from the very first moment of their wedded life they will form a separate and distinct family. The first days are so precious and fleeting that no hotel or any other place except the new home should shelter the wedded pair, for more depends upon getting the right start than many young people realize. Reverently and in the fear of God the new home should be established, to last while life lasts, and then no earthly judge will ever be called upon to settle difficulties that may arise.

Necessity has forced many young couples to live in hotels or with aged parents, and to put up with many hardships during the first married years, and yet they have been happy and reasonably content. If such things must be, it is well to make the best of them, but be happy if you can have your own little home. It may be poor and lowly, but in it may dwell all joy and peace, if only the right people inhabit it. Sickness and trouble will probably come, but the real love and common-sense views of life will help over every difficulty.

Instead of casting about for some trivial excuse to break the sacred tie when poverty and sorrow comes, husband and wife will be striving to ease the burdens for each other as much as possible, and will find that their souls are more closely united than in days of prosperity and ease. This does not mean that the burdens young husbands and wives have wilfully taken upon themselves at the altar can be cheerfully and lightly borne, but if misfortunes come, through no fault of either, love makes them bearable. It is one thing to support a husband ill or injured after he has done his best as long as possible for his family, and quite another to have to provide for the intemperate man whom the headstrong young girl married to reform in spite of the prayers and tears of her parents. A man may love a girl who boasts that she "hates housework," but he is likely to have a hard time of it, after marriage, unless she reforms speedily. Perhaps it is cold and calculating to find out beforehand what to expect from the betrothed, but it is a great deal better to do that than to patronize the divorce court later in life.

May the happiness of the new homes to be established in the month of roses be founded on the solid rock, where none of the winds that wreck and destroy domestic peace can ever prevail against it.—American Messenger.

A Tale of a Tea-Table.

Betsy Bobbity baked a bun—
A beautiful, big, bewitching one,
So light that it fairly shone with pride,
With currants a-plenty safe inside.

Patsy Poppity peeled a peach,
A pear and a plum, and put them each
In a tiny pie with a frosted top,
As fine as those in the baker's shop.

Three little maids to the pantry flew
To look for the dishes pink and blue,
And a terrible tragedy happened next—
And my! but the little maids were vexed!

Young Puppety Pup came racing by,
And the little red table caught his eye;
Then never a bit he cared—not he—
That he hadn't been asked to the dainty tea:

But he ate up Betsy Bobbity's bun,
With all of the currants—every one,
The three little pies at a single bite,
And everything else there was in sight!

Dora Doppity cried, "Dear me!
What a capital time to give a tea!"
And she put the little red table out,
With three little chairs set round about.

And Betsy Bobbity's Baby Blue,
And Patsy Poppity's Precious Prue,
And Dora Doppity's Daisy Dee,
Were asked to come to a charming tea.

But never a word the three guests said,
As they gazed with a smile right straight ahead;
And never they showed the least surprise,
Although right under their very eyes,

The rude and ravenous Puppety P.
Ate all that they were to have had for tea!
Which shows us plainly that Baby Blue,
And Daisy Dee and the Precious Prue

Were well brought up, and clearly knew
That the proper, ladylike thing to do
Was never to make remarks at tea,
Whatever they chanced to hear and see!

"Wiggles."

BY ANNIE LOUISE BERRAY.

It was noisy and dirty where Mary Ann lived. The big trains thundered past every hour of the day and rattled the windows of the little brown house. The smoke from the big factory on the hill covered everything with black soot, from the scrawny geranium in the front yard, which tried to be a white one, to Mary Ann's little freckled nose.

But there was the tunnel. Not forty feet from Mary Ann's front gate it opened its great black mouth and Mary Ann was never tired of watching it swallow the great long trains.

And at the other end of the tunnel was the country. Mary Ann had never seen the country but she knew all about it for that was where her mother had lived when she was a little girl. There was lots of green grass there, she said, and there were flowers and trees with leaves that rustled softly and there was plenty of milk to drink.

"O, child! If we get your father into the country!"

Mary Ann's mother would often say and then she would sigh and look up from her work at the clouds of smoke pouring from the chimneys of the factory where her father worked.

Mary Ann knew why her mother sighed. The doctor said it was the smoke which made her father's face so white. Mary Ann couldn't see how the smoke which made everything else so black should make her father's face so white but the doctor knew a great many things that Mary Ann did not.

One hot day in summer she was swinging on the front gate eating a radish. She took small bites to make it last as long as possible and stopped now and then to lean out over the gate. When there were no trains going in or out of the tunnel she could see a little bright spot in the center of the blackness. That was the country end.

Suddenly Mary Ann heard a pitiful little whine. She looked and listened. She heard it again and this time she saw that it came from a dirty, wooly little bundle of hair that lay quivering on the track. She called excitedly to her mother and they picked up the poor little bundle which they found to be a little dirty white dog with big brown eyes. He kept moaning and whining so pitifully that Mary Ann felt like crying too.

"Run for some water, Mary Ann," said her mother, putting the dog down on the tiny porch.

While they watched him drinking as if he never could get enough, they were wondering where he came from.

"Look, Mamma," exclaimed Mary Ann. "He has a shiny collar on and it has some writing on it."

Her mother looked and read it. "'Wiggles,' that must be his name."

"Dear Wiggles," murmured Mary Ann, patting his head softly. She knew he liked it for he wagged his funny wooly stub of a tail when she did it.

"Sunnymead," she went on. "Why, that is where the Hortons live. It is their country place."

Mary Ann looked at Wiggles with something like awe. He lived in the country then.

When Mary Ann's father came home that night he said Sunnymead was just the other side of the tunnel and he would take Wiggles home on the next train; Mary Ann might go too. Mary Ann caught her breath. To go through the tunnel and see the really truly country! It was all like a wonderful dream—the long ride through the dark tunnel and then coming suddenly into the sunshine. There were trees and flowers and grass and birds, just as her mother had told her, only a hundred times more beautiful.

Mary Ann cannot remember just what happened next but she remembers that she was walking by her father's side, the dog clasped tightly in her arms, when a little girl in a white dress came flying toward them and Wiggles gave a bound from Mary Ann's arms into those of the little girl. And the little girl's father shook hands with Mary Ann's father and then Mary Ann and Wiggles and the little girl in the white dress sat down on the grass together.

And what do you think happened then? The little girl's father found that the factory smoke was making Mary Ann's father ill and he asked him to bring Mary Ann and her mother and live in a little cottage covered with roses and take care of the lawn and the big stable.

And so he did. The first night that Mary Ann was tucked into bed in the new home she murmured happily, "An' 'twas all account of Wiggles."—Congregationalist.

Around the Gulf to Mexico.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

New Orleans—Second Day.

March 25.—We were so hurried and disturbed yesterday about getting across the Gulf that we hadn't time to learn much about the New Orleans churches. At home, when you point to a church and ask, "What's that?" you are told, "That's the South Methodist—" or the Cumberland, or Baptist, as the case may be. But in New Orleans you are told, "That's St. George church"—or as Mr. Buckley once described a beautiful structure south of Lafayette Park, "That's old man Parmer's church; he's dead now." I don't know whether the church has survived "old man Parmer" or not (I suspect his name was Palmer) but I suppose he willed it to some other Presbyterian, for it must be valuable as real estate, even if its religion was vested in the "old man." Today we have a wealth of time on our hands and could go to ever so many churches, but as it's Monday they are all closed. The money that Morton telegraphed for so grandly didn't come. The bank didn't know Morton and called for identification. Morton had to wire back home for the home bank to wire the New Orleans bank to waive identification. As the New Orleans bank doesn't open till ten, and closes for early lunch, we will have to stay over till to-morrow. Even then the money may not be obtained, as our train will leave at eleven, and it may take some time to be waived.

The bank we were dealing with, or rather the one that refused to deal with us was on St. Charles street, for of course everything is either on it or Canal street. We began to look for a restaurant, and dived down a quiet cross-street between St. Charles and Camp. Out of the confusion of the thronged thoroughfare, the crossway through which no horse passes, was quaintly restful. It was as free from traffic as Petticoat Lane in Kansas City, but without the petticoats. It is called Commercial Place, but its only commerce seemed to be in souvenir post cards. Here we found a restaurant and Jebly had no trouble in rolling up to the table on his tricycle. Our waitress was named May Eaton. She lives in the old French Quarter and speaks a little French, but not near so much as her mother. She was as pretty as a picture and had hardly more intelligence, but she was apparently so modest and shy, one wondered to find her in such a position. Most waitresses swagger or thrust out their chins, and their every movement seems to say, "I know you're looking!" So it was pleasant and restful to find this altogether lovely girl threading her modest way among noisy companions, as if unconscious of her grace. We asked for the population of New Orleans but she didn't know what that meant. When we explained that we'd like to know about how many people lived in town, she thought it was a joke and laughed a little, musically. Morton declared he had never seen so many pretty women in any city as in New Orleans; and that May surpassed them all. We ate as long as we could.

Lafayette Park was on our way home, so we stopped there and lay upon the grass at our ease. There is a fountain whose fount is dry, and beautiful walks among the southern trees, statues of Henry Clay, etc., and the right to lie on the grass. We lay under symmetrical trees with little leaves like those of the locust, and we decided it was the banana tree. I got some of the leaves to send home in my letter. It was oppressively hot, but I should have felt my money wasted on New Orleans had it been otherwise. Lafayette Park is surrounded by imposing buildings. I have spoken of "old man Parmer's church" on the south; the city hall and Saule's College are on the west; a great library is on the east, and I think there are houses worth seeing on the north, but mammoth billboards hide that point of the compass. The bills announced Amelia Bingham in the "Lilac Room" at the Toulane for that night. They told us to chew "old star," too, and to wear somebody's collars. I wonder why such impertinences are allowed to degrade the beauty of such a restful resort?

At 2 p. m. we left St. Charles Hotel in an automobile to see the sights. We took the tourist car that gives "ten more miles for the money than any other." The money is one dollar. We went scorching down Canal street at a furious rate, and it was a pleasure to see the pale-faced pedestrians flying to the sidewalks. We didn't get to run over anything—they were too quick for us. We crossed streams on which shipping comes up from the river; we saw the house where Jefferson Davis was born; the old Louisiana Lottery building; the vault where Davis' body lay six months before being moved to Richmond; the tomb of Beauregard; magnolia trees, giant wisterias, and the flashing sheen of wonderful parks; the Spanish quarter, the French quarter, and the house built as a retreat for Napoleon Bonaparte, and the castle built by the Spanish princess, with her bronze monogram on the ledges of a hundred windows. The French quarter is very quiet. It seems almost a deserted city, with nothing attractive to the eye unless somebody's yard gate is open. But glimpses into the backyards cause you to catch your breath. Behind the dingy old common-looking walls are gleaming marble statues and fountains that work, and banks of roses and all sorts of blooming flowers that ought to make March swell with pride. And under the scarlet and purple arbors are little polished tables and rocking chairs and quaint glasses, with apparently not a drop of water to drink. If we had those yards up north, we'd want them out at the edge of the street, and something said about them in the papers. The French, it seems, lavish their care and money where we chase other people's chickens out of our onion-beds. Still, although this may be from racial love of privacy in their pleasures, I observed that many good old families left their gates open, for one reason or another.

The cemeteries are the pride of New Orleans. There are no graves underground in the best of them, because the river is higher than the city. When I was there the river was low and the ships stood at the docks like trains standing high and dry where there is no platform, and the porter puts a stool for you to get up on—if it's a station of consequence. If the river had been high, I suppose they would have hoisted ladders to the foot of the ship gangways. Maybe at high flood they have elevators to get out of the city upon the boats. I don't know. But the tombs all stand upon the ground, just like the cisterns, and being altogether in full view they are very expensive, because nobody wants his vault discountenanced by his neighbor's. In fact, a poor man can't afford to be buried in New Orleans, and I doubt if he can afford to live there. The chauffeur told me that no kind of work paid in the city except his own. He said they certainly appreciated a good chauffeur and paid well, but he wouldn't stay. There had been hot weather and mosquitoes right along through January and February, "and here's March for you to see yourself," he said. We had stopped in front of St. Louis Cathedral, and it was stifling hot. I learned two things from this young man. The first was how a chauffeur pronounces "chauffeur." He calls it "show-fer," with all the heavy weight of the tone on the "show." You don't have to hesitate and twist your tongue, and look like a foreigner when you are saying it. You don't make any kind of a hiss or lisp, or grow embarrassed, as if you imagined people were wondering where you bought it. You say "chauffeur" just as you would "loafer" or "gopher." It's easy. Another thing I learned from him. I pointed to something that looked like overgrown narrow-dock growing upon thick, clumsy cornstalks. They were across the street in a park. He told me they were banana trees. The leaves were three or four feet long, I suppose. I secretly took out of my pocket the leaves I had intended to send home and scattered them in front of a Spanish restaurant that has been an active restaurant since as remote an age as anything ever started to going in America. I would not like to eat eggs there. The older a building becomes, the more interesting and valuable. Man is not so. I saw the tomb of George W. Cable's father. Cable wrote so truthfully and intimately of the Creoles that many of them would rather have his tomb there than his father's. He is one of my favorite authors, and I was pleased to see what beauty he had devoted to his father's resting-place. There was a man on the automobile to call out the places of interest, and the glee he showed over every object, the warm enthusiasm, was worth the price of the ride. How he could exult in those houses and bridges, like a child over a new toy, when one reflected that he must go into this same passionate ecstasy at every trip, was incomprehensible. He was particularly jubilant over the cemeteries. He would say in a stentorian tone: "The magnificent, beautifully sculptured vault we are now coming to on your right, with the life-size angel above and the weeping cherubs below, holds the remains of Mr. ———, who was a very rich sugar refiner and left two millions to beautify the city. Isn't it beautiful? Aren't you glad you saw it? Ah, very fine, very fine!" And we would whiz past, deriving infinite content from Mr. ———, who would doubtless have snubbed us had he not died in time to entertain us with his sarcophagus.

After the ride we were hovering in front of the St. Charles hotel, with the air of paying $6 a day there for a room, when who should hail us but our hackman friend, Mr. Buckley. He was off his hack and there was nothing to prevent our hearing him talk. As Morton had been contending all day, whenever other subjects failed, that a Creole was a person who had some negro blood, I appealed the question to Mr. Buckley. I considered him better than a dictionary, because he was a creole. He answered just as I had explained to Morton, that a Creole is a descendant of French parentage, born in Louisiana. From Mr. Buckley's reminiscences, his morals were also of French extraction. The word Creole is Spanish, and means "well-bred." Although there are so many Frenchmen in this state that they have the importance of a name all to themselves, I think very little French is spoken in New Orleans except in the back gardens of the Creoles. The only French I heard was what I spoke myself, and I had to turn it into English to be understood, and even then I was charged too much.

For supper we went back to Commercial Place, and as May was serving behind a long counter we forego the comfort of sitting at a table, because just to look at this simple child was better than the strawberries which couldn't be made sweet. So we perched on hard stools at the counter, and crooked out our elbows and jostled each other while May looked on serenely and understood nothing except the price of the dishes. In the evening we sat on the grass in Lafayette Park, while beautiful women, and other kinds, too, strolled about the walks, and children played about the fountain that didn't work. And we looked at the trees and knew they were not banana trees. Then the mosquitoes came and we went down to Canal street and watched the crowds blooming with southern beauty. From somewhere came a strain of "Dixie," and there was a sudden shout and stir.

At last to our room, pretty tired, and I was thinking that if preachers, in particular could get the enthusiasm of that automobile sight-crier, and keep it, they would never grow old in the service. How much better to be cheerful over the bunch that shows up at prayer-meeting or on a rainy Sunday, than to sulk over the multitude that is not present. That sight-crier could exhibit a fresh, inexhaustible glee over graveyards, yet some of us are always ready to complain about the church, as if it were our church instead of God's; and as if he couldn't bring it through to triumph! But the mosquitoes drove us behind the bars, where we long lay prisoners in the bonds of sleep.

OUR ANNUAL SUMMER SALE

OF GOOD BOOKS AT REDUCED PRICES IS NOW IN PROGRESS

That the price is reduced does not mean that the subject matter of these books is no longer of current interest, or that there ever was a large profit in the original price. But it is among the inevitables of the book business that there should be some left overs,—books as good as new, but too few to insert in our catalogue, or neglected in our advertising and needing to again be brought into merited prominence, or in the process of the suns having especially to do with these junctures of time and thought.

We find ourselves in possession of a great variety of books that ought to be distributed among church studies and home libraries instead of reposing in our storehouse.

These reduction prices are an earnest of our desire to scatter their light.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, JULY 25, 1907.

HEAR the pledge of Jesus Christ: "I will not leave you comfortless: I will come unto you. Lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." As long as God lives and our souls live, so long does this pledge stand. It is true, we can not always feel this presence. But we can always know that it is there, always think of it, so long as thought endures, always rest upon it forever and forever; and the reason why this promise is given is that we may hold fast to this truth. There may be a moment in the very depths of sorrow and anguish when the presence is hidden from us. But is it not because we are stunned, unconscious? It is like passing through a surgical operation. The time comes for the ordeal. The anaesthetic is ready. You stretch out your hand to your friend: "Don't leave me, don't forsake me." The last thing you feel is the clasp of that hand, the last thing you see is the face of that friend. Then a moment of darkness, a blank—and the first thing you see is the face of love again. So the angel of God's face stands by us, bends above us, and we may know that He will be there even when all else fails. . . . . Amid the mists that shroud the great ocean beyond the verge of mortal life, there is one sweet, mighty voice that says: "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. In all thy afflictions I will be with thee, and the angel of My face shall save thee."

The Spiritual Value of the Lord's Supper*

By M. A. Hart

If I were asked to name the most prominent and paramount weakness in the life of the average Christian as well as the majority of congregations of believers, I would unhesitatingly say, lack of spirituality. Somehow, in some way many of us have missed connection with the spiritual dynamo. And as a result we have lost both light and heat. We are without the spiritual glow.

A Divided Church Spiritual Church.

It is both bad and sad to see a divided church, nationally or locally, doctrinally or contentiously. Such a condition makes for slow progress. It is like a lame man or a blind man running a race. I am not sure but what it was lack of spirituality that helped produce a divided church. Certain it is that we will never have a united church until we attain to a higher spiritual plateau than that upon which the majority of us now stand. Our human logic must pass through the divine alembic. Our religious belief, our creed, if you please, may be as impregnable as the Rock of Gibralter. Our hearts may also be just about as hard. A correct interpretation of the Bible may still leave us with an incorrect life. Intellectuality is not spirituality. But the fact is, it takes a warm heart as well as a clear head to master the truer and deeper meaning of revelation.

Our Need.

We oftentimes get letters which say, "Read between the lines." What do we infer! That there is a deeper and more vital message for us than mere letters can give. It is this same message that we get from the words of Paul (2 Cor. 3:6): "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." The thing we need to do, is not to change the letters but to get the spirit.

Spiritual Content of Ordinances.

Divine ordinances were never meant to be simply doctrinal. They must be spiritually discerned. Baptism and the Lord's Supper are commandments. But they are more. Lovalty to Christ will lead us to observe them as commands. A truer and fuller understanding will reveal them as spiritual necessities. How many of us get the spiritual suggestiveness in the words: "Buried with Christ in baptism," and risen "to walk in newness of life," or, "This do in memory of me" at the institution of the Lord's Supper. It takes both sight and insight to see the spiritual realities that come clothed in material form.

The Old and the New.

Practical common sense Ben Johnson once made the fine statement that it was the part of wisdom in searching for the truth to unite as far as possible the newest of the oldest and the oldest of the newest. Professor James gives this advice to teachers: "The old in the new is what claims our attention—the old with a slight new turn. In this way the shuttle of interest will shoot backward and forward, weaving the new and the old together in a lively and entertaining way."

Passover and Lord's Supper.

It was not an afterthought of Christ's when he instituted the Lord's Supper—what we know as the Lord's Supper, immediately after partaking of the Passover week. Here is where the Master reveals his consummate ability and insight as a teacher. To the Jew, the Passover was the feast par excellence. Did he not go back in memory and imagination to the days of bondage in Egypt! He could still smell the onions and the garlic. He could still feel the burdens and blows of the cruel taskmasters, he could still see the blood on the lintel of the door-posts. But blessed be the name of Jehovah, he could still feel the joy that welled up in his soul when danger was over and deliverance had come. "The Passover celebrated a deliverance effected with blood. There is a real and natural connection."

"As They Were Eating."

Notice how easily and gracefully Christ blends the new with the old. "As they were eating (the Passover Supper) Jesus took the bread and blessed it, and he said to his disciples, 'Take, eat, this is my body.' And he took a cup and gave thanks, and gave to them saying: "Drink ye all of it, for this is my blood of the (new) covenant which is shed for many unto remission of sins."

It was this happy blending of the Passover feast with the new feast, the new thought in an old setting, that made that institution a living, vital, spiritual force in the lives of the men who were there that evening. "There have been those who because they enjoyed not, disputed, and there have been those who disputed not because they enjoyed." The Lord's Supper is not a riddle to be solved. It is a spiritual feast to be appropriated and enjoyed. Many and many a time Christ's apostles made his heart to bleed because of their slowness to grasp the spiritual import of his truths. The bleeding time is not over. We, his disciples, are still failing to appropriate the deeper significance of this beautiful and suggestive soul feast.

The Personal and the Spiritual.

Abstract reasoning makes one intellectual; but it takes the personal to make one spiritual. Logic drives home a thought. Love appropriates it as a personal possession. Emerson gives us a cold, intellectual dissertation on love. Jesus lives his love out in the open. One is light without warmth: the other is light that penetrates the darkest gloom and warmth that melts the coldest heart.

"This Do in Remembrance of Me."

This is what we need to see—Jesus makes this new institution a very personal matter. It is not a cold and formal something like a demonstration in generosity. Listen—"This is my body, this is my blood."

It was not until after the crucifixion that the full force of these words dawned on the minds and hearts of the apostles and disciples. No wonder Paul's soul was stirred in him when he saw the profanation and sacrilege that had gathered about this holy ordinance. No wonder he brings home the personal appeal—"This do in remembrance of me. As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye proclaim the Lord's death till he come. Wherefore whosoever shall eat the bread or drink the cup of the Lord—unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord."

Personal Heart Searching.

Suppose such thoughts should well up in our souls each time we partake of this love feast, there would be some heart searchings and heart burnings that would consume the impure and base, that would develop within us a spiritual power and passion, that would send us out into our business, political and social life with a new determination to keep ourselves clean, unspotted, that we might approach this service worthily and not eat and drink condemnation to our souls. This is just what Paul is pleading for—"Let a man prove (examine) himself, and so let him eat of the bread and drink of the cup." There is just one person that can, must and will pass judgment on your worthiness, on Mugwumps.

Senator Platt says that Governor Hughes is a mugwump, that he is boss of the mugwump element of the party in New York, and that the mugwump element is now dominant. These are painful days for Mr. Platt. Governor Hughes' frosty treatment of the boys must grieve the venerable senator's sympathetic soul to the core. Naturally he feels relief in calling the unsympathetic one a mugwump. The fact is, Mr. Hughes is a much better party man than Mr. Platt. The members of the old ring who pride themselves on their loyalty to the party and esteem party regularity above every other virtue, are usually most of all interested in lining up the party to make it serve their private interests and personal ambitions. There are thousands of good party men with whom party loyalty is a matter of principle, but with the typical boss it is generally a matter of profit. It would be absurd for any one to imagine that Platt represents his party or his state in the United States Senate. He represents himself and the United States Express Company. He is the real mugwump, if either he or Hughes must be called one.

Naval Accidents.

An explosion of two bags of powder in a turret of the battleship Georgia resulted in the death of eight men and the more or less serious injury of fourteen others. It is not apparent that the accident was anybody's fault. Probably it was caused by a spark from the previous shot or from the smokestack floating into the turret while a big gun was being loaded. For several years there has been on an average about one bad accident a year in our navy. Three years ago the explosion on the Missouri cost the lives of twenty-nine men. The year before that it was the Iowa and the Massachusetts with eleven deaths between them. Before that the Texas, and before that the Kearsarge. Our naval officers have diligently studied the problem of making war vessels accident-proof. They have made progress but have not succeeded. Perhaps it is not their fault. Perhaps the problem of making the business of destruction a safe occupation is permanently insoluble.

Custom Reforms.

Secretary Cortelyou—who, as will be remembered by those of our readers who read the papers every day, is no longer secretary to the President, or secretary of commerce and labor, or postmaster general, but now secretary of the treasury—has undertaken to devise a system by which travelers coming or returning from abroad may be relieved of the chief nuisances of the present customs examination. If he can do this, he is a great man, a much greater man than he has ever gotten credit for being. At present passengers arriving at New York are herded into the cabin during the hour or two just before landing (when they want to be on deck seeing the harbor) and compelled to make a sworn statement regarding the dutiable articles in their possession. Then, after disembarking, their baggage is searched to see whether they have perjured themselves. It was long ago suggested that either the oath or the search might be dispensed with. The new scheme dispenses with the oath and substitutes a simple declaration made on a wholly different system. If the new plan works as well as it sounds, Mr. Cortelyou can get the solid vote of the ocean-traveling public for any office to which he may ever aspire.

Tariff Revision.

It is reported that a conference at Oyster Bay has decided that tariff revision must not be taken up by the next session of Congress as it would be fatal to the peace of the party and the prosperity of the country. It must wait until after the election. This in spite of a surplus of $87,000,000 for the fiscal year which ended June 30. Even with the vast expenditure of the government, it is unable to spend money anywhere near as fast as the present tariff brings it in. To the mind of the stand-patter there are three times when tariff revision seems unadvisable: First, just before an election because a change of tariff might disturb business, unsettle the public mind and jeopardize the success of the party; second, just after an election because the vote has shown that the public is satisfied; third, between elections because there is no special pressure just then.

Campaign Contributions.

It has been openly charged, though not yet proved, that some of the titles of nobility recently bestowed by the King of England were given in return for contributions to the campaign fund of the dominant party. We hope it is not true. While in common with all good citizens of this republic, we set little store by titles of nobility, it would be a pity to see so ancient an institution dragged into the mire of modern commercialism. We like to feel that titles are genuine even if foolish and inconsequential. In this country we have campaign contributions by corporations which expect favors, and usually get them. Then, if the charges are true, social advancement is the reward of generosity to the party. In both cases the publication of the lists of large contributions would help to frustrate their designs.

Clergy Half-Rates.

The expected has happened and the "clergy rate" is now withdrawn. In the future ministers and charity workers will pay two cents a mile like other travelers on the railroads. In a number of states where two-cent legislation is in operation, and especially throughout the East, they have been doing this for some time. But now more than 100,000 annual certificates will be withdrawn and a half-cent for every mile traveled will be added to the minister's expense account. We have no disposition to blame the railroads, for they will save their agents some trouble, time and bookkeeping. But we doubt whether they will add to their exchequer. There is no minister who would not prefer to pay full fare had he the means. And while it is true that the ministerial half-rate has, at times, been abused, and men have used it when on business or pleasure bent, at the same time the increase of a half cent per mile will reduce the travel of ministers and seriously affect some of them. If the new regulation shall lead to more located ministries its general effect may be salutary.

The Dread of Poverty.

Prof. William James, writing upon the question whether poverty among the cultured men of this land is deterring them from the highest developments of literature and thought, says: "Among English-speaking peoples especially do the praises of poverty need once more to be boldly sung. We have grown literally afraid to be poor. We despise any one who elects to be poor in order to simplify and save his inner life. If he does not join the general scramble and pant with the money-making street, we deem him spiritless and lacking in ambition. We have lost the power even of imagining what the ancient idealization of poverty could have meant; the liberation from material attachments, the unbridled soul, the manlier indifference, the paying our way by what we are to do and not by what we have—the more athletic trim, in short, the moral fighting shape." The indictment is in a large measure true. Take up yesterday's paper. It is the implied, if not openly expressed, glorification of dollars rather than brains and heart that you find in column after column. If the poor be "featured," it is the criminal and base side of their lives that is presented. Most of us look askance at the man who cultivates his heart power at the expense of his pocketbook, or thinks of his brains as other than a commercial commodity.

The American people's method of celebrating its holidays needs some reconsideration. There is a spirit of degeneration abroad which tends to lose sight of the real significance of Christmas, Thanksgiving and even the glorious Fourth. To-day there are more accidents and deaths on the Fourth of July than have been recorded in many a battle.

An Important Convention.

It is less than three months now until our hosts will be gathering in national convention at Norfolk. It is not exaggeration to say that no gathering in the history of the Disciples of Christ for a generation has had more important questions to deal with than will come before the Norfolk convention. It is full time, therefore, that the minds of the brotherhood were being turned toward that convention and the issues which are there to be considered.

First of all, there is the question of our relation to other religious bodies, which will come before the brethren there assembled either in regular or special sessions, in the form of reports from the committee on conference with Free Baptists and others, embracing, perhaps, a report of the committee of ten appointed to confer with a similar committee of Baptists, with a view of arranging an irenicon, or basis of agreements, and also in the form of an answer to the official communication from the Interchurch Conference, asking our co-operation with the other leading Protestant bodies, on the basis of federation, which they have submitted. A committee was appointed at our last congress to issue a call for a special convention for the consideration of this last topic, especially as the question of its germaneness to our regular convention has been raised. It would seem, if this point is well taken, that the reports of the other committees on union might also come before the same meeting, which would be among us what the National Council is to our Congregationalist brethren, or the General Convention, recently organized by the Northern Baptists, is to our Baptist brethren. It is significant that these two religious bodies, each holding with us to the theory of congregational autonomy, with a longer history than ours, have found such a convention, wholly independent of missionary societies, to be necessary for the consideration of certain topics of general interest. Such a convention might meet triennially, as the Congregationalist Council does, or annually in connection with our missionary conventions. In either case it should be a thoroughly representative body, in which the Disciples of Christ, as a religious movement, might express themselves, of course in a purely advisory and educational way, on whatever involves the interests of the brotherhood. One of two courses is open to us, namely: either to form such a convention, independent of our missionary organizations and representing the brotherhood directly as such, or to convert our present National Convention into such a body, giving the various missionary organizations their required sessions, as a part of its proceedings, but having other sessions, independent of these interests, to consider such matters as concern the entire brotherhood, and not merely the work of any society. That one or the other of these two courses must be pursued, and the Disciples as a body be given a voice on questions in which its own interests are vitally concerned, to our mind admits of no reasonable doubt.

Aside from these questions, however, the importance of which on our future development it would be difficult to exaggerate, there are other matters of great interest to the brotherhood and to the well-being of our various missionary organizations, which will be submitted for our consideration at Norfolk. There is the matter of the distribution of "days" for the benefit of our various national societies, which is as difficult of satisfactory adjustment as it is important to the successful on-going of these various organizations. The wisest counsel will be needed here, and the spirit of concession in the interest of unity of effort and general efficiency. Until our various organizations can come to feel that they are but different phases of one work and each one shall labor for the success of every other, we shall not have attained to an ideal condition. The nearer we approximate that ideal the easier will be the adjustment of days for offerings and other similar questions. It is easy to exaggerate the superior value of one time over another, for when these interests have all gained their places in the hearts of the brotherhood, as worthy objects, the particular time of year at which the offering is to be taken will matter very little, for in the spirit of loyalty to all these interests, "December's as pleasant as May."

Then there will be the report of the committee appointed at Buffalo for the revision of the constitution of the American Christian Missionary Society, which ought to deal, and perhaps will deal, with such important matters as the basis of representation, the scope of its work, and its relation to the various state organizations. That there is need for greater unification between our state and national home missionary societies is evident, seeing that they are all doing home mission work. This question, as will be seen, hinges on to the report of the committee on "days," one of whose recommendations, we understand, is that our state societies and the national society have the same day and divide the offering. Perhaps the method of dividing the offering suggested may not be the wisest, and perhaps the states may insist upon having a separate time for their offerings, but the churches, we imagine, in the long run, will settle that question for themselves. In any event, there is no reason, that we can see, why the various state organizations should not be regarded as auxiliary to the national organization, all forming one society whose aim is the evangelization of America.

But our purpose is not to discuss these questions in this article but simply to point out the importance of the issues that are to be brought before us at Norfolk, and to turn the thought of the brethren in that direction. We hope it will be a great convention in numbers, but we are more concerned that it should be a representative convention in the sense that all the states and territories will be represented and have a voice in the questions to be considered. Let the work be thoroughly laid out and thought out before the convention assembles and then, meeting in the spirit of prayer for divine guidance, we shall have a convention that will mightily influence our future growth and work.

The Man Who Does Things.

The twentieth century finds nearly everything changed. We are truly living in a new age. But perhaps nothing characterizes this new age more distinctly and emphatically than the new measure by which the worth of a man is determined. The old method estimated the man largely by what went into him, but the new method estimates him by what goes out of him. In the former case the amount of Latin, Greek, mathematics he was able to hold usually determined his value in the public estimation. If he was a walking library he was regarded as a great man, although as a real force in human life he may have been of little worth. If he had the capacity of Goldsmith's village school-master he was the wonder of all who knew him.

But this is now all changed. No one who is reasonable thinks of undervaluing the very best equipment that can be obtained. There never was a time in the history of the world when collegiate training was regarded with more favor than now. But if this training does not lead to the practical in the affairs of life it will add little to the value or reputation of any one. The man of the twentieth century, who expects the world to believe in him, must do things. In other words he must be a practical force in everything that makes for the best development of human life. No amount of education, or rather learning, will help any one much who finds no outlet for this in the great field of usefulness which is to-day, more than anything else, the test of character.

We have called this a characteristic of the new age, but after all it is as old as the Christian era. Christ himself was the author of this conception of true character. He was, perhaps, not a utilitarian, in the modern sense of that word, but he was, nevertheless, eminently practical throughout his whole life. His history may be epitomized in that remarkable statement of one of his biographers, viz., "he went about doing good." In other words he did things, and this was the test he offered of his claims to the Messiahship. He said: "If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not." He was willing to be tried by the works which he accomplished. In view of this it can hardly be thought remarkable that in the final day of accounts, every man is to be judged according as his works have been.

Notes and Comments.

A new theological quarterly, it is announced, will be started in this country beginning next January. It is to have an able editorial staff, and its aim will be to meet the needs of scholars and pastors for a theological journal.

Mr. Carnegie's pension fund is having a decided anti-denominational influence among the colleges. The trustees of Wesleyan University have unanimously approved a new charter which relieves that institution from any direct affiliation with the Methodist church. A movement is on foot to make the same sort of change in Brown University, severing it from any direct connection with the Baptists, but a motion to this effect in a meeting of its alumni association was laid on the table for a year by a very large majority. It may be doubted whether those institutions whose charters require that a majority of the trustees shall be members of a given church are any more sectarian in spirit than others, although this seems to be the test of Mr. Carnegie's Pension Fund.

"The Congregationalist and Christian World" reports President Hadley of Yale as stating that the two problems of meeting the call for ministers and of providing for them adequate support can best be solved, so far as that University is concerned, by reducing the number of candidates and increasing their value, which can be effected by tuition fees and higher standards of admission and teaching. President Hadley is quoted as saying: "To lament the diminution in demand for ministers and at the same time try to remedy the evil by increasing the supply is like attempting to put out a fire by pouring in kerosene." The reference to "the diminution in demand for ministers" sounds very strange to a young and rapidly growing body like the Disciples of Christ whose greatest need is a larger supply of properly trained ministers of the Word, the demand for which we have been wholly unable to meet. We are planting churches more rapidly than we are training and educating preachers. If President Hadley will only infuse into his ministerial graduates a passion for simple New Testament Christianity which exalts Christ above creeds, is content to wear his name, maintain his ordinances, and seek to reproduce his life, we will guarantee that they will either find churches who will employ them or they will find fields where they can establish churches of their own without building on another man's foundation.

When the primitive church in Jerusalem was scattered by persecution they "went everywhere preaching the Word." Now that the extreme heat in the cities has scattered ministers and their flocks through the country, and there is less activity in churches, as such, it is comforting to believe, with "The Congregationalist" that "the church in the person of its professed representatives is cultivating new fields, establishing points of contact with the outsider, bearing witness to the joy and blessedness of the Christian life, through the quiet and steady exhibition of the virtues and graces from whose practice the Christian is not exempt even in hot weather, and through the offering of sympathy and succor to strangers and chance acquaintances." Of course there are a few Christians, so-called, who leave their Christianity at home, and make little use of it in their vacations, but we like to believe that these are the exceptions, and that the great majority of church members carry something of the flavor of Christianity with them during their summer outing.

On June 15, our fellow-laborer, William Worth Dowling, passed another one of the milestones which have marked his interesting and useful life. Referring to this event in "Our Young Folks," which he edits, he says that he has "lived so many years that perhaps the 'eternal fitness of things' would demand that he begin to feel very old and to lose interest in the things pertaining to this world and which engage the attention of the younger generation; but for some reason he feels much as Caleb did when asking his promised inheritance at the hands of Joshua, and he keeps right on doing and enjoying the same things that he did a quarter of a century ago." As to the future he says: "It is the desire and expectation of this Editor to remain in 'the working harness,' and to 'renew his youth' from year to year, even should it please the heavenly Father for him to reach the age of old Caleb, or even the century mark; and his prayer is, to be permitted in the full enjoyment of physical strength and mental powers, to work on until the last day in the afternoon and then enter into rest at eventide, when it shall be light.'" We are sure the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will join with us in the sincere wish that his desire and expectation may be realized, and that his last days may be his best.

Judge McElhinney declines to decide whether Jonah swallowed the whale. He does not believe that the case at issue between G. A. Hoffman, who is sued on a note for $5,000 by the Bible College of Missouri, is to be decided on the principle of what the little girl learned in Sunday-school: "That I must sell three tickets for the concert next week, give twenty cents for the superintendent's present, and that Noah built the ark!" The judge evidently believes that in too much disputing truth is lost, and he will not permit the side-tracking of the real point at issue by bringing in issues that are not pertinent. He does not wish to go on record as having determined whether the Garden of Eden was a myth or a reality, and therein is he a wise judge, for it is not his special business, in his capacity as a judge, to settle that question.

It would save many a sermon, many an argument, many a tear, if we could have it once for all determined by judicial decree, which would be accepted of all men, that certain statements, theories or convictions are absolutely true. Perhaps Mr. Hoffman could then give all his time to his banking business and we could dispense with a great many of our preachers and evangelists. But it is unreasonable to expect a court to settle such weighty matters—even if they had anything to do with this case—when the question simply is, Did the defendant promise, with others, to pay a certain sum toward founding a Bible College? The Bible College has, of course, been placed in a false light by the newspaper publicity of the Jonah side of this case. Perhaps that was all that was intended by the defendant. But in the end it may prove that it would have been better to have said nothing than nothing to the purpose.

We publish this week the report of the committee on "The State of the Cause" in Missouri. This is the report which created the only lively discussion which the convention had, but one which resulted in a practically unanimous conclusion.

While we believe that too many preachers are lacking in that real spiritual affinity with the things of God, and fail to apprehend the significance of "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart," we believe, also, that there are some preachers who are so given to other-worldliness that they fail to meet the requirements sometimes of this world. With many men—some in the church pews—the latter preacher, because he does not actively disturb their easy-going lives, is held in preference. The mission of the gospel is to get men right with God, right with themselves and right with their social and civic environments. We are glad to quote here a paragraph from a recent address on "The Function and Moral Leadership of the Christian Church," by Frank P. Parkin, a Methodist minister of Chester, Pa. He said:

> "The well-worn phrase, 'It's your duty to save souls,' has been hurled at the preacher upon every opportunity by political bosses and employers of labor whenever the preacher arose in his pulpit and told the congregation of the wrongs practiced in the governing of a big city and the rights of the working man. It appears to those whom the Church attacks from a moral standpoint that the preacher has no rights except to preach the Word of God and sing hymns, but the time is coming when the Church will assume her moral leadership and effect the downfall of all that is dishonest and immoral."

Can a man be a religious man who, when on a vacation, allows his religion to cease working?

Editor's Easy Chair.

Pentwater Musings.

To-night the Easy Chair sits alone in the little study whose western window looks out over the lake, placid as a sleeping infant to-night, and bathed in the soft light of the half-full moon which hangs over it. The whispering pines have ceased even their whisperings and seem to be wrapped in the all-pervading stillness. At such an hour, in such surroundings, one feels the presence of the invisible God and the nearness of the spiritual world. It is the noise and clatter of the world that shuts God out of our thoughts. We are seldom still enough to hear God speak to us in his "still, small voice." Who, in the silence of the night, can look out on the moonlit lake stretching away into seeming infinity, and up into the star-sown sky looking down upon the earth with its thousand eyes, and not feel, with Wordsworth,

"A presence that disturbs me with the joy
Of elevated thoughts, a sense sublime
Of something far more deeply interfused
Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns,
And the round ocean, and the living air,
And the blue sky, and in the mind of man;
A motion, and a spirit that impels
All thinking things, all objects of all thought,
And rolls through all things."

And yet, we know there are those who do not like to be alone with their thoughts and with God. This is a most unnatural and abnormal state of feeling, and any one who experiences no joy in such opportunities for meditation and bringing the soul face to face with God and eternal realities, has reason to be alarmed at his spiritual condition. The sublimity of the night awes us. The veil which it spreads over all sublunary things, seems to make more manifest the spiritual world, and in its presence our pride and arrogance are rebuked and we are humbled by our realization of the infinite and eternal. Yonder moon that rides through the heavens in queenly splendor to-night will shine on other generations long after the eyes that gaze upon it now have been closed to mortal scenes forever.

Night has given place to morning. The early sun is just creeping above the hill-top east of "The Pioneer," and the stars have disappeared before his coming. But the stillness continues, broken only by a few bird-notes. Out yonder on the lake at the nets the fishermen are gathering in their harvest of the night. The sun will soon have risen to a height where his beams of light will dispel the thin vapor that lies over the water and along the shore. The other morning we witnessed a battle royal between the king of day and a dense fog which occasionally wraps the lake in its vaporous folds. At first, the rays of old Sol seemed to have little effect on it, and the fog horn out at the light-house answered that of the incoming Chicago boat, which we could hear but could not see. But as the god of day rose above the hill-top, planted his batteries on its summit and hurled his fiery javelins into the dense mass, we could see it taking on a rosy hue as it was shot through with beams of light, and gradually it dispersed into the infinity of space, revealing "the Kansas" moving cautiously but majestically into the channel and harbor of Pentwater. From the beginning we put our confidence in the victorious power of the sun, feeling sure it would win out. It is a way light has with darkness and its accompanying fogs and vapors. In the long period covered by human history the darkness of ignorance and the fogs of superstition have been gradually retreating before the increasing knowledge of the world, and especially before the rising sun of righteousness. Ignorance and superstition, wearing different names at different times, often put up a stubborn fight, but eventually they suffer defeat. It has always been so, and always will be so. It can not be otherwise in a universe over which God rules. Light is more than a match for darkness, and righteousness is stronger than iniquity. The power of intrenched evil is often exaggerated and the devil's invincibility and valor greatly overestimated. The truth is, the devil is an old coward, who only needs to be resisted in order to flee, and the whole citadel of error and wrong needs only the united assault of the forces of righteousness to speedily surrender to the great Commander who rides upon the white horse.

The brief stay of man here on this mundane sphere, as suggested above, is a thought that often comes to a thoughtful mind amid these scenes of nature. One looks out upon the great lake and reflects that it was here, lifting up the voice of its multitudinous waves, when Abram pastured his herds and flocks on the fresh plains of ancient Palestine, or when Job sang of the Pleiades and Arcturus in the land of Uz. Even these sand dunes which seem but the creation of yesterday, made and unmade by the sport of winds and waves, bear evidence of having been in existence long before the foot of man made its impress along these shores. But how brief and evanescent a thing is human life as measured between the cradle and the grave! And yet how conscious man is that he possesses a power and a nature unlike, and vastly superior to all rivers and lakes and mountains and oceans! He feels, too, if he is at his best, that there is something in him that is to outlive all these material objects and forces and is to resist forever the empire of death and decay. The great inland sea lying out there before us, reflects all the colors inherent in the sun, and the shadows of passing clouds, but it has no power to think of God, or feel the sense of awe, or be thrilled with the sublimity of a great idea or a noble purpose. It is this power in man that shows his kinship to God, sharing, according to his measure, in the thought and life of God, and destined to live and think and love and achieve, when all material things have passed away.

Now that the sun has risen higher in the heavens, the breeze is rising also and, coming up out of the great southwest, has stirred the bosom of the lake, giving it the aspect, so often noted, of an illimitable green pasture over which the white flocks of Neptune are gamboling with apparent delight. The scene is not unlike that which we see in the world to-day—that of commotion and unrest. But as it is this motion of the lake that keeps its waters pure, preventing their stagnation, so this agitation that is going on in the social, political and religious worlds, is the essential condition of progress and development. Let no one doubt for a moment that out of all this unrest and agitation there will come at last a juster and freer government, a superior moral and social order, a purer and more united church and, therefore, a better world in which to live and help work out the great purposes of God. It is in this faith that prophets and reformers have lived and wrought, enduring persecutions sometimes even unto death, to sleep in unhonored graves. It was in this profound conviction that Jesus of Nazareth lived his heroic life and died his sacrificial death. From the cross on which he was uplifted he saw a new order arising on the moral chaos of the world, and the coming of a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness. What he saw is yet to be, and these moral convulsions and revolutions of our time are but the process through which his vision is to be realized.

The past week has been one of almost perfect weather. It has been an unusually busy one about "The Pioneer" cottage, with some improvements going on within and without, in addition to the regular routine of duties. The cottages along the shore are now mostly occupied by their owners and the clubhouse and hotels in the village and the boarding houses are showing visible signs of greater activity. Our little lake has been honored during the past few days with the presence of one of Uncle Sam's training ships, and the sailor boys, with their drill on the lake and their jolly good time on shore, have made things rather lively. August has the promise of being a full and busy month. A delegation of business men from Brother George A. Campbell's congregation in Chicago, visited Pentwater a few days ago and, we learn, have agreed to invest in a tract of land north of the pier, for the purpose of establishing a summer colony of Chicago refugees from the heat and bustle of that city. And so, with Chicago and St. Louis together, not to mention Kansas City and other important centers, turning their attention here, Pentwater is destined to become one of the popular Michigan resorts for the Disciples of Christ. We have had some interesting fishing experiences the past week between working hours, one of which—the escape of a four-pound black bass, after his third leap out of the water—reminds us of Mr. Cleveland's suggestion that there ought to be a code of harmless but expressive epithets adopted, by which fishermen could suitably express their feelings on such occasions without any indulgence in profanity or irreverence. We may as well say we had two witnesses to the size of the fish that made his escape, in the person of two nieces, Lora and Myrtle, the former of whom, in a few minutes afterward, captured a three-pound pickerel, which served to mollify our disappointment somewhat in the loss of the bass. But we forbear, as we only intended to hint that the great fish are here for the skilled angler, and if he does not get them it is his own fault.

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

Monday, March 5, 1906, it was my privilege to visit Ephesus in Asia Minor. A beggarly, Arab village; heaps of gray ruins; fields of grapes, almonds and figs; a distant mountain range with towering Olympus, snow-crowned, glistening in the sun; here and there peasants working in the fields, and a string of camels along the highway, the ships of the desert, not unlike a string of turkeys on their way to a Thanksgiving market; nests of jackdaws and storks on broken arches and columns, and the holes of foxes, where tens of thousands once cried: "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" where John preached and Mary ended her days; where Apollos, mighty in the Scriptures, proclaimed his message; where Paul preached Christ and him crucified, and that great scene recorded in Acts 19 took place; where the fourth Gospel was written, and to which came the sublime, the unrivalled, the divinest composition of man in the Epistle to the Ephesians—now an unintelligible heap of stones, some mud cottages, a lonely shepherd here and there among the hills, the glorious temple of Diana a mere hole in the ground, and not a single Christian where multitudes once shouted "Great is the Lord Jesus Christ!"

But how stately the ruins! How fascinating the story! I saw among other things the Cave of the "Seven Sleepers" Seven Ephesian youths of noble extraction, according to the legend, in the persecution of Decius, 249, concealed themselves in a cave, which was ordered sealed, fell asleep, and slept 187 years. Some of the stones being removed from the entrance, a ray of light admitted awoke them as from a night's sleep, and one entered the city to buy bread. The obsoleteness of his dress and antiquity of the coin he offered the baker no more startled the city than the aspect of the city confounded him, the facts became known, and the bishop and magistrates of the city visited the cavern, and after receiving their blessing, the sleepers expired immediately.

I don't know that I should have thought any more of the Seven Sleepers, had not a friend of mine told me a strange story. This friend said he was attending a church service, and observed a very old man with white hair and long, flowing white beard, whom he afterwards engaged in conversation. It was a Baptist church—my friend was a prominent Baptist—and announcement was made of certain union revival services and prayers were made for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the meetings. The old man said:

"I am a stranger, and would like for you to explain some things I do not understand. I noticed the presiding bishop reminded the brethren of a meeting in preparation for union evangelistic services. What are they?"

"Tell me first who you are, and I may answer more intelligently," said my friend.

"That is difficult, somewhat," answered the stranger. "I am a presbyter of the Church of Christ at Ephesus, in Asia Minor. In the time of persecution, under Trojan, I was compelled to flee, and escaped to the coast, intending to make my way to Arabia. Pursued by Roman soldiers, I crept into a cave near the shore for concealment. Wearied to exhaustion, and lulled by the murmur of the waves, I fell asleep. How long I slept I do not know, when I was suddenly awakened by terrible outcries outside the cave. Climbing up over the rocks to the place where the light entered, I crept to an opening in the cliff and saw on the beach a company of people in strange dress, pursued and slain by another company in garb equally strange to me. Some of the pursued wore the sign of the cross, while the pursuers had the sign of the crescent moon. They passed, and I crept out and took the garments of one of the slain, and as presently a boat came, and by the cross seeing those on board were Christians, I went with them. Their speech I could not understand, though well versed in Greek, Latin and Syriac. We rowed well out, perhaps twenty stadia, and came to a ship with neither sails nor oarbanks, and moved by some mysterious internal force so great as to make the frame quiver from stem to stern, and smoke as from burning pitch issued from two great cylinders of iron which stood on her deck. The ship bore for insignia instead of the eagles of Rome, a device with forty-five stars on a blue ground, and red and white stripes, I think, thirteen in number. As we sped away from the shore we passed many ships whose standards were marked by bars crossing each other at a common center, like the spokes of a wheel. They screamed harshly at each other by some means. I could not understand. After many, many miles travel over a strange sea, I finally reached this country. I studied the strange tongue spoken by your people, which has much Latin in it, and some Greek terms, until I understood, and being a Christian presbyter, and seeing evidences of Christianity, I entered your place of worship. I do not understand what is meant by union meetings. Is your church divided like the church in Corinthus, some saying 'I am of Paul, and others I am of Apollos, and still others I am of Cephas, and are these divisions fixed and permanent, and these meetings for the purpose of healing them?"

It dawned upon my friend at once that this must be one of the famous "Sleepers" who had slept on to the twentieth century. "No," he said, "we are not divided like the church in Corinth, since we are all followers of Christ and have been baptized in his name. Upon minor points our divisions are based."

"I do not know how on unimportant points you can be divided," said the elder. "Is not schism, a rending of the body of Christ, known among you as sin?"

"Certainly, but we are agreed on essentials. There is a spirit of rivalry and sometimes of antagonism among denominations, for example between Baptists and Pedobaptists in the matter of baptism."

"What, are there still Baptists in the land?" asked the Presbyter. "The last I heard of Baptists was the twelve whom Paul found in Ephesus many years ago, but he baptized them and they became Christians, and in Ephesus we have never heard of any since. Are there still disciples of the Baptist who have not yet found out that John told them to believe on him who was to come?"

"Baptists with us are those who claim they have the right baptism," said my friend.

"There can be but one baptism," said the elder, "as there is one Lord and one faith; and the true baptism must ever be in the name of Jesus the Christ. It is remarkable there should be any division about that."

"Our differences are not about the name, nature or purpose of baptism, but the form, which we say is not essential; in fact we do not regard any kind or form of baptism as essential," answered my friend.

"What! You surprise me. Why then was it ordained and established by the word and example of our Lord himself? I never heard of an unbaptized Christian in Ephesus. We Ephesians were baptized into Christ. We put on Christ by baptism. Every convert among us hastens to enroll himself under the standard of Christ, our great captain and leader, by giving the divinely prescribed sacramentum, and he is not considered wholly a Christian until this is done. I can not comprehend a Christianity where this is not the case, as the Christ commands: 'Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved,' or pardoned."

"But," said my friend, "the great confusion is with us over the form of baptism, immersion in water or sprinkling with water."

"Is not baptism an act appointed by our Lord?" asked the elder.

"Yes; but sprinkling and pouring have been introduced," said my friend.

"We in Ephesus dip, or bury the person in water, and raise him immediately from it. That is what our Lord appointed and the apostles practiced," said the old man.

"But in this case the minister takes a few drops of water and puts it on the head of the man, saying, 'I baptize thee,' and does not immerse him."

"Do not your ministers know the meaning of our Greek word 'baptize,' equivalent to the Latin 'immerse'?" asked the elder.

"They know, and admit our Lord was immersed in the Jordan River, and that the apostles practiced only immersion, but contend immersion is unsuitable and inconvenient, and therefore unnecessary," said my friend.

"But do they find other commands of our Lord inconvenient? In Ephesus we were accustomed to think our religion a matter of faith and obedience and not of convenience. Are not men afraid to say 'I baptize thee,' when not doing what our Lord indicated when he commanded them to baptize?"

"They are obliged to say 'I baptize,'" replied my friend, "else the people would not be content. The whole matter has caused so much controversy, is so delicate and difficult, prudent evangelists generally omit it in preaching."

"What!" exclaimed the aged saint, "is it possible you have preachers who do not preach the gospel as proclaimed by the apostles of our Lord! Who shun to declare the whole counsel of God!"

"Well, we avoid doubtful disputations," said my friend.

"You have much conceit of your own wisdom," answered the old man. "Why should an institution established through the mission of a prophet and confirmed by the word and example of Jesus be regarded as nonessential or belonging to the realm of doubtful disputations?

"But another thing. I attended worship in a church richly furnished, with beautiful glass windows and where men in robes or mantles like our Roman senators took an infant, very young and tender, and after certain ceremonies, one of the Presbyters sprinkled water on its face, repeating words which I could not hear for the wailing of the infant. Was the infant sick and was this a remedy?"

"That was a baptism," answered my friend. "The minister baptized the infant by sprinkling."

"Surely you are mistaken," said the stranger. "It could not have been a baptism, for the infant was of such tender age it could not believe, understand, nor even speak."

"But its sponsors or sureties stood for it."

"How can that be? In Ephesus we become Christians each for himself, of his own deliberate choice and act; and in his baptism a man pledges in the sight of heaven his faithful purpose of heart to continue in the way of the Lord, as it is written, 'Baptism doth also now save us, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the decision of a good conscience toward God.' How can others do for us what we are commanded to do for ourselves? I do not understand."

"Well, conditions in this country are different from those in Ephesus," said my friend. "We are more progressive."

"One more thing," said the stranger. "I observed you prayed for the Holy Spirit. I am sure your prayers will be answered, and when the Holy Spirit is with you the first thing he will do will be to set in order his own house. If any of you have departed from the faith and order of the apostles he will set you right."

"O you greatly mistake," said my friend. "We are not seeking the Holy Spirit for this purpose. We have settled all questions of order and orthodoxy. Each of the churches has its standard of doctrine and practice. We want the Holy Spirit to help us convert sinners. We won't tolerate any interference with our traditions and practices."

"Ah," said the Presbyter, "you want the Holy Spirit as your servant to whom you can assign tasks rather than as your instructor and guide. Well, I see I have no mission here. I will return to Ephesus." And he vanished.

I somehow wish my friend had asked more questions of this Rip van Winkle. We need to go back to original sources, to interview Paul and Peter and John, and above all, Jesus. As Paul cried "Caesarem apello!" we need to cry "Christum apello!" Here is the way of salvation for every man. Let us walk in this way, be obedient to this rule.

The Folly of the Mormon Priesthoods

By James W. Darby

If there is any one thing that shows Mormonism to be a false religion it is the priesthoods. No one can even hastily investigate their system of priesthoods without being forcibly impressed that it is out of harmony, not only with common sense, but with Bible truths.

They have two orders of priests: Aaronic and Melchisedec. They have quite a number of high priests. These officials are common both to the Utah Mormons and the reorganized Mormon Saints, and are a very important part of the system.

The Jewish institution had but one high priest at a time, but Mormonism has improved on God's plan and almost any faithful Mormon can become a high priest without being of the family of Aaron, and even without being of the tribe of Levi, and in fact it is not necessary to have any Jewish blood in his veins. These legal requirements under the Jewish law can be disregarded by the Mormons. Then, again, the fact that the Jewish law was fulfilled in Christ, and as such has no longer any force under the Christian dispensation, can be ignored by the Brighamites and Josephites with remarkable ease.

It is true that Christ is the high priest of the Christian dispensation, and he has made the atonement for all and has entered into the holy of holies for us. Jesus fills this office now, and while he fills it no other can. Under the Jewish dispensation there could be but one high priest at a time; exclusive incumbency was the unbending rule; so now Christ is high priest and there can be no other. The Mormon that assumes to be high priest is assuming the position that Christ holds. No Mormon can offer another or greater sacrifice, nor can he offer Christ's sacrifice over again. Can you tell what a Mormon will not claim?

The apostle Paul, in the Hebrew letter, discusses this subject fully (Ch. 2:16-18): "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren; that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." Again (Ch. 4, 14-16): "Seeing then we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession, for we have not an high priest which can not be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." Again (Ch. 10, 21): "And having an High Priest over the house of God." These and many other Scriptures show the folly of the Mormon claim, and that the assumption of this office is blasphemous.

But what right has any one to claim to be a priest after the order of Melchisedec? A sentence quoted several times in the Hebrew letter furnishes the key to unravel the mystery of this priesthood: "Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec." The emphasis is on the word "forever". Christ is here referred to, and he was not a Levitical or Aaronic priest; he came of a tribe of which nothing is said concerning the priesthood. As he could not claim his office under the law he claims by type. Melchisedec, who held a priesthood to which the word "forever" may be applied, was a type of Christ. Jesus became a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec, who, being without father, without mother, without genealogy, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually. The point in the type is our ignorance of Melchisedec. Whence came he? Of what lineage? When did he die? Yet he was a priest so great that Abraham paid him tithes. He had no predecessors in office, no one followed him; like a bright meteor he rushes from the darkness, shames the stars, and is seen no more. Christ has the qualifications for this priesthood, he continues in that office without change, and no one can fill it or succeed him. Here the Mormon usurps the place of our Savior. But what is it that a Mormon elder will not claim?

Another matter to be noted; during the time that the Aaronic priests served at the altar by the direction of the Mosaic law, we have nothing said of the Melchisedec priesthood, and so soon as Christ became a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec, the Aaronic priest had fulfilled his mission and ceased to exercise that function. These two priesthoods never existed together and never can. Perhaps I should take the last statement back, for Joe Smith and Oliver Cowdery were first made Aaronic priests and then later made priests after the order of Melchisedec. Joe did not hesitate to assume the Savior's station. What is it that Mormonism does not assume? The study and understanding of the priesthoods as revealed in the Bible, compared with the claims and practice of the priesthoods of the Brighamites and Josephites, forever condemns Mormonism as pretension and delusion.

Disciples who have the question of the Mormon claims to meet so frequently will do well to awaken on this point.

How to Have a Working Church—III

By George L. Bush

(Concluded from last week.)

Then every preacher in our ranks should be training one or more young men for the ministry, all the time. One of our Texas pastors "proposes to find work near by for three or four young men, who would like some instruction in the Bible. He proposes to give them the same course that is given in the Bible colleges, and find practical work for them." This would enable the minister to open up missions in the town and country, and these young men would more than repay his toil by their assistance in his work. Such work would not be in competition with our schools, but would meet the needs of those unable to take a college course.

All church machinery should possess elasticity, and be adjustable to the needs of the given congregation. Mere forms should not be allowed to become fixed, or methods grow monotonous, until the "customs come to be regarded with the reverence due only to ordinances." It is confidently believed that the use of the best modern methods in a tactful way will arouse the average church to a good degree of activity. No system however good will work itself; it must be followed energetically and persistently, if one would win success.

4. The training of the children. One of the quickest and surest cures for ministerial pessimism is a visit to one of our modern, model Bible Schools. Looking into the bright, interested faces of this latest and revised edition of humanity, one cannot but exclaim, "Man, what a chance!" Here is the field of limitless possibilities and assured results. This field offers the greatest opportunity to the present day church, and the pastor who has not discovered this fact must be fast asleep. It would be hard to name a single great and growing church whose minister is not an enthusiastic Bible School man. The secret of the phenomenal growth of a score of our greatest churches in the middle states is found in the emphasis they have placed upon this teaching service. When you see how much emphasis any given congregation puts upon this service, you can easily prophesy its future as a losing or winning church. Good church leaders and workers must be trained. The time to begin this training is in youth; when the digestion is good and the liver normal; before they have been tampered with by the devil or spoiled by modern fads; when their hands are clean, their minds clear, their hearts pure, and their lives impressionable. It has been estimated that about 95 per cent of our preachers, 95 per cent of our church workers, 85 per cent of our converts, and 75 per cent of our new congregations come from the Bible School! It is a rich and inexhaustible mine from which to draw workers for every department; a veritable sycamore tree from which converts drop as readily as did Zacchaeus of old, into the gospel net. This organization might well be called the pastor's garden of delights. It has also been estimated that the average preacher gives but 10 per cent of his time to this part of his work. Is this wise generalship? Is it placing the emphasis where it rightfully belongs? Our Master in directing Peter concerning his duties as a minister gave first place to this work when He said, "Feed my lambs." He then said, "Tend my sheep," It was only needful to feed the lambs, but the sheep required tending as well as feeding. It is the tending that worries and tires the modern shepherd, ere he rounds in some sheep for their feed. If the lambs of to-day are properly fed, the sheep of to-morrow will be more easily tended.

Our brethren of the Catholic church have been wiser than we in the past, but Protestants are happily awakening to a needed realization of their duties and possibilities here. Men no longer blush when spoken of as "good children's preachers" and are not sensitive over having their churches crowded with those who used to fill their Savior's arms.

If all the methods known to ministerial ingenuity fail to arouse a congregation, let the pastor turn to the Bible school; here is an opportunity to develop just the church he wants in a few years. Every minister who wishes to have a working church, should first, build up a great Bible School; second, build up a greater Bible School; third, build up a still greater Bible School!

5. Longer pastorates. This extreme restlessness upon the part of both churches and preachers is one of the chief hindrances to the development of working churches. About the time the preacher becomes well acquainted and his life has come to be a force for righteousness in the community he generally resigns. He may be to blame, the church may be at fault, or both may deserve censure. If the minister be a misfit he should resign and that speedily. If conditions are such that he cannot, in good conscience, endure them, and finds himself unable to improve them, he must needs retire. But when his work is prospering and his people love him, he should be slow to leave them. It requires years of wisely directed and faithfully followed leadership to build up a great church. This constant changing of leaders, with consequent revolution in methods, retards progress and causes the church to just about hold its own from year to year. It reminds some of us of our experience in the old district school, where every fall the new teacher had begun with "fractions" and every spring we closed with "single rule of three." We knew the road so well that we lost interest as soon as we "sized up" the new teacher. It is not surprising that many members lose their enthusiasm in the face of a never ending procession of pastors and grow tired of the regular round of beginning back and going over again. The members hardly dare to love much him whom they will be apt to soon lose. The citizens think it not worth while to cultivate the acquaintance of men and families so transient. It is surely high time for many of our preachers to settle down for life as many do in other religious bodies. This would give stability to the work. The minister would become a citizen and possess a home. He could form strong friendships and exert a saving influence in the town or city. He would come to know and love his people. This would give him greater compassion and larger charity. Upon this point Maclaren says, "One's heart goes back from this eager, restless, ambitious age to the former days, and recalls * * * the pastor who lived all his life in one place, and was buried where he was ordained—who knew all the ins and outs of his people's character, and carried family history for generations in his head—who

MEAT OR CEREALS

A Question of Interest to All Careful Persons.

Arguments on food are interesting. Many persons adopt a vegetarian diet on the ground that they do not like to feel that life has been taken to feed them, nor do they fancy the thought of eating dead meat.

On the other hand, too great consumption of partly cooked, starchy oats and wheat or white bread, pastry, etc., produces serious bowel troubles, because the bowel digestive organs, (where starch is digested), are overtaxed and the food ferments, producing gas, and microbes generate in the decayed food, frequently bringing on peritonitis and appendicitis.

Starchy food is absolutely essential to the human body. Its best form is shown in the food "Grape-Nuts," where the starch is changed into a form of sugar during the process of its manufacture. In this way, the required food is presented to the system in a pre-digested form and is immediately made into blood and tissue, without taxing the digestive organs.

A remarkable result in nourishment is obtained; the person using Grape-Nuts gains quickly in physical and mental strength. Why in mental? Because the food contains delicate particles of Phosphate of Potash obtained from the grains, and this unites with the albumen of all food and the combination is what nature uses to rebuild worn out cells in the brain. This is a scientific fact that can be easily proven by ten days' use of Grape-Nuts. "There's a Reason." Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

was ever thinking of his people, watching over them, visiting their homes, till his familiar figure on the street linked together the past and present, and heaven and earth, and opened a treasure-house of sacred memories * * * People turned to him in the crises of life, and as they lay a-dying committed their wives and children to his care. He was a head to every widow, and a father to the orphans, and a friend of all lowly, discouraged, unsuccessful souls. Ten miles away people did not know his name, but his own congregation regarded no other, and in the Lord's presence it was well known, it was often mentioned; when he laid down his trust, and arrived at the other side many whom he had guided, and fed, and restored, and comforted, till he saw them through the gates, were waiting to receive their shepherd minister, and as they stood around him before the Lord, he, of all men, could say without shame, 'Behold, Lord, thine undershepherd, and the flock Thou didst give me.'

Union in Western Canada By Alexander McMillan

The Christian-Evangelist has given considerable attention of late to the movement toward union of Baptists and Disciples of Christ in Western Canada, and it may be of interest to its readers to know that we are now preparing to inaugurate a system of co-operation which will be interesting as an experiment, whether it leads to anything more interesting or not. As has, I think, already been noted in The Christian-Evangelist, this movement began in the contact on the field of our missionary superintendent, J. A. L. Romig, with the Baptist missionary superintendent, W. T. Stackhouse. These two brethren found that many of the brethren on both sides throughout the country objected to overlapping; that the two churches in Swan River, Man., were already endeavoring to avoid this by worshiping together, though maintaining their separate organizations, and that the people not only stood much nearer together doctrinally than either party supposed, but were strongly inclined to disregard the theories on which they differed. Before either body could meet in convention two other churches at Vermillion, Alta., formed a working union, and openings were made in two Baptist churches (Okotoko and Wetaskiwin, Alta.,) for meetings by our evangelist. He was told that the Baptists desired him to preach in these meetings just as he would in one of our own pulpits. This he did, and both Baptists and Disciples accepted his teaching freely. Next came the union at Kenora which was accomplished under the labors of J. A. Lord, editor of the "Christian Standard," and of which notice has already been made in our papers.

Meantime the two missionary boards had appointed a joint committee and this committee, after several most fraternal meetings prepared resolutions for presentation to both conventions. When the Baptist convention met at Edmonton, Alta., the last week in June, we were represented by J. A. L. Romig, and W. J. Wright, secretary of the A. C. M. S. There was a splendid discussion of the whole matter. There was some opposition at first but it was very much in the minority, and finally vanished in the vote on the committee's report which was carried unanimously. I hope we will have an article on this discussion from either Brother Wright or Brother Romig. I quote the report, as adopted by the Baptist convention, from the "Northwest Baptist":

Report on Co-operation Between the Baptists and Disciples.

Presented by Rev. D. B. Harkness.

During the year, your board have been led to take up negotiations with the Disciple body in this country looking toward co-operation in mission work. As a result of conversations and correspondence between members of the Disciple body and members of our own board, committees were appointed to confer in regard to this matter. The joint committee met April 23, 1907, in Winnipeg, in which the Baptists were represented by Rev. D. B. Harkness, Rev. W. T. Stackhouse, Dr. W. A. McIntyre and Rev. J. B. Warnicker and the Disciples by Rev. J. A. L. Romig, Rev. Alex. McMillan, Rev. P. H. Green and Rev. M. P. Hayden.

The results of their conference are embodied in the following recommendations:

"That whereas the Baptists and Disciples in matters of faith and practice are in such close accord;

"And whereas there are movements in many parts of Canada and the United States looking toward closer fellowship;

"And whereas it seems inimical to the best interests of our mutual work in new communities of this country that distinct causes should be established;

"Therefore, your committee recommend such co-operation as is consistent with our relations with the representative organizations of our different bodies of Eastern Canada and the United States; and with these relationships in mind, we recommend as a tentative arrangement (1) That wherever in a given community or adjacent communities a Baptist church and a Church of Christ find co-operation under one pastor possible, that in each such case co-operation be encouraged by the missionary boards of both bodies; (2) That whereever in a given community or adjacent communities there are a number of Baptists and a number of Disciples who shall agree upon co-operation, they shall be encouraged in such an arrangement and to apply to the missionary boards of the two bodies for such assistance as may be necessary; (3) That with the purpose of making effective some such basis of co-operation, this matter be given prominence on the programs of the conventions, and in the press of both bodies; (4) That fraternal delegates be appointed by each body to attend the conventions of the other body, and confer with them on the questions relating to closer co-operation and fellowship."

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Baptist Mission Board, held in Winnipeg on April 26, the findings of the joint committee were presented by Mr. W. A. McIntyre, and unanimously adopted subject to the approval of convention.

This report, after considerable discussion, was adopted unanimously by the convention and subject to its adoption by the Disciple body, the executive board were instructed to carry out the agreement thus endorsed in clauses marked (1) and (2) in the report.

On July 2 our convention met in this city, and during its sessions devoted a great deal of time to this subject. Baptist delegates were present, the pastor of the Union church in Kenora sitting as a delegate. After a long and thorough discussion the report of the joint committee as above quoted was adopted unanimously, thus receiving the sanction of both conventions.

As to the future. The two boards are now arranging to have our evangelists hold union meetings, many of them in Baptist churches. Although the boards have not yet had their joint meeting, it is understood that this will be done and that the churches so served may report to both missionary societies. It is simply a matter of the Baptists supplying the

TAKE A RECORD

See How Many Friends Are Hurt by Coffee.

It would be just as reasonable for a temperance advocate to drink a little diluted whisky as to drink coffee, for one is as truly an intoxicant as the other, and persistence in the use of coffee brings on a variety of chronic diseases, notorious among which are dyspepsia, heart palpitation (ultimately heart failure), frequently constipation, kidney troubles, many cases of weak eyes and trembling condition of the nerves.

These are only a few of the great variety of diseases which come from an unbalanced nervous system, caused by the persistent daily use of the drug, caffeine, which is the active principle of coffee. Another bit of prima facie evidence about coffee is that the victims to the habit find great difficulty in giving it up.

They will solemnly pledge to themselves day after day that they will abandon the use of it when they know that it is shortening their days, but morning after morning they fail, until they grow to despise themselves for their lack of self control.

Any one interested in this subject would be greatly surprised to make a systematic inquiry among prominent brain workers. There are hundreds of thousands of our most prominent people who have abandoned coffee altogether and are using Postum Food Coffee in its place, and for the most excellent reasons in the world. Many of them testify that ill health, nervous prostration, and consequent inability to work, has in times past, pushed them back and out of their proper standing in life, which they have been able to regain by the use of good health, strong nerves, and great vitality, since coffee has been thrown out and Postum put in its place. "There's a Reason." Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs., it has been called "a health classic," by some physicians.

The State of the Cause in Missouri

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE AT THE MISSOURI CONVENTION.

Once more we are permitted in God's providence to meet together in annual convention, as representatives of churches whose avowed aim is to restore to the world a purer type of Christianity, in its faith, ordinances and life, than that which had been exhibited hitherto in any organized form, either among Roman Catholics or Protestants. It was the high and worthy aim of the religious movement whose representatives are here gathered in annual convocation, to come into a closer and more vital fellowship with Jesus Christ—with his teaching, with his life, and with his great purposes—to the end that we might be united with each other and promote the unity of all his followers in order to the conversion of the world. It was not to formulate and enforce a new and more correct doctrinal creed, and to build on such doctrinal formulation a new sect or denomination having its metes and bounds defined by such theological statements, but rather to return to the personal Christ, "who was, and is, and is to come"—the Alpha and Omega of our Christian faith—and to reincarnate, in some worthy measure, in our individual and church life, that Divine Life that was manifest in him, and so to carry forward his work in the world.

It is in the light of this lofty aim—the real reason for our existence—that we must judge ourselves when we come to inquire concerning the state of the Cause. Every man's life, every institution among men, every religious movement, must be judged and estimated in the light of what it was intended to be and to accomplish. In the light of such considerations as these, your committee comes, chastened and humbled thereby, to give its report on the State of the Cause in Missouri.

The earliest advocates of the Reformation which we plead came into Missouri from Kentucky about the time of, or a little before, the admission of the state into the Union, in 1821. A few of our oldest churches antedate that event by a few years. Our cause has, therefore, had an existence in the state for about four score and ten years, or almost the entire lifetime of the Reformation itself. Its earliest advocates were men of dignity of character, of strong native ability, of untiring zeal, who loved the principles they advocated more than ease or reputation, material gains, or even life itself; and we are indebted to their unremunerated toils and heroic sacrifices for the foundations which they laid. Since their day there has been a noble succession of heroic men and women who have carried forward the work in our state until we have become a people great in numbers, in wealth, and in social position and power. A liberal share of the best citizens of the state are in our churches, and are allied to a greater or less degree with the enterprises of our brotherhood in the state. We are, therefore, not lacking in those elements of power which make it possible for us to be a great religious factor in molding the characters of the people of the state, and in purifying and exalting the moral and political life of our great commonwealth. Our responsibility is commensurate with our strength and our opportunities.

In a survey of those things for which we have reason to be grateful, your committee would mention the following:

1. Our rapid numerical increase in the state is one of the marvels in modern religious history. The readiness of the people to respond to the gospel, as presented by our pastors and evangelists, is at once a token of divine favor and a call to greater sacrifices than we are making to carry this gospel into every nook and corner of this state, and especially to put forth more vigorous efforts for the evangelization of the great cities in the state.

2. We congratulate the brotherhood of the state on its growing unity, not only among our own churches and ministers, but with other Christians who "follow not with us," but in whom we are recognizing, more and more, our allies in a common cause, rather than foes. In this growing sense of oneness and brotherliness among ourselves, and in this feeling of fraternity toward all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, we are witnessing the triumph of the very principles for which we stand. Co-operation with other followers of Christ, as far as in us lies, should be, and we believe is, to a great extent, the aim of all our churches and ministers in the state.

3. We believe there is a growing sense of obligation, on the part of our churches and preachers, to observe the set days for special offerings to our missionary, educational and benevolent enterprises. This could not be otherwise if there is any growth of our people in scriptural knowledge, in faith, and in spiritual power. Such growth is bound to register itself in increased offerings to all our worthy enterprises.

4. We congratulate our good women of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions on the growth of their work in the state, and especially in the interest which is being developed in their efforts to suitably commemorate our Centennial anniversary. Their work is telling in their own spiritual development, in the cultivation of the missionary spirit in our churches and among the children, and in the light and help which they are sending to destitute portions of our own land and to pagan lands. Their work and our work is one, as we are one, and we rejoice in the prosperity which God has granted them.

5. The revival of interest in Bible school work throughout the country, in which our churches in Missouri are sharing, is cause for devout thanksgiving. The effort to enlist the entire membership of our churches in systematic Bible study in our Bible schools, and to gather in the untaught children of the neighborhood, as well as those of our own families, into these schools, is entitled to our heartiest sympathy and co-operation, and has in it the promise of larger and better things for our churches in the years to come.

6. In this day of clerical scandals because of lapses in faith or in morals, your committee is gratified to report that no instance of this kind among our ministers in the state has come to their knowledge. While recording our gratitude for this fact, we feel like urging upon our ministers, old and young, the supreme importance of living lives that are above reproach, and making their daily conduct and conversation reinforce their sermons on the Lord's day. Their purity of life and personal piety will do more to commend the cause they represent to those without than all their sermons.

Your committee, in turning to the other side of the picture, regrets exceedingly that there is such a side, but they feel that the picture would be untrue to life if it did not contain some of the darker shades which we are compelled to add to it. The character of a religious body, like that of an individual, is to be judged, not only by the evil things which it does not do, but by the good deeds which it leaves undone. In considering the list of things which we have not done, but which ought to be done, and which must be done if the brotherhood in this state is to exemplify the principles for which we stand, and be worthy descendants and successors of the noble pioneers who went before us and prepared the way, your committee would mention the following:

1. We have not yet attained to the spirit of liberality and sacrifice worthy of the disciples of him who, "though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor that we through his poverty might become rich." It is to be feared that only a few are giving systematically and are keeping books with the Lord. If the brotherhood of Missouri or any very large proportion of them, were making one-tenth of their income the minimum amount of their giving to the Lord's work, no worthy enterprise among us would languish for lack of financial support. Many of us have yet to learn the superior blessedness of giving over receiving, and to experience the joy of Christly sacrifices for Christ's cause. This condition of things is evidenced by the comparatively small number of churches that participate in the various offerings, and the small gifts made by a majority of those which do participate. Our offerings for general home and for foreign missions are yet far below what they ought to be, while our work in the state is continually hampered for lack of funds to support evangelists and pastors. In this situation it is worth while to raise the question as to whether our ministers in the state are doing their duty in laying upon the hearts and consciences of the churches the duty and privilege of giving, and the importance of giving systematically and conscientiously. No more impressive object-lesson could be given to the world to show that we are in earnest in our efforts to restore New Testament Christianity, than the restoration of that spirit of liberality which led the disciples at Jerusalem to bring their all and lay it at the feet of the apostles to be used in Christ's name and in his service.

2. Nor do we seem to have risen to any just appreciation of the crisis which confronts our cause in Missouri, as relates to the insufficient supply of ministers. Let us face a few of the facts: (1) Of our 1,700 churches in Missouri, only 160 have settled pastors or ministers giving full time to one church. Even this is a gain of 35 during the past year. But how slow is the gain compared with the needs! Only 200 of the remainder have preaching even half time, and the remainder once a month, or none. (2) To serve these 1,700 churches we have only 625 ministers giving their whole time to the work. Those giving part time to the ministry, together with those who are absorbed in business and the superannuated, make a total of 753. (3) In view of these facts, is it any wonder that only about 200 of our 1,700 churches observe all the regular offerings, while less than half of them observe even one of the offerings for missionary purposes? In answer to the question, "What, in your judgment, is the supreme need in our co-operative missionary work in the state?" our corresponding secretary answers: "A ministry thoroughly converted, enthusiastic in the cause of missions, and anxious to join hands with the organized forces in pushing the work in hand." It is not for us to join issue with our Corresponding Secretary in his diagnosis of the situation, but, if he is correct, then the work of converting our ministry in Missouri would seem to be the great pressing need of the hour! When we remember, however, that, as a rule, the churches which have regular ministers are those which take regular offerings, and that less than one-tenth of our churches in the state have settled ministers devoting their whole time to the work, the appalling need would seem to be a larger supply of educated and consecrated ministers of the Word. How it is possible for our churches, and particularly our men of wealth, to look these facts in the face, with all their vast significance, and not do more to strengthen the colleges in the state, to which we are looking for the greater part of our ministers, is a question your committee can not undertake to answer. Enough for us to state the two great facts standing over against each other: On the one hand a thousand vacant, voiceless pulpits, every Lord's day, among our Missouri churches, because there is no one to preach the gospel therein. On the other hand, the two institutions in the state, which are educating young men for the ministry are handicapped for lack of endowment and equipment, though owned and controlled by a brotherhood abundantly able to endow and equip them, and to fill their halls with young men eager to preach the gospel of the grace of God. These facts speak more eloquently than any poor words of ours.

3. Our state work, that is, the work carried on under the direction and fostering care of the Missouri Christian Missionary Society, the comprehensive purpose of which is the bettering of these conditions, is making but slow and painful progress. If we are to take the number of churches in the state contributing regularly to the cause of

—W. H. Trainum, who has been in Garrett Biblical Institute and Northwestern University for the past two years, has taken the B. D. degree from the former and the A. M. from the latter. He writes us that The Christian-Evangelist has been on trial in his study for ten years and has stood the test so well that he will, D. V., let it come another ten.

—Brother Child writes us that there was an error in the statement we made announcing his story. We said that he had read it to the young people of his church and that they had pronounced it the best story they had ever heard. He explains that he did not read it to the entire body of young people, but principally to his own children. He does not wish any misunderstanding on this point, and we gladly state that it was our own mistake.

—The First Christian Church, of Rialto, Cal., has just been dedicated, but we have not as yet received particulars other than that C. C. Chapman, president of the Southern California Christian Missionary Society was to deliver the address. We understand that it is one of the most complete and beautiful churches in Southern California and the work of a faithful band organized less than two years ago. Oscar Sweeney is the minister.

—The church at Blocktown, Ia., has just had the pleasure of burning notes and bills of indebtedness which amounted in all to over $1,000. It is now entirely free from incumbrance and the way is open for great work in the future. W. E. Pitcher, who has been ministering to them, will leave for Washington about September 1. The church is ready to open correspondence with some good man to succeed him. During the past year over $2,000 was raised for all purposes.

—Charles Bloom will close three years of service at Rantoul, Ill., on September 1, and will at once enter upon his new work at Newman. During his present pastorate there have been 160 additions to the church and 35 away from home. A $2,400 parsonage has been erected and the church is now being remodeled at a cost of some $7,000. The church is fully organized and contributes cheerfully to all missionary and benevolent enterprises. The new pastor will find a fruitful field and a good people.

—We recently published a report of the excellent meeting held by A. L. Crim and V. E. Ridenour for our church at Shreveport, La., from the pastor of the church there, Claude L. Jones. Brother Jones says that it is just to state that 100 additions in conservative and priest-ridden Louisiana and in a city like Shreveport, where nearly one-half the population are negroes, is equal to double that number in the Central States, where environments are different. Brother Jones speaks in the highest terms of the evangelists.

—It was a source of great regret to P. C. Macfarlane that he could not be with his congregation at the time the church at Alameda, Cal., was first opened. A description of this church has in part already appeared in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The ceiling and other fittings of the auditorium carry out in detail the general plan of the beamed ceiling finish. Even the chandeliers are formed of cross trees from which hang the suspended bell globes. The organ matches the other interior fittings. There is a very successful Good Fellows' Club among the members of this church and they are to have fine quarters when the building is completely finished. In the basement there will be a gymnasium, a handball court, clubrooms and other attractions.

GOT COMFORT

Soak the feet on retiring in a strong, hot, creamy lather of Cuticura Soap. Dry, and anoint freely with Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure. Bandage lightly in old, soft cotton or linen. For itching, burning, and scaly eczemas, inflammations and chafings of the feet or hands, for redness, roughness, cracks, and fissures, with brittle, shapeless nails, and for tired, aching muscles and joints, this treatment works wonders.

—The brethren at Newport, Ark., have in hand over $2,000 and can raise about $1,500 more possibly for their new church, which they think must cost $5,000 without the furniture. Brother Carr is superintending the work, and is thus a church-builder in a double sense. M. W. Burkett sends us these particulars and indicates that the brethren would appreciate any outside help in establishing thoroughly the cause at this place.

—J. N. Crutcher has resigned his pastorate at Chillicothe, Mo., to take charge of the church at Higginsville. He is preaching at the latter point each Sunday in July, though living in Chillicothe. August he will take for a vacation. During his recent pastorate the church has had a total addition of more than 250 members. The congregation to which he goes is one of the best in the state, having a $20,000 church building finished last year. Its former pastor, J. H. Coil, resigned on account of poor health and is now in California.

—C. A. Lowe, secretary of the Seventh District of Missouri, writes us that the convention which was to have been held at Chillicothe, July 22, was called off for special reasons, and arrangements have been made for a District Preachers' Meeting to be held at Camden Point, August 26-30, instead. The entertainment will be by the college, and owing to the limited capacity of the building, it will be necessary to confine the attendance mostly to preachers, of whom there are about ninety in the district. Board and lodging will be $1.00 per day.

—George Lobingier writes of H. H. Harmon, pastor of the First Church, Lincoln, Neb., in the following strain: "He has a large place in the hearts of his people. He is very considerate and kind. His audiences are good and on Sunday nights, the best for years. Last Lord's day (July 7) he spoke of the 'Desert Journey.' It was a big sermon in three points: First, it was only about twenty minutes in length; second, it followed the Bible school lesson, and yet gleaned scarcely anything from the notes thereof; third, it was packed brimful of practical facts and inspiring and edifying thoughts."

—Hugh McClellan, who is now in charge of the church at McKinney, Texas, formerly served by George L. Bush, whose excellent series of articles on "How to Have a Working Church" we conclude in this number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, writes us in the following strain: "Brother Bush is an indefatigable worker. While a resident of this place he also planted the cause at Princeton, a near-by town and assisted them in erecting a house of worship also, which he properly dedicated. One of the most valuable contributions ever made by the state of Missouri to Texas was and is George L. Bush. Long may he live to work in the vineyard of the Lord."

—"The Syracuse pastor who suggested a soda fountain in church to attract the congregation during the heated term should have added that ginger was needed too." Such is an editorial squib in one of the daily papers of Syracuse, and refers to a proposition by J. A. Serena pastor of the Christian Church in that town, to serve ice water during his Sunday services in the summer time so that the people would not have to leave their seats to get it. The statement was first of all made lightly, but on reflection, it was decided to pursue this course. The pastor asked why people could not be comfortable in church as well as in theaters, or even at home. He wants to get the people in the church and then get them interested.

—Ernest J. Bradley has closed a very successful year's work at Hillsboro, and is now located at Lampasas, Texas, where the prospects are bright for a successful work. During last year there were 94 additions to the Hillsboro church, with a net gain to the membership of 73. Two large meetings were, in addition, held under the direction of the church, one at Frost with 18 additions and another at Ferris with 13 additions. The latter has raised money to employ a minister for half time. The attendance at Bible school was increased about 50 per cent and an Endeavor society organized. All regular offerings were observed at Hillsboro and the total amount raised for all purposes was approximately $3,000.

—We have received a catalog of Christian College, Columbia, Mo. It is one of the most artistic that even this college has ever sent out. It will be mailed free to any one who is interested in sending a girl or young lady to a high grade college. Accompanying this will be sent a little pamphlet, the title of which is, "Have You a Daughter to Educate?" It shows how necessary it is for the parents to make a careful choice of the school to which they entrust their daughters. Christian College needs no commendation for it is the oldest school for women in the West and has always borne a most excellent reputation. It has just taken an advance step by which its course of study is raised to a level with that of any of the Eastern women's colleges.

—J. N. Scholes has accepted a call to the Central Church of Christ, Newark, O., and will enter upon his work there September 1. He will continue to pastor the flock of the Wayne Street Church, Lima, O., until August 25. Any minister wishing to know about this work may write to E. E. Dorsey. During Brother Scholes' three years of ministry

Statistical Record

In order to secure greater accuracy in our statistical reports we have prepared a State Secretary's Record that will greatly facilitate the work of our State Missions' offices, secure uniformity in reports and an accuracy that will give reliability to published reports of growth, financial, numerical, in the matter of buildings, missions, attendance, Bible schools, etc.

No executive committee can see these without appreciating their value. Substantially bound and will last for years. Price, $3.00. Large size $5.00.

in Lima there has been a steady growth toward a new church building. The best site in the city has been acquired, large enough for both parsonage and church building, and $1,000 each year has been raised apart from missionary offerings and running expenses. Altogether there has been a financial gain of nearly $7,000 and there has been a permanent growth in the church membership as well as its general efficiency.

—The General Superintendent of the Christian Publishing Company and the Assistant Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST stole away on Friday night from their office duties and on Saturday morning were greeted by brethren at Kennett, Mo., who had laid plans to show us how to fish. It was a delightful picnic that Dr. Rigdon had been instrumental in preparing for us, and we were introduced to some of the finest fishing grounds in this country and to the native method of spooning for bass. There were good cooks in the party, and it was a day of pleasure and renewing of physical strength. On the Lord's day we worshiped with the Kennett congregation, Brother Snively preaching two excellent sermons. The church is at present without a minister, and has been weakened by the removal of several of the men of means and Christian activity to other fields. Dr. Rigdon, a busy practitioner, and his family, are sacrificing much of their time and means in the endeavor to keep the Bible school and other church work active. Dr. Egbert, L. A. Johnson and others are standing by the leadership of Dr. Rigdon, and we hope that, if it be not possible to secure a good man for all his time at this point, some arrangement may be made for a division of time. We shall certainly want to return to this hospitable "swamp-eater's" country. They are a good people and they have good fish.

—The editor of the "Pacific Christian" has been on a tour of the churches in the interest of his paper. As one evidence of the popularity of Peter Colvin, pastor of the church at Santa Rosa, he says during Brother Colvin's eight years' residence there he has married more than 300 couples and officiated at more than 400 funerals. Brother Berry heard a great sermon from Brother Brewster at Healdsburg. He pronounces him a "regular whirlwind," and says he can quote more poetry, and quote it more effectively, than any man he calls to mind. The work at Healdsburg has made great progress under his ministry. Otho Wilkinson took him around in his automobile. Brother Berry was so well satisfied that he made up his mind to recommend to our preachers to "get a real 'move on' by the purchase of an automobile."

—A special interest attaches just now to our work in the Virginias and the neighborhood where our convention this year is to be held, and the great centennial gathering in 1908. Every evidence of progress in this part of the East will be watched with interest. An eventful period in the history of the church in the city of Clarksburg, W. Va., was the laying of a corner stone on June 27. This church was organized in December, 1905, Brother Linkletter and W. M. Long, the present minister, holding a protracted meeting in the courthouse. Clarksburg is a city of 15,000 people and the congregation has secured the best church lot in the city at a cost of $10,000. The building which they are erecting will cost $20,000. Brother Long, who is the first and only minister, deserves great credit for the growth and prosperity of the work. During the past year the congregation has increased about 125 per cent. Wallace Tharp assisted in the dedication, making an address that was received with great favor, the subject being, "Our Plea."

That $300,000 in Sight.

For the past two years our people have been planning to reach $300,000 for foreign missions. The prospects of success now seem brighter than at any time in the past.

Here is the record for the first nine and a half months of the missionary year, that is from October 1, 1906, to July 15, 1907. The receipts amounted to $210,813, a gain of $19,336. The churches, as churches, have given $94,572, a gain of $10,775. The Sunday-schools have given $61,021, a gain of $8,888. These are the largest gains from these two sources for the corresponding time in the history of the work. There has also been a gain of 265 contributing churches and of 93 contributing Sunday-schools. There has been a small loss in personal receipts and in bequests.

If we reach $300,000 we must receive $89,187 from July 15 to September 30, or the two and a half months of the year yet remaining. This involves a gain of $11,906 in the next two and a half months. If we do not succeed, we are without excuse.

The success of the workers in the regions beyond cheer all Christian hearts. We are called upon to plant a new station in the Congo, Africa. The Bolengi success beckons us on to greater and more daring tasks. A new station must be planted in India. Every report from China challenges our faith and liberality. Marvels of grace are being wrought in the Philippines. The call from Japan is loud and insistent. The whole horizon is bright. The good hand of the Lord is seen in every quarter. Some eight or ten new missionaries sail for their respective fields September 24.

Notice to Iowa Bible Schools.

The state convention at Iowa City went on record as favoring a union of the Iowa Bible School Association and the Iowa Christian Convention. The plan for bringing it about, however, was left to the two boards. In April, 1907, a committee consisting of D. R. Dungan and H. D. Williams, of the Iowa Bible School Association, and J. Mad. Williams, J. J. Grove and S. H. Zendt, of the Iowa Christian Convention, was appointed to prepare and submit to the convention such a plan as, in their judgment, would best serve the Bible school and church missionary interests in Iowa. The committee recommended that the Iowa Bible School Association cease to exist and that the Iowa Bible school interests be managed by the board of directors of the Iowa Christian Convention, and that the said board employ a suitable man to have charge of our young people's work, both Bible school and Christian Endeavor. The report was unanimously adopted.

The Iowa Christian Convention accepts this responsibility, fully realizing that the Bible schools constitute one of the greatest factors in the church work. Furthermore, we accept it with the desire and determination to push these great interests to the limit of our ability. To this end two important committees have been appointed. First, the committee on policy or plans for Bible school work, consisting of W. T. Fisher, S. H. Zendt and G. B. VanArsdall; second, a committee to look for a suitable man, consisting of D. R. Dungan, S. H. Zendt and J. Mad. Williams. The Bible schools of the state are requested to send all money to the undersigned as corresponding secretary.

By order of the State Board of the Iowa Christian Convention.

The convention at Sedalia is a thing gone by. We must acknowledge with sorrow that none of our aims were quite realized. The money could have been reported with several hundred dollars to spare had a few auxiliaries not been just a little late. They did not think it would cost the state so much as failure to reach the aim in dollars.

Our aims for this year are 5,500 women, 3,200 Tidings and $20,000 before June 1, 1908. We can do this if we will. Let us go to work at once. Auxiliaries that did not pledge for Missouri special work at Sedalia will receive their apportionments for it late in August, so begin at once to plan for getting it, systematically and from the many. Then the Centennial must be pushed to the front. Organize your work.

The seventh district convention, advertised for Chillicothe, has been called off. As there were no invitations from places large enough to entertain, the district officers (brethren) have decided not to invite the C. W. B. M. to meet with them. Brother Chilton, the district president, regrets this very much, but this seems best to him. These annual rallies are and will be of much benefit to our work as a whole, and we must still be true to them and to it. Can not we hold our convention as usual? Let the good women of this district send in suggestions as to time and place for this year. We can have a good one; let us do so. Who will entertain it? Who will promise to attend? Who will suggest new and better methods of conducting it? Write Miss Mary Hord your ideas and plans and she will be grateful.

William J. Lockhart's Good Work.

Brother Lockhart has just closed a three and one-half week's meeting at Bethany, Mo., which winds up an evangelistic year during which, in seven meetings held by him, there were more than 1,000 additions to the churches. He is now at his home at Des Moines for a rest. He will begin the first Sunday in September, with T. S. Tinsley, at the Clifton Church, Louisville, Ky. Thence he goes to assist H. C. Holmes at Fairbury, Neb. Following this he will hold a meeting at Centerville, Iowa, where Sherman Hill is pastor. We hear nothing but good from Brother Lockhart's work. He is preparing himself daily to be more effective and to do a really high grade of evangelistic service.

"Union Christians."

Our work at Scott City, Kansas, is starting off nicely. Our town is growing and our church is keeping pace, for we have frequent additions. The preacher and his family are living in the new parsonage, and the prospect for the future is bright. Lord's day, July 7, I dedicated a new church building for a country church about eighteen miles from here. The circumstances were peculiar. A number of people from various places moved into this part of the county, and either bought or took up claims. They decided that there should be some preaching and a Sunday-school. After several attempts they finally decided to throw away all sectarian names and all creeds, etc., and form themselves into a body to be known as "Union Christians," and build a house of worship. They did this, and the house dedicated was the result. These people did this without knowing "our plea," and it demonstrates the fact that if what we teach was more clearly known many a place could build and maintain the preaching of the gospel where at present there is sectarian bitterness and rivalry. I have received a thought from what these people have done that I would like to pass along. In the present stage of the proposed union between the Christian Church and the Baptists, one of the difficulties seems to be in the name. Why not make it the "United Church of Christ"?

W. H. HARDING.

North Idaho Convention.

The convention was this year held at Culdesac, Idaho, June 13-23. Delegates were present from the following places: Bear Ridge, Clarkston, Clearwater, Cottonwood, Grangeville, Genesee, Gilbert, Juliaetta, Kendrick, Lewiston, Leland, Moscow, Mohler, Melrose, New Hope, Winchester, Winona. The minutes of the convention are yet in the hands of the recording secretary. This report is from memory.

The following national workers were present: Mr. Harrison, Lexington, Ky.; W. R. Warren, Pittsburg, Pa.; G. W. Muckley, Kansas City, Mo. These all gave the best kind of addresses, inviting to the very best things. The reports were fair. The convention adopted a constitution similar to the Oregon constitution, adding a second vice president and granting larger privilege to the churches delegating attendance.

The North Idaho evangelist reported meetings in six small places in five months' work, besides the Culdesac work. One new church was organized and two C. E. societies. A new church is under construction and nearing completion; there were 55 accessions; $170 was raised in the field for himself, $750 raised for North Idaho missions and $750 for the Asotin building.

The new officers elected are: H. H. Hubble, Grangeville, president; N. E. Ware, Mohler, first vice president; Charles Musselman, Lewiston, second vice president; J. S. Hogan, Gilbert, recording secretary; J. S. Mounce, Lewiston, treasurer; J. B. Lister, corresponding secretary.

The addresses and help of Brethren Lowe, Hubble, Musselman, Hogue, Emerson, F. O. McAuley, visitors and delegates, and several of the church at Culdesac, were beneficial and fruitful of much good.

The Culdesac church had made every preparation. A. J. Green was the efficient director. F. O. McAuley, of Latah, Wash., directed the singing and did the work well.

The place appointed for the 1908 convention is Juliaetta. Our motto for this year is, "Giving all diligence"; aim, "1,000 added to North Dakota churches and $3,000 for missions." The beginnings for this must be from the close of the Culdesac convention; the efforts must be the best every day and faithfully enduring unto the day we gather at Juliaetta, June, 1908. J. B. LISTER.

The Spiritual Value of the Lord's Supper.

my worthiness. It is not God, it is not Christ. True, God and Christ know, but they are not deciding for you, for me, to-day. It is not the man or woman by your side, not your minister, not an ecclesiastical body. You must decide for yourself. I must decide for myself. We must make the matter personal and then we will become spiritual. There is one standing by our side that will help us decide aright and get right—Jesus the Christ. It is not perfection he is asking before we partake. It is honesty, thoughtfulness, appreciation, sorrow and repentance for sins, love for our brother man, love for Christ, love for God. "This do in remembrance of me"! Then we will get right, decide aright and plan and pray to live right.

Some Thoughts.

"Persons who daily converse with God and who constantly meditate upon his salvation will not need to be told how they should demean themselves at the Lord's table. An austere and rigid Pharisaism sits as awkwardly upon a Christian as a mourning habit on a bride. Cheerfulness is not mirth, solemnity is not Pharisaism, joy is not noise, nor eating, festivity." A. CAMPBELL.

"It is not people with the few conventional religious aspirations for whom this sacrament is meant; it is men and women with the strain, the hunger and the pity of their common life upon them. When we are brought face to face with the cross—with its pains, and its death—do we not feel utterly ashamed of the easy conscience we hold toward our sins, and the half-measures we have used to get rid of them?"

GEORGE ADAM SMITH.

Do we not ofttimes feel there is a lack of the spirit of worship in our services? Do we not now and then feel the need of a more vital, spiritual force in our lives? Are there times when we leave the church disappointed—and we are unable to tell just why? Why are our greetings, our smiles, our handshakes so often cold, stiff and formal? That these are not imaginary experiences most of us will admit. Is there a way of escape? Yes, there are many ways of escape. One I would emphasize here in a special way. Let us make the Lord's Supper our quiet hour, our time of heart searching and heart burning, our honest moment with self and God, our unconditional surrender moment, when we give up sins and take up Christ, our moment of transfiguration when we listen to the voice of the Father and see no man save Jesus only. I do believe there is a spiritual value, a vital power in the Lord's Supper that we have not fully appreciated. May it not be that just here we have the solution of many of our vexed questions, our unsolved problems? May it not be that here we shall receive strength to bear our petty trials, our daily disappointments, our heavy burdens more graciously? Let us appropriate the spiritual blessings half revealed and half concealed in the Lord's Supper and we will most fully discover the mind and heart of the Master.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Oklahoma and Indian Territory.

The cause of Christ is pushing to the front in Oklahoma and Indian Territory. In Oklahoma J. M. Monroe, corresponding secretary, is kept quite busy dedicating new meeting houses. We have a number of living link evangelists in Oklahoma. These are all doing fine work. C. M. Barnes, C. W. B. M. evangelist, has gone into fields where we had but few members and has built meeting houses which would be a credit to the strongest churches in the very best towns. Here is a list of some of the places and houses: Walters, Cache, Faxon, Chattanooga, Snider, Olustee, Frederick, Manitou, Fletcher and two country points. Pastors were located with each of these congregations. One of the remarkable things connected with his work is the fact that he closed up at each place without any friction whatever, leaving the church in love and harmony. I have conducted meetings in a number of these churches and have had an opportunity to know something of his work. Truly he is a laborer wort'• of the confidence, support, love and esteem of the entire brotherhood.——We have so many good pastors that I can not speak in this letter of their work. I wish I could, for I believe in pinning bouquets on these workers as they labor that they may know their efforts are being appreciated.——I recently closed a good meeting at McAlester, I. T., with my old friend and schoolmate of childhood, T. Crocket Mullins. At this point I met S. R. Hawkins for the first time. There are few pastorless congregations in both territories. Men who want plenty of hard work and willing to begin on a small salary can find here a suitable field.——We are having some very fine meetings this year in both territories. Some of these meetings have been conducted by home men while evangelists of other states have been with us and greatly strengthened our churches. We hope to see these men come again. The greatest hindrance this year to protracted meeting work is so much rainfall. I believe all the evangelists and congregations have suffered from protracted rains. J. A. TABOR.

Oklahoma City, Okla.

Nebraska.

J. A. Parker, of Indiana, has located at Arapahoe.——F. M. Branic, of Edgar, has accepted a call to the work at Red Cloud.——L. S. Harrington has been called to the pastorate at Cozad. This is a bit belated as he went there in May.——A. J. Hargett will supply at Deweese during the summer.——M. D. Baumer reports $4,500 pledged for their new house of worship at Chester and the field not wholly canvassed. This means a forward step in that little city. Their children's day offering was $62.——Three added at North Side Church, Omaha, since last report. H. J. Kirschstein is the preacher.——G. W. Henry has been ill for several months with sciatic rheumatism.——L. A. Hussong graduated at the State University this year, receiving the degree of B. A. He will take a pulpit, probably.——The new Nelson parsonage is a seven-roomed house and is nearly ready for the plasterer. The work there is moving steadily forward under the ministry of F. Ellsworth Day.——The new church of the Omaha First is being plastered. The Bible school will soon be meeting therein. The pastor, S. D. Dutcher, had a birthday recently. About fifty people found it out and went to his house with ice cream and cake and made merry. They observed June 30 as "New Church Day" in the Bible school. The superintendent gave a dollar every time the Bible school gave one. No report from the result..——H. F. Stevens, of Cozad, is available as a pastor. Write him.——J. W. Hilton, for several years pastor of the University Church at Bethany, has resigned and accepted a call to an assistant professorship in the university. Brother Hilton is well known to all the Nebraska churches and dearly beloved for his great work on behalf of Cotner during the direful years of effort to redeem it. He will be a valuable addition to the faculty. He makes a material financial sacrifice in doing this, but it is not the first he has made for our educational institution.——The University Church will need a preacher this fall.——A bit of news regarding the year's finances will be interesting and many will be wanting to get this. Over $100 came in on the "rescue fund." The apportionment receipts will exceed those of last year by over $200, being a trifle over $1,900 all told. This has been made possible by the hustling of the pastors in the last three weeks. Receipts from all sources since June 11 have been nearly $900. In spite of the heroic efforts of the interested ones, there still are a number of churches that have been friends of missions and one or two that should be, that sent in nothing. If these had responded we would have gone over $2,000 from appointments. We will fall short about $225 this year of having enough to pay everything. Most of this comes from two unusual items, insurance and our part of the News deficit. The total receipts for all purposes amount to over $6,300. This includes all our operations from July 1, 1907. Doubtless there will be the usual receipts during July from delinquent churches, but this will count in the next year's work. Now for the convention. It is coming swiftly, July 30-August 4. You will hardly know the place.——The Beatrice church will worship in the new basement July 21.

Ohio Letter.

A note was made in this letter recently that H. E. Beckler had resigned at Belle Centre. Such was true, but it has been retracted and on Thursday, July 11, Brother Beckler secured a pastoral helper in the person of Miss Frank Zeller, of Columbus. W. S. Priest witnessed the signing of the contract. The church at Belle Centre will now be served by a benedict instead of a bachelor. By the way, lightning has struck in another quarter among our Ohio preachers. Bachelor McDaniel, of Dayton, has also gone the way of all the earth and taken a wife. May these unions be long, happy and useful.——J. H. McCartney, of Bedford, has resigned and gone to Texas on account of health. It was very hard to sever the ties that four years have made at Bedford. He has done fine service and is universally beloved.——All Ohio congratulates East Liverpool and Wellsville on the victory over the saloons. Fifty-three were voted out by a good round majority at Liverpool and over 20 at Wellsville. When we remember that these are industrial towns the victory is the more pronounced. Of course Parsons Wise and Pruett had a large hand in the fight.——Everybody who has lived in Columbus long knows of Dr. Starling Loving. He is near 70 years old. Recently

SOME OF OUR CHURCHES RECENTLY DEDICATED.

Ravenwood, Mo.

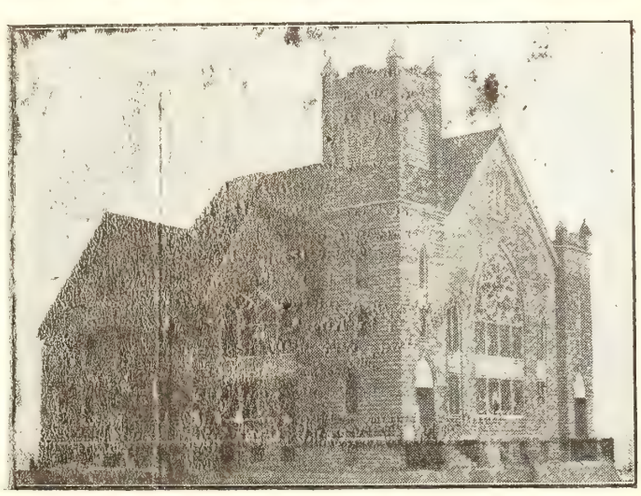
The brethren at Ravenwood, Mo., who have long needed a new house of worship, now have it. Ground was broken last August for a $3,000 building, but the actual cost reached $5,000. Of this amount, $2,475 was to be raised on dedication day, when J. M. Hoffman, of Des Moines, Ia., was present. He spoke three times to an audience which filled the seats, 500 in number. At the close we had over $2,900, and all were happy. Brother Hoffman did a good work for us. Out of three years of co-operation and struggle for a building we emerge with peace, life and unity.

C. C. DOWD, Pastor.

Bowling Green, O.

The Bowling Green (Ohio) church set apart a new house of worship to the service of God on Sunday, June 9, amidst great rejoicing. This is a comparatively young congregation, but it has owned three houses in the less than twenty-five years of its history. The new church is a commodious structure that accommodated easily 1,100 people on the evening it was dedicated. It is also the most convenient and modern church in the county.

The weather was perfect. About ten of our congregations dismissed their services at some time in the day so that they might come and rejoice with us. By no means the least factor in the success of the day was the man who delivered the sermons of the day. Z. T. Sweeney is certainly a master hand at such occasions. The people responded gladly. The amount raised during the day was $4,700, but the spirit of unity and willing service that prevailed was worth even more than the money given. With some gleaning and financial management we expect the amount raised to put the congregation out of debt. The property is valued at $27,000 and is cheap at that sum. It is located on one of the most desirable corners in our city, and will put the work here on a plane that it has never occupied before.



CLYDE DARSIE, minister.

Sweet Corners, Ontario.

The new and beautiful building at Sweet Corners, Ont., was dedicated June 9, free from debt. It was a great victory for the church there. The writer officiated, preaching morning and evening. To M. B. Bryan, more than to any other man, is this triumph due. J. M. VAN HORN.

Houston, Texas.

The new Central Church, a property worth $75,000, was dedicated June 9. We called for $50,000 in order to provide for the entire debt, and in twenty-five minutes raised $21,000. F. M. Rains was with us. The membership is overjoyed and the city is rejoicing with us. The location is the best in the city and the building the greatest in the south among our people. It is thoroughly equipped. There are twenty-six rooms, each completely furnished for its special use. Two organs, two pianos, an Estey pipe organ and 600 song books are the provisions made for helping the people to sing praises to our God. Fourteen hundred people can be comfortably seated in good view of the pulpit. The picture of Justin E. Brown, our living link missionary, occupied a prominent place on the platform and gave inspiration to the services. We have expected great things of the Lord and have received greater than we expected. What he has given us in material equipment we shall use simply as a means to the end of helping saints and saving sinners.—A. F. Sanderson.

some one said to him, "Doctor, you are getting pretty old to practice medicine, aren't you?" "Well, I don't know," said the doctor. "The people seemed to want me $25,000 worth last year." Yet one of our Ohio preachers, who is under 45, was told by an Ohio church recently that they preferred a young man. When the preacher gets to be 70 people want him only "in absence" and if he persists in living at that age he may have to live as an object of benevolence.——It is saddening to know that W. S. Priest, of Columbus, has had a slight stroke of facial paralysis. It is hoped by an immediate rest that he may not be incapacitated. He will spend six weeks in Michigan hoping to regain his strength in that time.——J. H. Dodd, of Columbus, has also been laid on the shelf by a nervous breakdown. He has gone to Tennessee for two month's rest. J. H. Stone will supply Brother Dodd's place.——Orilas G. White, of Huntington, W. Va., has been vacationing in Ohio. He has been at the old home of himself and wife at Hebron.——It is to be hoped that the preachers are remembering the conference at Hiram, August 5-7. W. J. Dawson will be the leading attraction. It will be a spiritual feast that will enrich the soul of the tired preacher more than anything he can do. Let every preacher within reach of Hiram try to be there. The place is ideal, the fellowship will be sweet and the inspiration uplifting.——It is now Secretary Miller. July first marked the incoming of the new secretary. It is now Parson Bartlett, of Painesville.——Governor Harris last week summarily dismissed a member of the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary for drunkenness. The time was when such a man would have been protected in such an act. But "the world do move" and some men have to move too.——Things are quiet along our Potomac just now. All are resting up for a vigorous fall and winter campaign.

Kentucky.

W. J. Cocke had a very good month's work. At Clay City and Mt. Carmel there were 16 added. ——Nine added by J. W. Masters. The house at Harlan Court House is nearing completion and the state secretary is expected to be present at dedication.——J. Stuart Mill closed his work at Beattyville and has started to his home in Australia. Beattyville will be provided for as to preaching by Brother Holton.——Latonia is making good progress for convention September 16-19. One added, as told by H. C. Runyon.——C. M. Summers began work at Jackson June 1. He is much pleased with the Breathitt county capital and thinks the outlook for good work encouraging. ——Robert H. Carter is preaching at Belleview, Boone county, and he says that the meeting of W. J. Cocke did much good.——T. W. Harrison is helping J. W. Ligon in a meeting at Chatham. Two added and outlook good.——L. T. Cole says that the Lebanch Junction work is moving on about as usual.——Five added at the points for which O. J. Young preaches, Valley View and Irvine. Meetings to be held soon at both places.—— George D. Verco reports three confessions just before the meeting began at Clay City.——H. L. Atkinson is doing some preaching in the regions round about Hazel Green and hopes for good results.——H. C. Bowen is to help J. P. Bornwasser and the Bromley church in a meeting at close of Sunday-school contest; 34 in school.——Wellsburg, Bracken county, is doing very well, according to the account of their preacher, E. T. Hays.——W. L. Lacy was busy much of the month and is planning active summer and fall campaign.——One baptized by C. A. Van Winkle. He is to be sent by the Berea Christian Endeavor Society to national Endeavor convention.—— C. W. Campbell reports 21 added in Rockcastle county where he is doing some evangelistic work. ——D. G. Combs had a great month, 123 being added, a church organized and much other good done. He is now at Sandy Hook, the county seat of Elliott county, where we never had a congregation. He thinks one can be established now.——Eleven added in the field of Eastern Kentucky occupied by Z. Ball. He expects to take an offering from every church he visits for state missions. If all our Eastern Kentucky men would do that we could pay them better and have more at work.——W. C. Whitehouse was at Worthville one Sunday and matters are about as usual.——S. J. Short has recovered from the terrible shock caused by the burning of his home and two boys. The other son so severely injured has recovered. Brother Short is now at work. He appreciates very much the sympathy and help extended him by the brethren.——Elijah Petty added 17 during the month. He is in a meeting at Chestnut Grove, Boyle county, in the hills of that county, and will hold some other meetings while there.——H. W. Elliott preached 24 sermons at ten different places. The collections amounted to $424.84, an advance over last June; but not enough to pay the expenses of the month. We are rapidly nearing the close of our fiscal year. Many good churches have not had fellowship with us. We need the help of all in order to close the year creditably. We plead for the fellowship of all and earnestly entreat all the brethren to take prompt action.

Hiram College.

The college year just closed at Hiram has been marked by some distinct and important steps. While the deep religious and missionary spirit that has so long pervaded the college life has been fully maintained, two important enterprises undertaken during the year will tend largely to increase that spirit. To meet imperative needs, the Foreign Christian Missionary Society has arranged for the establishment at Hiram of a Home and Scholarship for the children of its missionaries, where they can be given necessary care and oversight during the school age. This work is to be a memorial to our beloved missionary pioneer, G. L. Wharton, who died in India last November after nearly twenty-five years of service. F. W. Norton, who had been a successor of Brother Wharton in the pastorate at Buffalo, gave up his pastorate with the Irvington church at Indianapolis, Ind., to become the special representative of this work. The interest manifested throughout the whole brotherhood promises an early consummation of this enterprise. It will conserve and augment the missionary life of the college and serve to make the spirit of this missionary leader a part of the abiding spirit of Hiram.

On Commencement day the Ohio Christian Education Society was organized. Its purpose is to create and foster interest in higher Christian Education and to further in any way the interests of the College among its natural constituency. Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds is the president. Plans are already perfected for a vigorous campaign. Any former student or friend of the college is eligible to membership. It is believed that a very large number will be glad to join in this new movement.

In addition to the Marion A. Parmly prize of $100 to a member of the Senior class who is preparing for the ministry, three Marion A. Parmly scholarships for students for the ministry became available this year, being one of $75 to a Junior, $50 to a Sophomore and $25 to a Freshman. The Philo Sherman Bennett scholarship of $25 is awarded to a deserving young woman. These prizes and scholarships will be awarded annually. It is hoped that others will be added soon for other departments of work.

Probably no college in our brotherhood can show such long continued terms of service for its faculty. The average period as professor at Hiram for eight members of its corps of instructors is eighteen and one-half years. Constantly growing and thorough students, these men unite their influence with the newer members in preserving the spirit of independence and self-reliance that has so long characterized the school.

After a long term of useful service as president of the Board of Trustees, Mr. C. B. Lockwood retired at his own request from the Board. He is succeeded as president by Judge F. A. Henry, of Cleveland, elder and Sunday-school superintendent in the Euclid Avenue Church of Christ. Mr. Wallace J. Ford also retired from the Board at his own request, after serving as trustee of the college and institute for more than fifty years. New members of the Board of Trustees are S. H. Bartlett, of Painesville, formerly secretary of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society, J. E. Pounds, of Hiram, and Harris R. Cooley, director of Public Charities of the city of Cleveland. Mr. Cooley was elected to fill the unexpired term of Lewis John Wood, who died within the year.

The attendance for the year was 254. The indications point to a considerable increase in the number of students in the fall term, which opens September 24. More than half of the students in attendance are making their own way, wholly or in part, while a large number are preparing for the ministry and the mission field. The mission study class led by Prof. Charles T. Paul has had a prosperous year.

The present high grade of work, conforming to the standards of the Ohio College Association, will be maintained. The friends of Hiram may expect her to equal and even surpass the splendid record of the past. J. O. NEWCOMB.

Louisville Bible School.

The Louisville, Ky., Christian Bible School for our colored brethren held its closing exercises June 6, at the Christian Church, Thirteenth and Green streets. The music was under the direction of Sister M. L. Mead. There were three graduates, F. C. Cothran, of Tennessee, and J. R. Johnson and William Worder, of Alabama. The program was rendered to the satisfaction of the intelligent audience that packed the house.

The Ministerial Association (colored) sent two representatives, Rev. Harris, of the Congregational Church, and Rev. Payne, of the A. M. E. Church. Some of the best talent in the Baptist, Methodist and Catholic Churches in the city assisted in the excellent music rendered.

The young men delivered their sermons and addresses in an excellent manner.

President A. J. Thomson presented the diplomas and made a brief but splendid address to the graduates.

Mr. Cothran is preaching acceptably for the Hancock Street Christian Church, where he has pastored more than two years. Mr. Worder will open a mission in Bowling Green, Ky., where we have less than a half dozen members. Mr. Johnson for a while will supply at Twelfth Street Church and in other pulpits in the city.

The work of the school has moved smoothly forward this year, and there are prospects for a good opening the next school year, which begins September 5. W. H. DICKERSON.

A Good Meeting at Colemansville, Ky.

A two-weeks' series of evangelistic meetings at Colemansville resulted in forty-five additions to the church, two by statement and 43 by confession and baptism. There is also one man who made the good confession who is to be baptized later. J. Boyd Jones did the preaching and proved himself an able and earnest evangelist. The audiences were so large that, though the church had been enlarged by means of a tent, the people could not nearly all be accommodated, yet the order and attention was excellent. There is a good working spirit among the members, the church is being remodeled, and the outlook for the future of the church is bright.

HENRY J. LUNGER, minister.

The Work at Pond Creek, Okla.

O. L. Lyon, of Newman, Ill., came to take charge of the church at Pond Creek about the middle of May. He has just closed a three weeks' revival with 60 additions. However the accessions to the membership by no means measures the good results of the meeting. The whole church has been revived and every line of work has taken on new life. Brother Lyon is a wonderful power, both as an evangelist and pastor.

This was a hard field for any man to enter, as we have been without a pastor for nearly a year and a half, but Brother Lyon has proved himself to be the man for the place, and we are looking forward to the best year in the history of the church. WILLIAM GARRISON.

state missions as an index of the zeal of the Missouri brotherhood for the evangelization and Christianization of the people of our state, we have great reason to be humbled by the conclusion which is forced upon us. We are loth, however, to accept this view of the matter. But the fault lies somewhere, and it is our duty to find out where it is, and, as far as possible, correct it. The probability is we shall find that the fault is pretty well distributed, and it would be well for each of us to put the question which passed around among the Twelve, on a memorable occasion—"Lord, is it I?" But whether in our churches, our preachers, our official representatives, or our methods, the trouble should be sought out, located, and remedied.

4. We believe a careful consideration of the facts above mentioned will lead all thoughtful minds to a realization of the supreme need of putting away all hindering causes, and of giving ourselves and all that we possess in a fresh consecration to the cause of Christ. There is need to lift our eyes to God, the living God, whence cometh our strength, that he may forgive our past unworthiness and lead us forth to new tasks and to new victories. In the erection of family altars which have fallen down; in the training and nurture of our children in the Lord; in a more earnest and systematic study of the Bible; in the observance of "the quiet hour"; in earnest and incisive preaching which searches the conscience; in the making of the services of the church spiritual and impressive; in the enlistment of a larger number of the men of our churches in the prayer-meeting, in the Bible school, and in the work of the church, local and general, we may hope to remedy these defects in our practice and to illustrate more perfectly our sublime aim of reproducing, in our day and generation, with all its victorious power, the Christianity of the Christ, and of the New Testament.

meeting houses and most of the congregations—the local plant—while we supply the evangelist. We hope to have nine or ten men at work in this way during the year.

While, so far, nothing but co-operation is attempted, everybody feels that union is in the air. It seems to be conceded by nearly everyone on both sides that the question of name is the only one to be settled. Many of the Baptists freely concede to us the superiority of our position on this point. In the Kenora case the agreement is that scriptural names only will be used, but I believe the legal name has not yet been decided upon. In the other cases, at Swan River and Vermillion, there is, as yet, no corporate union of the congregations, and each uses its own name. We trust to time to solve this problem for us.

Negotiations are pending by which we expect to share the Northwest Baptist," contributing several pages of the paper through an associate editor, who will be appointed by our board.

The writer confesses himself pleasantly surprised at the fraternal spirit shown by our Baptist brethren. They are coming a long way to meet us. It will be noticed, too, that this movement has originated in the congregations. The union structure is being built from the bottom up. This is the healthy way.

BUSH.

Mrs. Sarah Ewing Bush was born in Nashville, Tenn., on December 8, 1830. Her parents were Albert Gallatin Ewing and Jane Campbell Ewing, the latter being the eldest daughter of Alexander Campbell. Mrs. Ewing died when her daughter was but 3 years of age, thus leaving her in the care of her grandfather, with whom she lived, and by whom she was educated, until reaching her nineteenth year, when she was married to J. W. Bush, at Bethany, Va., February 22, 1849. About five years after her marriage the family removed to Texas, settling in Huntsville, where they continued to reside until the death of Elder Bush in January, 1891. They were pioneers among the Disciples of Christ in Texas, being the organizers of the church at Huntsville and continuing to be its chief supporters and attendants as long as Brother Bush lived. She was blessed with ten children, all of whom survive her save one, who died in infancy. Since the death of her husband Sister Bush lived with her married children, residing for several years past with her youngest daughter, Mrs. C. M. Sitman, New Orleans, at whose home she died, after a lingering illness, on the morning of May 30, 1907. The remains were brought to the old home at Huntsville, Texas, when, after a memorable funeral service conducted at the home of her youngest son, Dr. L. H. Bush, by A. S. Johnson and C. S. Farrington, and surrounded by all of her living children save two daughters, who were unavoidably kept away, she was laid to rest beside her husband and little boy. The concourse of old friends and acquaintances in attendance, the beautiful floral tributes, the sweet and touching services, all showed the great love and respect for one who had for so long gone in and out among them as an example of noble, pure, Christian womanhood. Aside from those of her own family, she is survived by her oldest sister, Mrs. Margaret Pendleton, of Wheeling, W. Va., two half sisters, Mrs. Jane Davidson, of Eureka, Ill.; Lorena Stevenson, of Los Angeles, Cal., and a half brother, Orville Stevenson, of Illinois. Of Grandma Bush it may be truthfully said that her trust in God was sublime, her belief in his Word and promises perfect. Truly a mother in Israel has fallen. JOE M. LONDON.

COGGINS.

Dr. John Wesley Coggins, at one time the pastor, and for some time an elder, of the Christian Church of Odessa, Mo., died there June 6, 1907. He was 38 years of age, and the loss to our congregation and to the brotherhood is great. He was a citizen beloved by his fellow-townsmen, a Southern gentleman of the old school, an able and scholarly preacher of the Word, and probably at the head of the profession of dentistry in this city. Born in Ashville, N. C., July 14, 1868, as a youth he entered Newton Academy of that city, and from there went to Mars Hill College, Mars Hill county, North Carolina. Afterwards he became a student in Milligan College, in Tennessee. In 1892 he came to Missouri and at Clarksville was ordained a minister of the Church of Christ by T. A. Abbott. Immediately following his ordination Brother Coggins became a student at Christian University, Canton, Mo. Here he remained for three years, preaching much of the time. From a pastorate at Laddonia he came to Odessa, where, for three years, he served these good people as pastor, preacher and friend. His ill health severed the relationship, and, being forced to cease active work as a minister, he took to dentistry as a means by which to live. He married Miss Carrie Baggarly, of one of Lafayette county's old and distinguished families, May 28, 1903. Their life was beautiful and strong as becomes a Christian home. The funeral services were conducted in the Christian church June 9, by the pastor and T. A. Abbott, of Kansas City. FRANK W. ALLEN.

HILLIX.

William Walter Hillix was born in Fayette county, Kentucky, October 9, 1830. He was a son of James Hillix, a soldier in the war of 1812. He united with the Christian Church through the ministry of Dr. Rixey, being baptized by L. L. Pinkerton in 1850. He spent most of his life in Missouri. In 1857 he was married to Ella R. Whittington, and was the father of eight children. His second wife was Miss Amanda Moore, who survives. For twenty years he was an elder of the old Salem church in Bryant county, but a few years since removed his membership to Weston as a matter of convenience. He was a good man and is mourned by many relatives and a host of friends. We buried him in Pleasant Ridge Cemetery. J. C. HOWELL.

LARIMORE.

Julia Esther Gresham was born July 11, 1845, and passed away March 4, 1907. She grew to womanhood near Florence, Ala., and spent most of her married life near her girlhood home. Her body rests in the family burying ground in that vicinity. She joined the church in October, 1859, and married T. B. Larimore October 30, 1868. For seventeen years she was an important factor in the work of Mars Hill College, our pioneer Southern church school which they established. When Brother Larimore gave up this to do work of an evangelist, traveling from the Atlantic to the Pacific, she assumed the management of the farm and household. A year before she passed away her husband gave up his evangel work to nurse her. Three Mars Hill "boys" assisted at the funeral—R. P. Meek, J. C. McQuidy and E. A. Elam. She was a woman of self-sacrificing devotion to all that was good and worthy.

EMMA PAGE.

MUCKLEY.

Herbert Gans Muckley, only son of Professor and Mrs. Henry C. Muckley, and nephew of G. W. Muckley and E. S. Muckley, fell asleep in Jesus Friday, June 7. He was sick only a few days. He died in Detroit of cerebo-spinal meningitis, where he had gone only three weeks before to be associated with an uncle in business.

He graduated from the Western Reserve University in 1902 with honors. He was an active member of the Cedar Avenue Christian Church, a zealous Bible school teacher and a true example of noble young Christian manhood. The bright hope of reunion, the sweet memories of a life well spent comfort the heart and sustain the parents and sisters in their deep bereavement. The writer officiated at the funeral, assisted by H. R. Cooley and C. Krebaum. J. J. TISDALL.

Cleveland, O.

SMITH.

John M. Smith was born in Ohio, 1830, and died at Monmouth, Ore., June 16, 1907. He was by faith a Quaker. He leaves a wife and two daughters to mourn his loss, one of them being Mrs. J. J. Handsaker, who was for a time with her husband in Jamaica.

E. C. WIGMORE.

SHRAKE.

G. W. Shrake, aged 66 years, passed to his reward from his home in Coshocton, O., June 13, 1907. Brother Shrake united with the Church of Christ at Dresden, O., in 1864, and has been a staunch Disciple ever since. In the early history of the church here, the services were held in his home. And from this humble beginning the church has now grown to have a membership of about 200 and has a promising future before it. He lived to see the church well housed in a new building. He leaves a wife and five children. His wife's maiden name was Miss Sarah Lovett, of Dresden, O. By his death the city has lost a valuable citizen, the church a loyal member and the family a loving husband and father. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at the home and the interment was at South Lawn Cemetery. J. N. JOHNSTON, Minister.

One of the most beautiful thoughts related to the Christian life is that of consecration. It is an alluring ideal. Who has not felt its enticement?

At the same time one of the most indefinite things related to our Christian life is this same consecration. What is it? How are we to set about to realize it? How may we adorn our lives with this beautiful ideal? Who has not asked these questions to turn from them for the most part uncertain and still seeking the answer which evades us.

Our first scripture gives us the ideal in its highest terms. The second scripture gives us the same ideal in a closer and more practical relation. Yet both of them are vitally joined to conduct and to the humblest and commonest of daily duties.

This is a habit of the Scriptures—to present an ideal and then to join it hard to our lowly lives. The ideal thus comes as a helper to those of us who would rise.

Read the first selection and see to what an ideal life Paul invites the careless Christian who is doing things in which he finds for himself "no harm." That discovery ordinarily is the open door to indulgence. Paul makes it the open door to the highest kind of living described in the ideal of the closing verses of this chapter from his letter to the Corinthians. Far more to be desired than indulgence in a possible thing is the beautiful life to which self-denial gradually leads us.

The scripture from the Epistle to the Romans enables us to define consecration in a practical way. Thus it remains no longer an indefinite ideal. Examine the whole chapter. We are invited into consecration by our memory of the "mercies of God." How marvelous are his mercies as Paul has unfolded them to our view in the preceding chapters.

In return we are to "present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your spiritual service." Here is the ideal. But how are we to do it? This is the wish we express monthly in our consecration meetings. What are we to do the rest of the week? Read on through the chapter.

In the third verse is an admonition which, if followed, would cure that "stuck up" feeling and manner which afflicts an occasional Endeavorer. To accept the remedy and apply it might make its subject feel like the body was "a living sacrifice," but it would be consecration.

In verses 4-8 consecration is doing faithfully the thing we are fitted to do as naturally and uncomplainingly as our feet do their work for our body, or the hands or the eyes. Such a contented consecration would be a blessed contribution to church life everywhere. It might be at the cost of the killing of some pride and personal ambition, but that would be giving "our bodies a living sacrifice"; that would be real consecration.

Follow the remaining verses down one by one. Ask yourself the question, "What was I wishing and praying for in Endeavor meeting when I was saying I wished to be consecrated?" Here is the week-day test: Is my love without hypocrisy? Do I abhor that which is evil? Am I tender in my affection for all my fellow Endeavorers? Put yourself on the altar and be mercilessly honest in this self-examination.

You said you wished to be consecrated. Did you mean it or did you say it because it was consecration meeting? Are you willing to pay the price? Keep on reading down the list, verse by verse. As you near the closing words, what about that quarrel, the old grudge, the desire to get even, to "pay back"?

The twelfth chapter of Romans is the consecration chapter of the New Testament. You may live the ideal if you are willing to pay the price for this precious pearl. If you are not willing to do just what Paul exhorts you to do all the way down this chapter it would be better for you never again to pray the hypocrite's prayer in consecration meeting.

Do we realize the blessing and power of an ideal? How much more of such ideals as these which can be worked out in our little daily duty.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

My Favorite Verse in a Favorite Chapter.

Topic, Phil. 4: August 1.

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things."

This summing up of things is a fashion of the great apostle's. And this is, perhaps, his very finest summary. It should commend the gospel which Paul preached to all men. It is the challenge of the apostle as well as his charge to all believers.

Obsereve how he puts the emphasis on the great basic virtues. "Whatsoever things are true." Truth is the basic virtue. There is no such thing as character without it. Christian character is grounded right down flat and four-footed on the old-fashioned virtues of truthfulness and honesty and justice. And truthfulness in every fiber of the being is the ground of all graces and goodness. The man that isn't truthful isn't to be trusted anywhere. A friend and brother, a close observer of men and morals, used to say: "It may be that God Almighty can convert a common liar, but I never knew of such a conversion." This may sound like snap judgment and like casting reflections on the divine grace and power of the gospel to save. But get right down to the bottom of character and of conversion and you will see that it is fundamentally sound. A "common liar" is one whose character for truthfulness is all moth-eaten and eaten out with the rust and beyond repair. There are such folks in every community. They would rather tell a lie than the truth any time. In fact, they seem incapable of speaking the simple truth without subtraction or addition. They belong to that class of whom the apostle speaks, "who are ever learning and never coming to the knowledge of the truth"; or to that class "who receive not the love of the truth that they might be saved." How can a man who does not love the truth be saved? It's a hard proposition.

Then there is the old-fashioned virtue of honesty. It stands right up along with common truthfulness. We talk of "bed-rock" honesty. That is what the apostle means. The religion of Jesus Christ has to do with just this old-fashioned love of the truth and downright and upright integrity, without which all profession is a pretense and a sham. This is the gospel for prayer-meeting and practical, everyday living. The world needs it. A good many church members are short on this old-fashioned sort of principles. This isn't pessimism, but practical prayer-meeting talk, for preachers and other folks. It's a part of the pure religion and undefiled that commends itself unto every man's conscience in the sight of God. "Whatsoever things are just" comes in under this head of practical virtues. And the apostle adds, "Whatsoever things are pure"; for upon truthfulness, honesty, justice and purity rest the four corners of the temple beautiful of Christian character. These are the foundation principles, without which there is no such thing as a Christian character possible. The religion of the gospel is sound at the core. Let us put the emphasis where it belongs, with less of theory and more of good, hard, practical sense.

Then upon this basic foundation of old-fashioned virtues we may build whatsoever things are lovely and virtuous and of good report. All good and beautiful and blessed things are ours. The "whatsoevers" cover the whole vast field of the practical and the beautiful, the nobly serious. The Christian may do whatever is worthy and enjoy whatever is right. Against the fruit of the Spirit there is no law. And it is all included in the wonderful sweep of the "whatsoevers" and "whosoevers" of the gospel—the "all things" of his goodness and his all-abounding grace.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

The Tabernacle.—Exod. 40:1-13, 34-38.

Memory verses: 34, 35.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the Glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle.—Exod. 40:34.

After the sin of Israel with the golden calf, there was the punishment of the people for their disobedience (Exod. 32:20, 25-28), for, although Moses plead with Jehovah that the people might be spared, he was righteously indignant with them. He could offer his own life to save them, and he could sternly take life to impress a lesson which he considered more important for the nation than the lives of a few individuals, or even of three thousand. Then the covenant was renewed, the gifts of the people for the new sanctuary were received and the various parts of the tabernacle and its equipment were constructed according to the very detailed pattern which Moses had received. (Exod. 35-39).

Observe that, in collecting the offerings of the people, there were no forced contributions. It was not a tax levy. The call was to "whosoever is of a willing heart" (35:5). Moreover, the people gave their best and most precious things. The articles and materials enumerated (35:5-9) were the riches of the people. In respect to spontaneity, enthusiasm and richness, it was an ideal collection.

The best is none too good for the service of God. Our practical age often cries for economy in the building and equipping of places of worship. This is well enough. Our age knows many religious uses of wealth which were unknown to the ancient Hebrews. But the cry for economy is often only the protest of Judas, who objected to the wicked waste of precious ointment. Let not economy be a cloak for stinginess.

Man is a creature of senses as well as of intellect. The appeal to the senses has its place even in religion. We delight to make our homes beautiful because we love them, and then their beauty makes us love them more. All religions make use of symbols which appeal to the eye and the ear of the worshiper. They may be used unwisely, so that the symbol obscures the substance, or wisely, so that it assists the soul to apprehend the invisible. The tabernacle was a piece of elaborate religious symbolism. The principle is the same to-day, because man is essentially the same; but the applications must be different. The Christian ordinances are visible symbols of spiritual truth. Consider whether the building and furnishing of our churches and the conduct of our services may not be made more effective in suggesting and assisting the spirit of worship.

"The glory of Jehovah filled the tabernacle" when it was completed. This is the final test and completion of every place of worship. It may come to the humblest chapel or cottage, or be wanting from the most splendid cathedral. It always comes where there is the spirit of prayer and sacrifice and service. Without it, the most glorious churchly architecture is but a ghastly failure, as unlovely as mere physical beauty unillumined by the light of a soul within. It is true of every house, and most of all of a house of worship, that "except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it."

The Bible School at Work

Conducted by J. H. HARDIN,
State Bible School Superintendent of Missouri,
311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

CITY UNIONS.—In Kansas City, St. Louis, St. Joseph and Springfield our Bible school forces have been organized, within the last two years, in the form of officers' and teachers' unions. These organizations have been already effective of much good, and will be of much more if the leaders keep the work going as it should be. The Kansas City Union has perfected arrangements by which the president, D. P. Gribben, receives a report every week of the features of the school on Sunday. If others would like information about this method, a postcard addressed to D. P. Gribben, Kansas City Life Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., will get the facts.

The institute at Belton was in the midst of harvest, but the attendance was fair for the season and the interest good. John B. Dickson is doing a truly spiritual work there. They will probably start a teachers' training class and the church and Sunday-school will inaugurate the combined service. Those who finish our teacher-training course and receive the diploma of our association are now receiving the beautiful seal of the international association on my certification. This seal makes a tasty finish when pasted on our diploma.

I go to Lathrop July 19-21 to help them stir up enthusiasm and push forward the training work. I expect to be at Odessa for the convention of the second district, July 24-26, and at Grain Valley for the Jackson County meeting, July 25, 26. If you want to know how I can be at two places the same dates, consult the C. & A. time tables and maybe you can work it out.

The county meeting of Clay County will meet at Liberty July 27, 28. I expect to be there to take my place on the program, and we are to have J. H. Bryan, of Iowa, for several addresses. The Clay County folks are planning for an aggressive campaign in Bible school work.

A GREAT CENTENNIAL AIM.—If correspondence now in progress comes to maturity, our whole brotherhood will soon be enlisted in a movement to sweep our schools everywhere into the organization of teacher-training. The motto will be, "Five thousand graduates in teacher-training by our Centennial." I have agreed that Missouri will furnish not less than 1,000 of these. Have I ventured too far? I do not believe so. Missouri takes no backward steps. We have made a beginning in this department, but it has been only a beginning. We need now to fall into line with this general movement and help to perfect what we have well begun, and also to carry the same good work to all quarters of the world.

"THE BIBLE SCHOOL TO-DAY."—Thirty-five cents in a letter, addressed as above, will bring you a copy of this little book, just published, into which I have packed as many practical hints for practical, busy Bible school workers as I could put into 108 pages. If more convenient, order it from the Christian Publishing Company.

THE ANNUAL REPORT.—This report, including the minutes of the Sedalia convention, has been printed and mailed to all our ministers in Missouri and to all of our Bible school correspondents. If you have not received a copy, and would like one, drop me a card and it will come to you by mail.

F. E. Meigs, of Nankin, China, surprised us by suddenly appearing in our office July 15. He is in this country in the interest of an important matter connected with the mission work in China. He was at one time a leader of our Missouri Bible School Association All over the state his name is held in dear remembrance by the people. He is at present president of the Union Christian College, of Nankin. May the Lord continue to bless and lead this good, true man!

PLEDGES! PLEDGES! PLEDGES!—Many of our schools to which pledge blanks were sent have not yet filled them up and returned them. If your school has not yet sent in its pledge will you not see that this it attended to at once? Let all those who have made pledges remember that these pledges are due monthly—the first of July, October, January and April. The first quarter on all pledges is now due. Don't fail to send it in.

OPTIMIST AND PESSIMIST.

Two men toiled side by side from sun to sun,
And both were poor,
Both sat with children, when the day was done,
About the door.

One saw the beautiful in crimson cloud
And shining moon;
The other, with his head in sadness bowed,
Made night of noon.

One loved each tree and flower and singing bird
On mount or plain;
No music in the soul of one was stirred
By leaf or rain.

One saw the good in every fellow-man,
And hoped the best;
The other marveled at his Master's plan,
And doubt confest.

One, having God above and heaven below,
Was satisfied;
The other, discontented, lived in wo,
And hopeless died.

"Not as the World."

CHAPTER V.

Some Modern Men and Movements.

God did anoint thee with his odorous oil, to wrestle, not to reign.—Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

He that forsaketh not all that he hath, can not be my disciple.—Jesus.

Yet the time cometh that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God's service. And these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father, nor me.—Jesus.

About every vehicle upon the street was chartered that evening to get the crowd to the train. After the street cars were loaded from platform to roof, hacks, buggies, express wagons, drays, sleighs and farmer's trucks were turned into requisition, and the streets were literally jammed full at the station.

Young men and young women alike were seen clinging on to dray stakes and farmer's hay and wood racks, all making jolly fun of the occasion.

When the football team espied the carriage that conveyed James and his mother, they made a rush and the horses were unhitched in a trice, and the bewildered driver was left, holding some shining coins in one hand, and his team in the other. "Wall these college boys air clever fellers," he said, as he counted his money. "One, two, three and six bits. Hurrah, for the Pig Skin Fraternity! That's a purty good day's wages to quit on." Away they went down the street ahead of all the other vehicles, calling out the college yells and other Rooter lingo as they ran.

The new track team and the indoor ball team, not to be outdone, joined forces and captured President Brown and Doctor Reid. Displacing the horses, they, too, ran after the "pig skins," as the foot ball team was called. Taking a shorter route, they came out into the main street, leading to the depot, just even with the crowd that was pulling the carriage in which the Gordons were.

"Rah! Rah! Rah! Rah! Rah! Rah! Beat 'em! Beat 'em! If you can!" was called out from both teams at once. And away they went, neck and neck for a race.

"The Pig Skins" were all heavy fellows, adapted for center rushes more than for swift running, and they had spent much of their breath on the college yells, and being out of practice, the "Trackers" and "Diamond" boys soon left them behind, and got to the depot first.

President Brown arranged with the railroad officials, for the coming crash of spectators, and lining up the students he appointed trusty fellows to officer the crowd, lest there should be any accidents, from crowding too near the incoming train, or jostling one another.

James was borne upon the shoulders of his fellows, through the lines into the coach, where he sat chatting and exchanging greetings with each and all as they filed through. The President and Doctor Reid had just time to exchange greetings with James and his mother and to tell them of the action of the faculty, exacting a provisional promise of James to return to college, as soon as he had had a good rest and his recovery should be complete.

"All aboard!" called the conductor, with the usual swing of his hand, and the train began to move, carrying many of the students away with it, some determined to go to the Junction, and return on the eastbound express, others bent on going to their homes, to spend the next day. But all determined to see James again, for they felt somehow that his home-going would end their opportunity of his fellowship henceforth, so they clung to him as long as they could.

The morning paper had only an account of the tragedy, with a meager account of the night proceedings at the college up to nine o'clock, when it was yet supposed that James could not recover. The deed was characterized as a dastardly act, and its perpetrators fit only for the gallows.

The paper was owned by a company, the principal stockholders being a wholesale dealer and the two physicians, which Doctor Reid had reasons to suspect of being inimical to his tenure of office in the college.

There were others also who had invested their available cash in various amounts of the stock. But altogether they did not have a majority of the stock, hence the first three shareholders controlled the paper.

These, with Professors Haberton and Smoker, the Rev. D. D. Tipler and one or two others, including a race-track man, made up the board of directors. But they were mere figureheads, as the votes on all matters of importance were made up of the amount of stock each held.

The wholesale liquor dealer held as much stock as the two physicians together, so he was actually the company when he wanted to be. He had obtained a controlling share for the purpose of protecting his business and preventing unfavorable comments and publications of a temperance character: also that he might own and control his own advertising medium. And he was not backward in using it with most telling display to draw custom to his numerous saloons and his wholesale business alike.

He was a great patron of both physicians and those who held the balance of the stock, so what he could not control by owning he did by patronage. He hired the finest horses and was always one of the principal "book men" of the race-track man's customers. He rented one of the best pews in Dr. Tipler's church, and he always had a good word for Professors Haberton and Smoker. In fact, he was a very nice appearing man generally; one who never was seen upon the streets under the influence of liquor. He moved in the highest society, gave liberally to churches and the college, and was generally liked because of his cheerful disposition and suave manners. He was at home in the lodge rooms and the dance parlors also. No one could say a word against Mr. Schlitz without incurring the displeasure of a very large number of people, and also was liable to be "shown up" in the paper, which was accepted as the public opinion and exponent of the truth, against which there was nothing to be said. And woe be unto him who took up any reproach against it, for there was no recourse elsewhere.

Several other persons had tried to start a rival sheet, but they had been so shamefully treated and misrepresented that they either sold out to the "Times," as it was called, or moved to another place.

The editor was a young lawyer, who had not found the practice of law as profitable as journalism, notwithstanding he was brilliant and not overburdened with conscientious scruples. However, he boasted that he had never tasted liquor, and that he was not addicted to the use of the weed in any form. He claimed that he was descended from church stock which he could trace to the Mayflower, yet he had no use for the church personally, except that he often gave them a "writeup" and praised the popular Mr. Tipler, or occasionally sat under his preaching. He was hired to run the paper according to the wishes of the company. Further than this he had no concern. If he pleased the company his salary was secure, and that was what he worked for.

He had gleaned the later developments of the Gordon case, had been to chapel, had interviewed President Brown and Dr. Reid, and had even obtained an interview with the trained nurse and Mrs. Gordon, and was prepared to make one of the greatest "writeups" of a truthful and yet sensational character that the paper had ever printed, when the two physicians and the wholesale liquor dealer came into the editorial room and held a consultation with him.

Just what was said during that hour no one knows but the participants, or as can be conjectured by the article which appeared and from a knowledge of the further facts that each of these men had a son in the mob that had done Gordon to his death; and that it was in one of the palatial saloons of the liquor dealer that the students had obtained their liquor and plotted the terrible deed, which they had done their best to carry out.

The paper appeared that evening and was issued in a larger edition than usual, since every one was eager to see and hear the story, which they had heard rumored so widely by those who had heard Dr. Reid at the chapel.

The heading of the article was a forerunner of what the piece contained.

A Hard Hazing!

Gordon Not Hurt as Badly as at First Thought by the Doctor.

Able to return to his home this evening.—Mother Eddy and a trained nurse sent for on a special train—Dr. Reid and President Brown hypnotized by the Christian Scientist Ladies—Not yet out from under the spell at chapel time—The student body go wild over their statements—Pandemonium reigns—Order and propriety entirely forgotten—All rush to the train to see Gordon off—President Brown will be asked to resign.

Such were the headlines in flaring type which the newsboys were hired to run and shout through the streets at 6 o'clock. Large packages of the papers were sent to distant towns, where members of the board of trustees resided, and an extra edition was struck off an hour later to be scattered broadcast over the land.

President Brown got his paper at a quarter to seven, and immediately 'phoned the editor for an explanation; but the compositor was the only one he could find, and as he was not responsible for the article he could give him no satisfaction. He then called for each of the physicians, but they, too, had absented themselves from their offices, and no one knew where they had gone. Professors Haberton and Smoker came over and assured him that they could do nothing, since their stock was so small that they had to remain silent partners simply.

The president then went to see the wholesale liquor dealer, whom he found under the influence of whisky and inclined to be abusive, saying that it was good enough for him; that he had no business to be in sympathy with such cranks and fools as Gordon and his like.

The president tried to reason with him, but he grew loud and boisterous and a crowd from the saloons soon gathered to hear the controversy. These seeing the president, and knowing his temperance sentiments and strict teachings against the saloon and drunkenness, began to guy him and to throw insulting remarks in his face. This was greatly enjoyed by the crowd, and the dealer encouraged it.

Seeing that he had made a mistake in trying to seek redress thus he turned to go, when some one threw a beer glass, hitting him behind the ear and felling him to the floor. The dealer, seeing what had been done and fearing evil consequences to himself and his saloon, hurried to drag him into the street and to circulate the report that he was drunk and had got into a fight with some Irishmen and got worsted.

No one dared to say anything other than what he said about it, since they feared him and his crowd, and all hated the president on general principles and they did not care to put the matter right, so he was taken into the custody of a policeman and locked up in the hospital ward of the jail.

A young physician was hit upon, one that had been in the place but a few weeks, and who, as yet, had no practice and but little knowledge of medicine.

Believing the statement of the saloon men, and thinking that the president was drunk, without investigating he proceeded to give him a strong emetic and to pour cold water over the body and expose it to cold draughts of air (just the opposite practice that physicians of any experience employ in a case of severe injury. The patient should be kept warm and induced to take nourishment and retain it if possible).

When the president did not return at 10 o'clock his wife became alarmed and 'phoned over to Dr. Reid to know if he was there.

The doctor had not seen him, but immediately inquired at Professor Haberton's, who told him that he had gone down to see the liquor dealer about the article.

The professor handed the paper to the doctor, who had been away in the country and had not seen it before.

"I am truly sorry that this has happened, but perhaps it will work out well for us in the end," said the professor. "We shall have to live and learn."

Dr. Reid could scarcely refrain from telling him some plain things, for he discerned a hypocritical disposition in his words, yet he did not answer, but went out in quest of the president.

Reaching Schlitz' saloon, which is an adjunct of the wholesale house, he stepped in and asked for Mr. Schlitz.

"He hash goon to ped," was the barkeeper's reply.

He then asked if they had seen the president there that evening. The barkeeper first answered in the negative, and then fearing that he might be implicated in the affair by telling a lie when it could be proved that he had seen him, changed it and said: "Och, yass; dat must hef peen the bresident who gott into a fight mit dem Irishmans. He ish locked up in dem shails."

Thinking that he was imposed upon, the doctor went out without trying to unravel the mystery of the iniquity that might be bound up in an Irish brawl.

When upon the street he thought that he would just go over to the printing office and see if they had seen him there, as he would be likely to seek redress from there direct. The night crew were at work running off one side of the morning paper, and to his amazement he saw on the sheet as it came from the press a heading thus:

President Brown in Jail!

Gets Into a Drunken Fight—Is Now Being Treated for Alcoholism at the Jail!

Dr. Reid hastened to the jail and at first was not allowed to enter the ward where the young doctor was at work upon the unconscious body of the president, the warden saying: "Wan dacter has been imployed already," and he did not think that "aither the town or the president's family wud care to have him bringing in extray bills agin them."

The doctor urged that he was the college physician and that the president's wife had sent him to find Mr. Brown, and he insisted upon seeing him at once.

After some parleying he gained admittance to the ward, and found the young doctor just about ready to use a stomach pump, since he had given a sublimate for an emetic, which he knew to be a deadly poison, and if it did not produce vomiting it would kill the patient.

Refreshing Sleep

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye Black or Brown, 50c.

Dr. Reid soon learned what he had been doing and the theory he had been proceeding upon, whereupon he turned to him and said: "You young fool or villain, I do not know which; but if you do not leave this jail at once I will have you locked behind some of these bars. President Brown never drank a glass of intoxicating liquor in his life! He is stunned, you idiot; and here you have him about finished."

The young doctor grabbed his case and left instantly, thinking that if he stayed longer the old doctor might put his threat into practice.

Applying the stomach pump he gave the patient an antidote as quickly as possible, and yet he could see from the roof of his mouth and lips that the lining of his stomach must be badly eaten by the poison that had been given as an emetic. And yet the stunned condition of the man would prevent the action of the stomach sufficiently to retard its immediate effect, otherwise he would have been a dead man before he reached him.

Now he applied hot bags to his feet and heart, and chafed his hands to reproduce the circulation which had been destroyed by the inhumane treatment of the young physician. Comfortable blankets and warm draughts were brought to the patient's aid, and the doctor began to examine the head to find out how or where he was hurt.

He saw that there were no marks of violence upon his face, as there would have been had he been in a fight, as the bartender and policeman told him he had.

Going over the head again carefully, he saw a streak of blood at the base of the brain, just back of the ear, where he had been hit. Lifting the matted hair, he found by slight examination that a trephine or elevating operation was necessary, and to do this it was essential to have him over at the hospital. He saw the warden, who informed him very positively that the patient could not get out of there until his case came up before the court and was passed upon and his fine fixed by the judge.

Thus he saw that something was necessary which he could not supply then or there. He did not want to alarm his wife until he could have the president where she could come to him at once, and yet he could not just then see what to do to get him out and over to the hospital before morning.

Around the Gulf to Mexico.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

From New Orleans to Houston.

March 26. Our third morning in New Orleans,—and the last if Morton is given that money for which he telegraphed. Down town, and stumbled on the old French Market and Jackson Square, and saw substantial houses and smooth, level streets where not many years ago a swamp breathed yellow fever. Although nearly a week till Easter Sunday, hundreds of male straw hats are to be seen despite the jeers of Creole urchins. The bank at last waives Morton's identification, and Morton comes out upon St. Charles street, waving his money. Then to Commercial Place for breakfast, but alas! the pretty May is not visible and the food is flat. We have about two hours till train time, and we decide to hunt up another Plattsburg man who holds a position in the New Orleans post office. None of us ever knew him except sufficiently to speak to him and believe we were getting his name right; but we toiled up Canal street in the blinding glare of the sun, dampening our best raiment with Louisiana perspiration, and dodging Jebly's tricycle in and out among the four lines of street cars, and keeping out of the way of the children who darted along on roller skates. There seems a roller-skates epidemic from Arkansas to the Gulf, for in every city we passed by daylight, the wheels wre whizzing and the crooked arms of boys and girls were reaching out for more distance.

We found with relief that the man we didn't know who had lived in our home town, was in Washington City. But there was a man at the side of the post office making cream wafers. He took crisp oblong strips of crust, fried before your very eyes, and shot a needle into it like a morphine injection and filled that crust with a liquid sweetness that made the idea of eating less than a dozen, a ridiculous fancy. The guide books will tell you not to miss seeing that imposing post office building; and it is seen to best advantage with the building on your eye and the wafers on your stomach.

Since there was no boat across the Gulf, we had to buy another ticket to Mexico City; $41 more than we had already spent in tickets. We left New Orleans at noon, bound for the land of the Aztecs. The train rolled upon a ferryboat, "El Listo," and we were steamed and tugged a long way up the river to the connecting dock. It was a very small affair compared to the Gulf-voyage we had expected to take when we left Bentonville; still, it was a real boat-ride. The sea-tars didn't cry "Aye, Aye, sir!" or growl "Shiver my timbers!" but the boat rocked, the water lapped and churned, the shore was far enough away to imagine it entirely out of sight, and the thought that we had started at last for Mexico gave a prickly kind of thrill that might have been third-cousin to seasickness. Instead of crossing the Gulf, our road circled around it, always carefully keeping out of sight of it. And now I had my view of sure enough Louisiana, under an afternoon sun. First came great flat fields of sugar cane and rice. Then we saw the marshes with their gleaming pools hidden away behind deceptive rushes and curtaining vines. And then mile after mile of forest, sometimes with marshy lakes, sometimes dry, but always flat. And the gray moss that I had read about, swung from the topmost branches, and trailed down to the very ground. Every tree seemed a good Catholic dressed for Lent. Under these fluffy vestments of motionless gray, the ground was strewn with wild ferns lusty and vigorous as befitted boys who stay out doors the year round. Such ferns as we tenderly coax and cherish in our pots at home as if they were girls who don't want to do anything, are as thick in these woods as dandelions in Missouri or dog-fennel in Kentucky, or postoaks in Arkansas. And palms that ought to be standing in somebody's reception hall or in a stair-niche, crowd to the railroad-bed and hold up their spangled fingers to catch the coaldust. Palms, palms everywhere, and not a fan to fan with! When the train stops, the oppressive heat wraps about you; and if you are at the edge of a marsh, you see some slimy thing slip through the everglades, or hear it splash into a green waterway.

At intervals you pass clusters of negro cabins, each like the others, and each with its blue or green cistern standing high and dry in the backyard. When they want water, I suppose they speak of drawing it; if so they mean as you draw molasses or cider through the faucet of a barrel. These cisterns are convenient to hang old clothes on, or to throw on top anything you want to get out of your yard. I notice that old whitewashed boards, parts of demolished hencoops, are capital for laying over the top to keep off the sun. These villagers,—how do they earn a living? There are no gardens to be seen; but they fish incessantly. Once when we stopped in the heart of a jungle, a small darkey appeared at it were from the earth, and behind him suddenly rose other forms like dark spirits of the swamps. The boy cursed us, and his older companions listened with approval to his oaths. Perhaps they regarded our train as an invasion of their rights to isolation and wildness.

We were on the Pullman, and our purchase of berths gave us the right to all the train. It was the most elegantly fitted up of any in my experience. If I had a room at home like the gentlemen's drawing-room for instance, it would give me enough reputation without writing any more stories. There were great plate-glass windows, and the usual splendid gilt and carving that one takes as a matter of course; and thick puffy leather chairs, not fastened to the floor, that dented any way your back wanted to go, and round mahogany tables to be pulled about and used at discretion and indiscretion, and a button at every window to press that rang a bell the porter sometimes obeyed. But the way you share the splendors of such a room doesn't show that you are impressed with it. You lounge on a chair and push a table out of your way, just as if you spent your life in drawing-rooms like it, or better.

From Louisiana we entered Texas again, and about 6 p. m. we went out on the end of the observation car. The end is just like a porch whose roof extends over a wide roomy space. Campchairs are scattered about. We sat down, wishing our friends at home could see us. Jebly and I had never ridden on the end of a car before, out in the open, with the brake in reach of our hand; but Morton had, and he had bragged about it, too. We were hardly seated when the dust raised by the train began to pour down upon us like Arkansas rain. Morton didn't say anything so I supposed that was a part of it, but it wasn't near the treat I had expected. The dust quickly turned us as gray as the bearded trees in the marshes, and then it went for the underside of our garments and poured down our collars as if they were funnels put there on purpose. After that we bathed and brushed till the "first call for supper." We were to eat on the dining-car, and we waited till the "last call" for we didn't want any mistakes about the condition of our appetites. Jebly had never taken a meal on a dining-car, and he turned pale when he saw the steak was $1.50 because that had been the simplest thing he had thought of getting. He had been wondering, too, if the coffee would spill when the car jerked out of a standstill, or stopped with a bump. When we sat down to our table, with palms in the niches and electric lights flashing in the mirrors and delicately shaded candles casting a dreamy glow over the saltcellar and pepperbox, and saw a man at the next table handing out a five-dollar bill for his meal just finished,—it was very inspiring.

After supper we learned that we had "struck the oiled road," so we poked our heads out of the rear door of the observation car. Sure enough, the roadbed was dark with oil that had been sprinkled there a week or so ago, and there was no dust. So we resumed our places on our car-balcony and without our former suffering were enabled to enjoy a ride on the end of the train. It was night, and a colored lantern was fastened to the wall so near I could have turned down its wick. Think of riding on such intimate terms with the green-and-red lantern of a Pullman! We came to Beaumont in the famous oil-region, where so much money was burned, and when we were told that we were only twenty miles from Port Arthur on the Gulf, it brought back the disappointment of losing our voyage. We soon forgot that in watching the straight road slip from under us. The red lights we passed turned green in the distance, and as the road kept straight, we could watch them sail down the track until they appeared as green stars on the sky. Sometimes as one green light would recede to a vast distance, we would flash past a new one. It, too, would go dancing away and presently the two would seem parallel and one as remote as the other, although in reality so far apart. Just as when the car of history left Alexander the Great behind, and then Caesar, and then Napoleon, and then Washington; we look back, and one seems almost as remote against the sky of the past as the other. The straight road at last grew monotonous to gaze upon, and the Texas prairies without indulation or forests, showed little variety under the full moon. We were sleepy, too, with our berths paid for and the prospect of having to get up early with insufficient sleep, considering what we were paying for it. Still, somebody said we would soon be to Houston, and we felt that we ought to see the city named in honor of the president of the Republic of Texas, the man who led her to her destiny. It is on an arm of Galveston Bay, and we wanted to see the bay, too. So we sat on and on, each nod covering about a mile and at last we were so tired we had no resolution for anything except not to go to bed till we saw that city. Eleven o'clock came and so did twelve, but not so easily. At midnight we were drawn between ever so many lines of trains, insomuch that we could not even see the station. A passenger backed up to the end of our car, and the porters of that car talked to the porters of ours about Mexico City and what was to be seen there. It made us feel that we were getting along to where we were going. On of the porters told an anecdote about the inventor of the Pullman service. "Gawge Pullman," as the porter called him, applied for admission at heaven's gate, but St. Peter refused admittance because of the insufficient pay the porters receive. That was the story in a nutshell, but the porter gave it to us by the gourdful. I thought to myself that if those who have to fee the Pullman porters were thereby purchasing a right to St. Peter's gate, the Pullman cars must be veritable carriages to heaven. So with this limited view of Houston, Texas, we went sleepily to bed.

Vacations for Mothers, Too.

People who work for themselves, especially mothers, often glory in not taking a vacation, in staying forever at home, in sticking solidly to what they believe to be their duty. To you, my conservative reader, a vacation is just as necessary as it is to the tired teacher or the faithful clerk; and for the same reason—that you may do more work when you do work, and do it more effectively. The duty which holds you will be better performed, the home that you are guarding will be better kept, and the cheerfulness, and courage, and optimism which you need will be more readily summoned, if you take time—not next year, but in the remaining weeks of this very summer—to drink in the stimulant of new faces, new landscapes and new experiences.—Woman's Home Companion.

Misplaced Confidence.

Maarten Maartens was talking at a magazine office about realistic fiction.

"If realism is truth," he said, "then I am for it. In books, as in life, the truth is always best. Lies fail.

"Lies fail in books as they fail in life. I know a woman who intensely desired to have a good photograph taken of her little son.

"But in the studio the child bawled as though he were going to be tortured. It was impossible to calm him, impossible to keep him in the chair. For an hour he filled the place with his howls and yells. For an hour he tore up and down the room like an imp.

"'But, darling,' said the mother, 'the gentleman isn't going to hurt you. Just smile and keep still a moment, and it will be all over before you know it.'

"'Yes,' roared the youngster. 'Yes, I know. That's what you told me at the dentist's.'"

"He Keeps Us Anyhow."

Almost asleep was "Golden Hair"—
Almost forgotten her little prayer:
Her lips moved slowly—"Now"—
And trusts "He keeps us anyhow!"

And I bowed my head and cried
For the faith so long denied:
For the faith of His little ones
In the circling of the suns;

For the faith that trusts His care,
All times and anywhere!
For the faith that murmurs "Now,"
And trusts "He keeps us anyhow!"

Dear child, the way is long—
So many little feet go wrong!
I lay my hand upon thy brow
And ask "He keep thee anyhow!"

I have so little strength to pray,
I lift up helpless hands and say,
"How e'er it be, I know that now
Our Father keeps us anyhow!"

An Out-of-Door Dining Room.

By Caroline French Benton.

We are learning more and more to spend every moment which we can spare from our work out of doors. We walk more than we did; we play golf if we can, or tennis, or we drive; we even, many of us, sleep out of doors, especially if we happen to live in the West or South, or where sleeping porches have become the fashion; and all these things conduce to health and longevity.

But many of us who live in town in summer, and others who have not that excuse, fail to eat out of doors, and that is just where we make a mistake, which loses for us a great pleasure and a genuine means of better physical conditions. Every one who has tried even one picnic, and probably none of us have failed of that, knows how hungry the open air makes us, and how good everything tastes, and how easily even unwholesome food, such as pickles and jam and chocolate cake all at once somehow digests. And if this is so, how much can be said for the good, hot, appetizing meals three times a day which our homes provide, only served with the sauce of fresh air, and in comfort! Many a man and woman who in hot dining rooms, perhaps in a flat under a scorching roof, have been indifferent to any sort of food, can eat with a zest in the open air dining room.

But how to obtain this supreme summer luxury! Is it not a suggestion for the rich only, who can build on rooms suitable for out-of-door meals? Not at all, for almost any family something of the sort is possible, with a little ingenuity.

For the family in a block house in a city the problem, strange to say, seems easiest of all. There is the backyard at hand, close to the kitchen door and on the same level. What is simpler than for the father of the family to put up some sort of an awning to secure privacy, perhaps only tarpaulin, or burlap, stretching it from one clothes pole to another and fastening the corners with cords which can be untied on washing days? Then the table can be laid with few steps from the kitchen, and folding chairs, or kitchen chairs brought out, and there is the dining room, finished.

Or, better than this, if one has a little money to spend, light beams can be laid across from fence to fence and a charming pergola will result, which with quick-growing vines to shade those underneath, will prove a thing of beauty and a joy all summer.

For those in villages who live in detached houses, there is always the porch, preferably one at the side. This can be screened with mosquito netting, an awning can be put up, perhaps, or vines grown on strings, and there is the dining room again.

In the flat perhaps the problem is practically insoluble, and yet a clever woman even here can often manage. If one lives in the top flat there is the roof; one can use this at least for the evening meal to great advantage. Of, if the fire-escape is large and the family consists of only two, that can have an awning on the top and sides and be costly utilized. If nothing more can be done, at least an entire window can be taken out, or perhaps hinged, and the mosquito netting put down the full length and the table pushed up close to it.

Those building little seashore cottages or homes in the mountains can always so plan that a large porch near the kitchen can be arranged for a regular dining room. All the furniture needed is a plain table and set of chairs which an occasional rainstorm can not injure, with some sort of a serving table at one side.

Then there may be growing plants and flower-boxes and awnings and all the luxuries one wishes in addition; but the dining room itself is the greatest luxury of all.

Recipes for Summer Dishes.

Jellied Oatmeal with Fruit.—The day before it is needed cook enough oatmeal for the family breakfast in the double boiler until it is a soft, jelly-like mass. Three hours are not too long to cook it, and it should have salt enough stirred in to make it good. When done and of the consistency of thick mush, pour it into a bowl or mould and set it away. In the morning turn it out and surround it with red raspberries or cut up peaches, sugared; serve plain cream with the dish. This is a perfect breakfast for a hot day.

Green Peas on Toast.—This is a luncheon or supper dish. Shell nice, fresh peas and cook them till they will easily mash when tried with a fork—usually half an hour is enough—using half cream and half water and only enough to barely cover them. Season with salt and pepper and add a bit of butter. Rub smooth a level teaspoonful of butter with as much flour, first melting the butter till it bubbles; gently pour in some of the hot cream from the peas till all is smooth and mix all together; cook again till the peas are thick and the flour well boiled. The whole should be a thick creamy mass. Have ready some rounds of buttered toast slightly moistened with hot milk and arrange a spoonful of peas on each, put on a hot dish and add a bit of parsley to each round.

Rice Crusts; also a Luncheon or Supper Dish.—Take a cup of cold boiled rice and beat it with an egg; season with salt and a teaspoonful of butter. Butter some patty pans or muffin tins and line them with the rice, as you line them with pie crusts for tarts; press the rice smoothly all over. Brown these in the oven, while you make ready a filling of creamed fish, or chicken, or any kind of meat; or, if you wish, make scrambled eggs. When the shells are hot and light brown, heap them with the filling and serve hot.

Eggs in Tomatoes.—Get some small, round tomatoes, and from the stem end cut out a round piece and scoop out part of the pulp. Put these in a deep baking dish close together, drop in each a bit of butter, with salt and pepper and put in a hot oven for fifteen minutes. At the end of that time draw the dish partly out and in each tomato gently put a raw egg, unbroken, and over it a shake of salt and pepper. Push the dish back and bake till the eggs are set. Have ready a small cup of white sauce, and as you take out each tomato and put it on a round of toast cover the egg with this.

Apple Porcupine.—Get some nice, large summer apples, peel and bake them, basting with sugar and water syrup till they are glazed all over. When cold, have ready a cup of almonds, blanched by putting them in boiling water for two minutes, then dropping them into cold water and slipping off their brown skins. Cut each one in two lengthwise pieces and stick the apples full of them. Arrange them on a round, flat dish and put whipped cream in the middle of a circle.

Stuffed Apples.—Bake the apples as before, and in their shallow centers put a mixture of chopped nuts and raisins. This can be put in before they are put in the oven or added when cold. Serve with cream, plain or whipped.

Baked Peaches.—Cut large peaches in halves and arrange them in a shallow baking dish. In the center of each put an almond and some sugar and add a very little water, not more than a quarter of a cup. Slowly bake them; serve cold, with cream.

Peaches on Sponge Cake.—Cut large peaches in halves; cut rounds out of slices of stale sponge cake and moisten each of these with a little cream; put a half peach on each round, the hollow side up, and put a little sugar in each, and then a spoonful of whipped cream. Serve very cold.

Apples and Gooseberries.—Cook down some gooseberries till thick and sweeten, using almost equal quantities of fruit and sugar. Bake some nice apples, and when cold pour over each some of the gooseberry jam. Serve with cream.

Nutmeg Melons, Stuffed.—When the small melons are plenty, get twice as many as there are persons to serve; cut them in halves, take out seeds and select the best; set these on plates. With a dull knife cut out the pulp of the rest in neat, square bits, pile these in the other melon halves and sprinkle with sugar. Serve very cold.

Pineapple, Stuffed.—Get a fine, large pineapple and one or more smaller ones. Cut off the bush from the large one with a good slice of the fruit also, making it like a cover with a handle. Take out all the inside, picking the pulp carefully from the core in as large bits as possible. Peel the other pineapples, take out the eyes and pick from the core; mix all the fruit together with sugar and chill thoroughly on ice; fill the empty shell of the large pineapple with cracked ice also. When time to serve, empty the shell and wipe it dry; fill with the pineapple pulp, lay the cover with its bush by it on a large, flat platter and pass, with a small ladle.—New York Observer.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Remember the ice cream social, August 3—the event of the season!

From Edith Slightam, Spokane, comes a leather card showing a very handsome cat reading a book; under it I find, "A literary cat, entertaining Particular Ladies." This is a neat little tribute to Felix; we are pleased to know they read about him up in Washington. Now, here is S. G. Fisher of Detroit, who wounds our heart by showing in the following that he has not been reading his Advance Society page: "Last Spring our boy's club sent you $1 for Charlie's educational fund. If you acknowledged it in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, I must have overlooked it. Can you tell me if you have received it? God bless the Av. S. work among the boys and girls." (That dollar is still received, and is now again acknowledged).

Carrie Craig, Kirksville, Mo., sends a picture card of the State Normal and writes, "I've never seen anything from Kirksville in the Av. S. page, which I read every week. I have kept the rules two and three quarters but never sent in reports. This is the school I have been attending. I will graduate next year."

Bald Knob, Ark., is heard from again: "That ugly black kitten sent you on the post card, wasn't Tricktum's photo. And we meant no insinuation against Felix. I admire those who know that cats are smart. Here is a real view of one of our streets that you may know something about that awful Bald Knob." (The picture represents several vehicles drawn by a team, or I should say, a yoke of oxen, but to offset this primitive touch, I see white vests among the gentlemen. A man that can wear a white vest as if he were doing no uncommon thing, counterbalances a team of oxen. I mean a yoke of oxen).

Don't forget our ice cream social for our orphan, August 3.

In this letter from Chattanooga, came some fragrant flowers: "I just want to thank you for the last story, 'Agnes of the bad lands.' Our two neighbors, Milton and Elizabeth Montgomery came over to our house to hear it, and when our week's number was ended we could hardly wait for the next. We also enjoyed 'Bronze Vase.' We are reading 'Around the Gulf to Mexico' and hope it will be as good. I have a sister and my grandmother reads the story to us every Saturday. I think Agnes' life shows how God always takes care of those who trust him, and I am always going to love and trust him. I saw a little girl on the street the other day and I wished then that I could do by her as Miss Maude did by Agnes. I wish I could help little poor children, and I think all who read your stories ought to feel thankful to you whether they tell you so or not. Your little friend, Isabel Woodwirth, 516 E. Fifth street." (I am afraid 'Around the Gulf' will seem rather dry to you because it is just telling about a trip, you know, so it isn't much of a story; but maybe it will interest you in places. I think when it ends I will write you a sure-enough story).

Also from Chattanooga comes Mrs. F. M. Pott's 25th quarterly report, and the following: "I missed the Bible reading one day. I tried and tried to think of something I had read or heard as a substitute, but there was nothing that day so I had to begin over. We have enjoyed 'Agnes' very much. All the time I was reading it, I was troubled by the question, what are we to do about it? Inclosed is a money order, $12, for Charlie's education. $1.50 of it is from our ice cream social for him last summer. I am glad he has an opportunity to help himself, and that he may go to High School. I have no fears for him now: he will get along all right. Give my love to our missionary. But in regard to the evils of the Band Lands,—what can we do? Are there not some consecrated people willing to live in the Band Lands for Christ's sake?"

I can see no solution to the evils in the Bad Lands except in our manner of living as suggested in the story. I do not think preaching the Gospel by the voice will ever accomplish what preaching it by the life does accomplish. The Gospel must be lived; and when it is lived, it solves all evils. If our lives are true, then those of us who can will go where the living of our lives may be seen and understood; and those of us who can not go will so live that those about us will be affected by our lives, and in their turn, influence others.

Wherever we are placed, there are sinners, who regard far more the way the church members live, than the way they talk. As for the children of the Bad Lands, they must be taken out of the Bad Lands, or they will form the criminal class of the next generation.

I wrote something like that to one of the Av. S. members, who replied thus: "I am sorry you think the only thing to do is to live right." (The only thing to do! mercy me! I wish I could do it. What more could we do?) "It takes action as well." (That is what I mean by life. Life isn't talking or sitting down or taking a nap, or going to church and looking at the clock; life is action.) "The preaching of the apostles would have been of very little value if they had preached only among themselves." (You see, they had to show their lives to outsiders; just as we who can should show our lives to the Bad Lands.) "It is the same with right living. We must live right, but will our lives not produce better results by bringing them in contact with those who need the example?" (We will not live right, if we do not bring them wherever we can to do good.) "Can we help some one to live in the Bad Lands? Don't you see you have laid a great responsibility upon yourself by writing that story? I know there are others willing to help lift it if you just show them how. If we let our thoughts and words pass us by without laying hold upon them, in some tangible way, we have lost the opportunity of doing much that might be done. I see great possibilities in that story: I hope they may develop sooner or later." (The responsibility is upon every one who can do anything to make the world better. Those who have grown up in the slums should see living in their very midst, Christians; and I think it would be just as noble and heroic an undertaking thus to live, as to go far across the sea to live among the heathen. To visit among the poor, to preach to them, then go your way, —that does not reach the vital point; it is the life in their midst that does the work. I can think of nothing more futile than for Jesus to have been living in a palace while he was preaching to the poor; or for Peter to have charged so much for his evangelistic services, that none of the weak churches could have employed him, and those who did secure his services, would have to squeeze and scrape and delve and toil to get together his weekly $100. And I am not saying a word about his "Singer." Now this is plain talk, and I fancy I am pointing out a very tangible thing, indeed, something that might offend those who are good but not giving their lives, but selling them at an extremely high figure).

Dottie Standish, Boulder, Colo.: "I am an old Av. S. member, who strayed from the fold nearly six years ago. But I am going to try it once more. I was among the charter members, such as Bertha Beesley. She has been with you ever since she joined, but I,—well, that's a different matter." (You see, Bertha is a Missouri girl) "I shall start to-morrow, on my 16th birthday. I wish the Av. S. a cool summer." (Not too cool, I hope, for a great many to come to our orphan's ice cream social.)

Charlie, St. Louis: "I would like to be in Bentonville now, while the Chautauqua is going on. We are having some of the hottest days that St. Louis has witnessed for many a year. I expect you have plums lying around for the chickens to eat, while we St. Louisans are paying a cent for one." (Yes, I was just scaring the chickens out, a minute ago.) "I had a fine 4th of July, out at the lake several miles from the city; it is reached by the street car,—a very pleasant ride. I would like so much to see my sister this summer. Mrs. Ayars has given me permission. I think I can save enough to take me there and back, for I don't like to break into my education fund; and you know our two-cent fare will come in handy." (My 4th of July was almost a duplicate of the one last year; I had a picnic dinner, a baseball game and a great big box of pansies from friends of the Av. S.)

O. Garrison Kitchen, Louisville, Ky.: "Twenty-five cents this time,—my weekly offertory to God: how I love him for his great bounty."

I am very much excited about our ice cream social for Charlie's education fund. Wonder if many will be here? I have made arrangements for 100 gallons of ice cream, but if we need more, it will be shipped down in time for the second table. Remember it is 15 cents a saucer, although we will take 10 cents if we can't get more. Send on your orders for reserved seats. August 3 is the time; and I am the man who keeps the door, and I don't give back any change. I think the tables will be spread in the yard, with Chinese lanterns among the trees getting baggy at the edges, you know. You'd better not eat much before you get here; it's 25 cents for two saucers, and I hope a good many will send a second dish to find their first, as Shakespeare says,—or something like that. This is the last chance I will get to say a word about this grand affair Saturday week—don't forget it.

Bentonville, Ark.

Mamma's Sermon.

Janet's mamma preached her a sermon: "Once there was a little boy who every morning asked his father to keep the bees from hurting him. Then he went straight away and played with their hives. Of course that little boy got stung. He did not try to help his father do as he asked."

"But mamma," said Janet, "I don't think that's any sermon, it hasn't a text."

And then mamma drew her little girl close and said: "You are the text of the sermon. Janet, dear, this morning you knelt down by your bed and prayed the Heavenly Father: 'Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.' Ever since, it seems to me, you have been trying hard not to do God's will. You have been cross with everyone about; you have twice minded me so slowly that it was hardly minding at all. Do you really think that is the kind of little girl it is God's will for you to be?

And Janet kissed mamma, and said: "I never had a sermon all my own before; I'll have to try hard to remember it."—Ex.

A Boy's Epigram.

Mrs. Russell Sage taught school in her youth in Philadelphia, and a Philadelphia woman who was once her pupil said the other day:

"I remember Miss Slocum, as she was then called—a very intelligent, cheerful, industrious young lady, and a great favorite with all of us.

She had a way of hammering home an idea with an apt anecdote that we girls enjoyed hugely.

"One day, in impressing on us the importance of perserverance, she said that she knew a little boy who was a remarkably fine skater.

"She watched the youngster, one winter afternoon, do the front and back roll, the grapevine, the glide and other feats of tremendous difficulty, and finally, overcome with enthusiasm, she patted him on the back and said:

"'How on earth at your age, did you learn to skate so magnificently?'

"'By getting up every time I fell down,' was the boy's simple answer."

An Old and Well-tried Remedy

OUR ANNUAL SUMMER SALE

OF GOOD BOOKS AT REDUCED PRICES IS NOW IN PROGRESS

That the price is reduced does not mean that the subject matter of these books is no longer of current interest, or that there ever was a large profit in the original price. But it is among the inevitables of the book business that there should be some left overs,—books as good as new, but too few to insert in our catalogue, or neglected in our advertising and needing to again be brought into merited prominence, or in the process of the suns having especially to do with these junctures of time and thought.

We find ourselves in possession of a great variety of books that ought to be distributed among church studies and home libraries instead of reposing in our storehouse.

These reduction prices are an earnest of our desire to scatter their light.

—The stem-wind and stem-set watch we are giving bright boys and girls for two new subscriptions to this paper or for four to "Our Young Folks," is giving fine satisfaction.

—A New Jersey Presbyterian synod has ordered 3,500 copies of G. L. Wharton's tract on "The Christian Use of the Tithe System." This is a wand our own congregations might use to draw forth from reluctance a stream of golden wealth.

—We have received another consignment of alligator skin effect ladies' handbags. They are 5½ x 11½ inches. In cities they retail at $1. Through August and September we will give one of these as a premium for two new subscribers to this paper, or for four to "Our Young Folks."

—There are many great gospel sermons among those sermonic volumes we are advertising in our Summer Clearance Sale. Errett, Caskey, Atwater, Lobingier, Trible, Reynolds and Updike were mighty men in the Scriptures in their day. Prices range from 30 cts to 60 cts, through August and September.

—In a personal note, Brother Waite says: "The inclosed voluntary testimonial does not begin to express my enthusiastic commendation of Brother Kenner's work. He is such a true Christian gentleman it was a treat to go with him into every home upon which he called. I thank you for sending him to us." These sixty-two homes will now become vastly more helpful to the church, and they are needed. There are hundreds of our preachers who could double their church resources by following Brother Waite's example in having a trained representative place THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in practically every home in the church not now among its readers.

—The old friends continue with us with remarkable fidelity, and for this we are grateful. New ones are adding themselves to our hosts of readers in numbers that encourage us to believe that our constituency will be more than doubled by the opening of our Centennial. In addition to the singles, we have received the following new clubs during the past week:

Thayer, Kan., S. J. Phillips, minister..... 3
Chico, Cal., G. L. Lobdell, minister..... 5
Kidder, Mo., Gay L. Beauchamp, minister.....12
Milwaukee, Wis., Claire L. Waite, minister....62

—We have met with such success in sending forth moderate priced evangelists among the churches that we are pleased to add Brother David Millar, of Bell Flower, Mo., to our list. He will in part provide for his support by receiving subscriptions for the various publications of this house. By this arrangement many congregations can have the advantage of an excellent evangelist's services that could not otherwise have such a season of refreshing, as he will bring. Churches desiring this successful evangelist's help may write either us or him.

This message is from the ever young and always increasing evangelist, James Small: "I want to tell you that the books you recommended and sold to me, coming through St. Louis recently, are great; 'Science and Christianity, and The Bible, the Word of God,' by F. Bettex; 'Listening to God,' by Hugh Black; 'The Inspiration of our Faith,' by John Watson, are the greatest books I think I have read in twenty years. I beg all our preachers that can afford it, to secure these books and read them. Yours, free to accept truth anywhere. James Small."

—We will send Torrey's Anecdotes and Illustrations, bound in strong paper, for 35 cents.

—The Empire of Love, by W. J. Dawson, places every reader under a spell of love that is ennobling and of fascinating delight. $1.00. If you read it you will thank us for recommending it to you.

—The Marks of a Man, by Robert E. Speer. The true, manly man is outlined by the author with a vividness and prophetic discrimination that is almost startling. Those bearing these marks may well be believed to be the "Sons of God." It costs $1, but will be worth a fortune to many.

—The Industrial Conflict, by Samuel G. Smith, $1. The author is of the Department of Sociology of the State University of Minnesota. Labor leaders and employers are allowed to present their own briefs. The argument is constructed on these. It is a book attracting great attention. We commend it to our readers.

—All About the Bible, tells of its origin, language, translations, canon, symbols and inspiration. It discusses its alleged errors and contradictions, its plan, science and rivals. It is a most scholarly and helpful antidote to the many works of destructive criticism now in circulation. Very low priced, at $1.

—The Second Coming of Christ, by Len G. Broughton, D. D. 50c. Few in this day need to have defended for them the doctrine of our Lord's triumphant return to the earth for whose tenantry he once died and now liveth. What is really needed is a wider proclamation of the blessed hope on terms within the spiritual and intellectual grasp of all. This book is a helpful contribution to that end.

—The Fascination of the Book, by Edgar Whittaker Work. $1.25 It is said that two-thirds or more of the members of the average Christian church do not open their Bibles oftener than once a month. This may be an extravagant statement. Do you think it is? This book is to help the people realize the charms of the book—its poetry, history, statesmanship, the power of its imagination, the courage of its men and women, the triumph of its policies and other of the fascinations of the book. The author succeeded in getting his people to read the book.

WHAT FRIENDS ARE SAYING.

—Please find enclosed $1.50, which pays for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to June, 1908, which is such a comfort and source of satisfaction that I feel I cannot dispense with it.—Mrs. C. L. Emerson.

—I was a reader of the Southern Evangelist when Brother Shelnutt sold it to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Since that time THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been a regular visitor to my home. Its pages are full of choice matter; the editorials are timely and wise, well directed from a noble mind. May the editor long live to direct many minds.—J. J. Land, Watseka, Ga.

—I am sending you $2 to apply on my CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST account. I assure you it is freely given, more so than any I have ever paid before. I wish I were able to pay for and to send THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST into every Christian home in this land, where the people are not able to pay for it themselves. I pray the good Father may continue the paper, many, many years.—W. H. Bartlett, Florence, S. C.

My Dear Brother—I have just read this week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It has always been a good paper, but this issue is fine. The articles are to the point, interesting, uplifting, encouraging, cheerful, positive teaching, and you don't have to waste an hour in finding what the writer desires to convey. Wish every home had one.—J. P. Childs, evangelist, Worthington, S. D.

Brother Will C. Kenner has just closed a most remarkably successful canvass of this congregation. We called at sixty-three homes where none of our church papers was taken, and Brother Kenner placed THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in sixty of these. Brother Kenner's work is educational and uplifting, and helpful both to the individual and to the church. He does not overurge the people to take the paper, but with great skill shows them the value of a religious paper and inspires them with a desire for such reading. I strongly recommend that the pastors go with Brother Kenner. It will strengthen them in their work. We are very glad he came to Milwaukee. —Claire L. Waite, Pastor Church of Christ.

COMMUNION WAFERS

That do give satisfaction. Keep indefinitely in air and are always ready for use. In one pound packages, but we advise at least four boxes in an order, as the express to you will be as cheap on four as one. The wafers are very brittle, so that we do not guarantee their safe arrival, but mark them "Handle with Care," and do our utmost to get them to you in good condition. Per pound package, not prepaid, 25 cents.

The Attitude of the Church to Labor

Congress Address

By I. J. Cahill

The Church is the visible manifestation of the kingdom of God in the world. The Church is not precisely coextensive with the Kingdom. It is, therefore, an imperfect manifestation of the Kingdom. But it is a manifestation, none the less. When men ally themselves with the cause of Jesus Christ, and have this Man to rule over them, they become citizens of the Kingdom, and, normally, members of the Church. The Lord added daily to the Church such as were being saved.

But the Church is more than the manifestation of the Kingdom; it is the agent in building up the Kingdom. It is the recruiting force. The Church was organized to usher in the Kingdom as well as to manifest it to men. Our first thought of the evangel may be of a message to reconcile the individual with God; but once that has been accomplished, immediately there is the new life of the world to be considered. No man liveth to himself alone, so that in reality one can not separate his life from that of others save only for purposes of analytical thought.

The Church, therefore, is inevitably a social force. By its ministry the spirit of Jesus Christ works along social lines. The very fact that there is a church marks out a social program for his religion. He thus utilizes the social element in human nature. Man is essentially social. The religion of Jesus Christ, as the ultimate religion for the world, can not be other than social in its organization and in its implications. The church is an arrangement for the social phase of the life of those who are followers of Jesus Christ. Now that the Church has become so large a part of our population, it becomes potentially true that the Church is society, and all social questions are church questions. The Church can not evade the responsibility if she would. If these social questions are not all the chief business of the Church, they are none the less her business. Whatever social conditions may obtain in the world, the gospel is injected into the midst of those conditions and the Church can not but have to do with them. Slavery, polygamy, intemperance, greed—with all these the Church comes in contact as they exist in the world.

To-day industrial enterprise occupies a prominent place in the life of men. With the present industrial situation the Church comes into contact. And into every situation the Church brings her gospel of the Incarnation—the good news of God's love and presence in the world. She brings, also, her call to men to love God and one another. This gospel and this call affect any social situation into which they come. They are social in their nature and in their effect.

If the present industrial order were built and operated on distinctly Christian lines, the Church would drop into this phase of present day life without a jar. The stream of religious life and that of industrial life would simply and silently coalesce, being identical.

If in business circles these sentiments were current: "Let each seek not his own but each other's welfare"; "Whosoever would be first among you, let him be your servant"; there would be no change to be wrought by the Spirit of Christ working through the Church.

Instead of this situation, however, we find the industrial condition to be one of war. Labor and capital are to too great an extent pitted against each other. A system of spies is maintained. Strikes and lockouts are the open battles in this warfare. Each side is organized to resist the encroachments of the other.

To be sure, the interests of capital and labor are one; but they have not yet been enlisted in brotherly co-operation in seeking each the other's welfare. This war is not necessary. No war is absolutely necessary. War does not inhere in the nature of things; but in the perverse nature of men. It can exist only because of human frailty or limitations. Stupidity, anger, pride, lust of power, greed, these are the defects in humanity that involve us in war. The industrial war comes not from economic necessity, but from human frailty. It is emotional rather than economic; it comes from class prejudice rather than from any necessity inhering in economic problems.

The root of the matter is in the deep distrust of one another that lurks in the hearts of men. For this reason the Church can render a positive and most valuable ministry. If economic laws, properly understood, necessitated industrial war, the Church might well hold aloof in impotent anxiety. But since the war proceeds from men, and the hearts of men, it becomes the Church's province and high privilege to render service to humanity by making possible a healing of the breach between man and man. Let it be well understood that the real, underlying cause of the hostile attitude of capital and labor is a lack of mutual trust among men, and we have a safe starting point for our thought and action. We may thus easily decide whether the Church has anything to do in the case.

Labor is restless. It is of no avail to argue that laboring men live better to-day than ever before. That is true, but it does not meet the case. It is not easy for him to keep constantly in mind, as the basis of comparison, his brother workingmen of the previous generation, whom he can not see, when all the time before him is the possibility of the easier comparison with wealth flaunted in his face by the capitalist who is his contemporary. Men are more intelligent than ever before, and man's intelligence demands satisfaction, as well as his stomach. Men earn more, but also they know more and feel more; therefore they desire more. Their increased earning capacity has not kept pace with growing intelligence and desire. Therefore labor is restless.

Capital is restless. It does not suffice to become rhetorical about our wonderful prosperity and the busy hum of industry. The business man knows that 90 per cent of men who undertake to do business for themselves fail. He may be prosperous this year, but he knows his competition is remorseless, and that eternal vigilance is the price of his economic liberty. Large dividends this year are no guaranty of security for the years to come. The warfare of competition, the siege of strikes and boycotts may transform his prosperity into grim want in a day, and give the man of success a taste of bitter failure.

This unrest looms large in men's lives to-day. Men feel most keenly the unsettledness of the industrial situation. It is the absorbing theme. The air is full of it. The public mind throbs with it. It will not down. It will be heard. It must be settled, and it must be settled right.

Socialism hesitates not to prescribe, in elaborate detail, for the full settling of this problem. It finds that every social question roots back in the industrial problem. Wealth and poverty, intemperance, immorality, all are traced to the industrial problem. It is wholly materialistic and can be settled on that basis. It conceives that by some strange sort of psychological alchemy the proper materialistic distribution of wealth will render men, now veritable

Mark Twain in England.

Never again let it be said that the English can not see a joke or that they do not appreciate American humor. Mark Twain has received the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters from Oxford. In addition to that he has been practically the guest of all England for a week or two, and one prominent English writer, commenting upon the cordiality of his reception, says that, if a general vote could be taken for the most popular man in England to-day, the honor would unquestionably go to Mark Twain. He attended the king's garden party at Windsor where, it appears, half the notable men and women in the country fairly tumbled over each other in their eagerness to meet and do honor to the distinguished humorist. The Pilgrims' Club, of London, gave him a dinner which was attended by a multitude of distinguished men. The papers have heaped praises upon him, and the general public, so far as it has had opportunity to express itself, has shown not only a sincere admiration but an almost personal affection for our Mark. There are not many humorists who succeed in getting themselves taken as seriously as Mark Twain. People laugh at his jokes, but they do not laugh at him. He is a humorist, never a buffoon. Great men of letters have been humorists before now, but never did any other writer who was humorist through and through attain so high a rank in literature. He is to-day probably the foremost American man of letters. And in addition to the appreciation of his writings, the world has not forgotten that fine and heroic honor which moved him to shoulder a great debt only a few years ago, when he was already passing into old age, and pay off by years of hard work an obligation which he could legally and honestly have escaped. The editor of London "Punch" pays this tribute to the guest of the Pilgrims' Club:

Pilot of many Pilgrims since the shout
"Mark Twain!"—that serves you for a deathless sign—
On Mississippi's waterway rang out
Over the plummet's line—

Still where the countless ripples laugh above
The blue of halcyon seas, long may you keep Your course unbroken, buoyed by a love
Ten thousand fathoms deep!

A New Science.

The science of games has been practically created by a work recently published by Mr. Stewart Culin on "The Games of the American Indians." The study of games has never before been taken seriously. Mr. Culin, who is a distinguished ethnologist, not only takes it seriously, to the extent of nearly 900 pages and 1,200 illustrations, but compels the scientific world to take it seriously as well. He shows, by an exhaustive study of the games of all the different tribes of Indians and a comparison with the games of other primitive peoples, that aboriginal games are very much the same the world over, that they have originally a religious significance, being primarily designed as a means of gaining the favor of the gods to avert sickness or other calamity or to secure good harvests, success in war or in the chase or other good fortune, and that the identity of the games and the myths lying back of them in different parts of the world is an indication of an inter-tribal and even inter-racial relationship even farther reaching than that which may be traced by the study of languages or physical characteristics. Let it not seem incredible that games are originally religious observances. Take the game of dice, for example. Every tribe and nation has some sort of dice with which to cast lots. The use of them is at first a means of ascertaining the divine will. The successor of Judas was chosen by lot. But casting lots (or shaking dice, which is the same thing) invariably comes to be a mere gambling game, for amusement or gain. The case is the same with regard to athletic games. The Olympian games of the old Greeks were purely religious in their purpose and spirit, as were also the games held in honor of the dead. Modern football and track athletics have a different motive. And naturally among the most primitive of contemporary tribes one finds the best preservation of the primitive religious significance of games. Mr. Culin's contribution, which appears as the twenty-fourth annual report of the Bureau of Ethnology, a department of the Smithsonian Institute, means, if not quite the creation of a new science, at least the addition of an interesting and important branch to the science of ethnology.

A New Stroke at the Trusts.

The federal government, through the department of justice, has commenced an action against the tobacco trust on the ground that it is an illegal combination controlling a large majority of the trade in tobacco throughout the country. The novel feature of the case is the petition to the court to appoint a receiver to manage the business of the trust until its business can be so readjusted that the constituent companies can operate without violating the Sherman anti-trust act. This is a new procedure in the anti-trust fight. The newspaper comments have been extremely varied, the majority perhaps unfavorable to the administration's plan. So far as the objections are based upon the alleged illegality of the proposed method, we are content to wait for the court to decide. The layman in law is in perilous business when he undertakes to determine offhand what is constitutional and what is unconstitutional. So far as the objections are based upon sympathy for the trust and its stockholders, we give them but little weight. The tobacco companies which constitute the trust have attorneys sufficiently able to advise them whether or not their combination is illegal. If they are guilty of unlawful combination they are doubtless aware of the fact and deserve little sympathy. If they have preferred to conduct their business illegally on the chance of not getting caught, they can not complain of injustice if the management of their business is taken out of their hands and given to a receiver appointed by the court. They have had their chance. The most weighty objection to the procedure is that it imposes upon the government a burden of responsibility which may become crushingly heavy if the plan is logically followed out. If receivers are appointed to take charge of all businesses which are suspected of operating contrary to the Sherman act, we shall very soon have government control, if not government ownership, on a vast scale. Government ownership of railroads is a sufficiently bold proposition to cause careful men to hesitate long before venturing to approve it. But government control of the tobacco business, the meat business, the oil business, and the dozen other businesses which are equally open to the same charge of combination, will be a fearsome undertaking. It will mean a degree of government control of industry which no government has ever yet ventured to assume. It may be a necessary measure, but it is an application of surgery to the disease, and major operation at that.

Municipal Ownership.

An extended series of investigations of the workings of municipal ownership in those cities in which it has been most thoroughly tried has issued in a report by Prof. John R. Commons, of the University of Wisconsin, and Mr. J. W. Sullivan. These men, both competent and dispassionate students of the problem, have been acting as representatives of the National Civic Federation. The results are not encouraging to those who have believed that they saw in municipal ownership a way out of the corruption and inefficiency which have marked the administration of many of the public service corporations. Municipal ownership does not put the corrupt politician out of business, nor does it work his resignation. It gives him a larger prize to work for. It makes his game more difficult perhaps, but it increases the stake for which he plays. It complicates the relations between local politicians and the labor unions, and in some cases has resulted in practically handing the city government over to the leaders of organized labor to manage for their own interests, or at best for the interests of their unions. The facts presented by the report are too many and too varied to support a definite and final conclusion to the whole argument, one way or the other, but their general effect is to bring into clearer light the difficulties and possible dangers attendant upon such an extension of the functions of municipal government.

Leopold and the Congo.

There is a possibility, which is gradually growing into a probability, that the Congo Free State will soon cease to be the personal and private possession of King Leopold and will become a dependency of Belgium. A tentative agreement has been reached between the Belgian government and the Congo government (that is, Leopold) outlining in a general way the conditions upon which the transfer is to be made. It is to be hoped that the deal will go through. It would be impossible to make a worse arrangement than the one now in force. Belgium, naturally enough, is tired of having its name connected with the discussion of the abuses in the Congo for which it is in no way responsible, but for which it can not help appearing in a way responsible since the king of Belgium is absolute monarch of the Congo Free State. Belgium is an enlightened and civilized country with a decent government, none of which qualities—enlightenment or decency—can be predicated of Leopold. If the transfer is made the natives of the Congo Free State ought to celebrate the date as Independence Day.

Keeping on the Main Track.

An esteemed pastor of one of our college churches sends us the following excerpt from a personal letter written by a student who has been out of school for a year. In sending the extract to us, the pastor says: "Does he not voice the minds of many fine young Christian men who have the passion of righteousness upon them and would like to take the Church for their means of helping men? It ought to shame some of our theological Dons." With this introduction we give the excerpt from the letter as follows:

I wonder how long it will take the Christian world to learn to sink personal likes and dislikes for the welfare of the church, to close the switches and keep on the main track, to unearth bigotry in the present generation as effectually as we can three centuries after, to know only Christ and him crucified and to find unity on essentials, liberty on non-essentials, and love in all things. I have been too busy to get drawn into the fight, and had no heart for it. When I see Christians in conflict, I can imagine that I hear the devil laughing. Certainly if we fought him as seriously as each other, there would be more stars in our crowns. And I believe that our armor would fit better too. The whole thing is to be deplored. There is altogether too much brain and brawn going to waste. There is fault on both sides. On the one side there is medieval intolerance and bigotry, on the other an unspoken, but felt spirit of pre-eminence, an idolizing of intellectual self, that is grating on the nerves; on both sides there is love for the cause, and for ideals. Surely God intended this great zeal and learning for nobler things than strife and unavailing dogma.

We are glad to believe that the sentiment of this young minister, as expressed above, is the sentiment of a large number of young men who are preparing to serve their age and generation through the ministry of the gospel. It is a great thing for a young man to be able to see what is "the main track" and to "close the switches" that lead from that into side issues. As this young man sees the matter, "the main track" is "to know only Christ and him crucified, and to find unity on essentials, liberty on non-essentials and love in all things." To get sidetracked from this supreme issue, and to get in conflict with each other over differences of opinion, is to commit a blunder over which Satan might well laugh while angels weep.

What the world needs is help. The keynote of Christianity is service. Christ came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. He who is in closest sympathy with Christ, and has most of his spirit, and shares most largely in his life, is best equipped for ministering to the manifold needs of our sinning and suffering race. What if there be differences of opinion among us, growing out of our training, temperament, education and environment? Let us have charity for each other, while in loyalty to a common Lord we go forward to do his work in the world. It is only through Christ's name that the demons of intolerance, bigotry, intellectual pride and selfishness can be cast out, and these must be exorcised before we are meet for the Master's use.

The Spiritual Presence of God.

Perhaps one of the most difficult conceptions for the modern mind to realize is that of the actual spiritual presence of God in our lives and in our history to-day. By a strange law of our being it seems far easier to believe that God was present in the life of men two or three thousand years ago, than to believe in his presence with us in our own day and time. And yet how fundamental is this conception of God as immanent in the life of men and in the history of the world to-day to any spiritual and vital religion! We have had occasion more than once to call the attention of our readers to the fact that the New Testament doctrine of the Holy Spirit working in man is but the religious side of the same truth which, on its scientific side, is known as the immanence of God. In a volume of sermons by the late Dr. John Watson (Ian Maclaren), *published since his death, which we heartily commend to all our ministerial readers, in a sermon on "The Immanence of God" the able author sees the truth we have mentioned and states it thus: "We are living in this more genial day and are under the dispensation of the Holy Ghost. There are many in the Church, and more outside the Church, who regard the doctrine of the Holy Ghost as little else than a speculative dogma of theology, or a pretty conceit of the mystics. What it really means is the spiritual presence of God throughout all matter, all thought, all life, and especially in the souls of men. With this presence the conception of God is crowned and completed. For God is first to be thought of as the source of all things, the Eternal Father, and then as the active power that creates everything, the Eternal Son, and, lastly, as the life which pervades the universe—one Holy Trinity, All-wise, Almighty and All-loving."

It is a lamentable truth, as the author states, that there are many in the Church who regard the doctrine of the Holy Spirit "as little else than a speculative dogma of theology or a pretty conceit of the mystics." And yet how vital this truth was seen to be in the mind of Christ is clearly brought out in those last discourses with his disciples. A little reflection will show what a new face this doctrine of the Holy Spirit puts upon Christianity and all our thought of God and duty. It is not enough that we have God over us and above us, the transcendent God, nor Immanuel, God with us, in the person of his Son; we must have God within us as the Holy Spirit before "the conception of God is crowned and completed." As the author says, "If God be outside of us, then our moral sense is unreliable as an instrument of duty and of knowledge. We have no right to think of conscience itself

As God's most intimate presence in the soul
And his most perfect image in the world.

The eternal is absolutely beyond our reach, and our reason is worthless for the study of truth."

As there is no truer test of any religion than its conception of God, so there is no higher test of the adequateness of our conception of God than this view of the Holy Spirit, a God within us, making real to our thoughts, our conscience, and our imagination the great facts and truths of revelation, and especially revealing the glory of Christ as Savior and Lord. The Unitarian conception of God has robbed many in the Church of the richness and fullness of Christ's teaching concerning the Holy Spirit, and has given them a lame and inadequate view of God and the soul's relation to him. To this fact, we are persuaded, must be traced the lack of that vital piety and vigor of Christian character which is seen in the lives of so many professed Christians. Nothing is more needed in the Church to-day than a careful and conscientious restudy of Christ's teaching on the subject of the Holy Spirit, as a necessary preparation for the great tasks that are now confronting us as followers of Christ. We have not fully accepted Christ until we have accepted his teaching concerning the Paraclete whom he was to send to his disciples to carry on in them to its full completion the work which he had begun.

The distinction which Dr. Watson does not point out, as it does not, perhaps, come within the special phase of the subject that he was considering, is the much closer relation which the Holy Spirit sustains to the obedient believer than he does to the world. His mission to the world is to convince it of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment; but his mission to the Church and to each individual Christian is to comfort, strengthen, and enlighten, thus completing, in the process of sanctification, the work which was begun in conversion. As it was the work of Christ to reveal the Father, so it seems to be the special mission of the Holy Spirit to reveal Christ to the Christian, in an ever-enlarging view of his greatness, of his grace, and of his glory. This enlarging view of Christ, which is the work of the Holy Spirit, brings with it higher ideals of righteousness and of character, and, therefore, makes possible that spiritual growth and development which is the end and aim of the gospel.

Five hundred saloons have been put out of business during the past year in Wyandotte county, Kansas, and the assistant attorney general of the state says that he is assured that the municipality was never in a more prosperous condition.

Notes and Comments.

A brother writes: "I was struck with your reference to Romanes having been sidetracked into skepticism in his early life, by attributing the creation of all things to secondary causes, and his having come to see, later in life, that behind these secondary causes was the great First Cause. Strange that so able a mind should have been even temporarily led astray by such a mistake." The mistake is only possible to one who has allowed himself to dwell too exclusively in the realm of physics and to become so absorbed in material things as not to perceive and appreciate the invisible and the spiritual. To a believer it is all transparent enough that

"Back of the loaf is the snowy flour;
And back of the flour the mill;
And back of the mill is the wheat and the shower,
And the sun and the Father's will."

In "The Sunday Watchman," of St. Louis, a Catholic organ edited by Rev. D. S. Phelan, the editor quotes a statement from "The Catholic Citizen" to the effect that, "If all the Irish-Americans with a jail record, in the saloon business, would become Methodist preachers or temperance evangelists, we should not bewail the miraculous transformation." That would seem to be pretty strong Roman Catholicism, but Editor Phelan goes one better and says: "We should much rather be one of Mr. Desmond's bad saloon keepers than a teacher of such infernal theology as the above." That is sectarianism pure and simple, preferring the dogmas and ecclesiasticism of the Roman church above morality and spiritual religion.

In the same issue of "The Watchman" the editor calls attention to the fact that the Pope has condemned the modern school of exegetics in the Roman Catholic church in this country. The editor rejoices in this fact, and referring to these modern theologians in the church, says:

"What gives the little fellows 'tomickache' is the obstacles they encounter in their historical and scientific inquiries. They are in despair; and throwing up their hands, they ask if Rome will permit the presence of scientists within her pale. We should say not. Science stops at the gate of the sanctuary. After that faith must rule supreme. This is an elementary proposition, and on that the earliest fathers insisted. The trouble with our young Catholic exegetists is, they do not say their prayers. Their masses are notoriously disedifying."

We can well understand that honest and scientific theologians in the Catholic church might well feel like throwing up their hands in despair at "the obstacles they encounter in their historical and scientific inquiries." The idea that scientists should be permitted to do their work within the pale of the Roman Catholic church seems preposterous to Editor Phelan. "Science stops at the gate of the sanctuary." That is, there is no room in the Roman Catholic church for scientific inquiry and the orderly classification of facts in religion, nor in natural phenomena. And yet this church is doing business in the twentieth century!

The recent death of Dr. T. T. Eaton, editor of "The Western Recorder" (Baptist), of Louisville, removes one of the prominent leaders among the Baptists of the South. Dr. Eaton represented the conservative wing of the Baptists, and was a man of deep convictions, and was outspoken in defense of what he believed to be the truth. While we do not think he was the wisest leader for the Baptists of our time, in the tasks which confront them, he was a man of rugged honesty and of acknowledged Christian character and ability, whose departure is widely lamented by his brethren, and who had the respect even of those who opposed his views.

The liquor traffic has received another backset from a recent decision of Judge Pollock of the United States Circuit Court, revoking the mandatory order he had issued June 1, compelling the express companies doing business in Kansas to accept and carry C. O. D. shipments until the question at issue might be presented to his court in proper form. In his decision Judge Pollock says: "It is clear that express companies are under no obligation or duty in common law to engage in C. O. D. carriage of goods, but that the obligation imposed to collect the purchase price of the article shipped is an obligation that must rest in contract, and not in an obligation imposed by law." Of course, the brewers are not satisfied with this decision, and declare their purpose to carry the matter into the Supreme Court.

T. W. Grafton, pastor of our great church at Anderson, Ind., has in a striking way made it clear to the citizens of that town that its Sunday closing law is not being rigidly enforced. A number of city officials were present by invitation when the minister spoke as follows:

"I want to show you that really dry fellows do not need to leave the city to get a drink. They all know when, where and how they can get liquor on Sunday. I have taken occasion to do some investigating and I have discovered some strange conditions. It is possible to get liquor even if the front and back doors are locked and barred. There are cellarways, blind tigers, hidden pathways, next door entrances, skeleton keys to upstairs rooms, and the fellow who gets next need not go dry."

In proof of which Brother Grafton produced a bottle of beer purchased within a stone's throw of the city police headquarters.

Of course this method of attack caused a stir. Brother Grafton did not hesitate to say who was to blame and especially he charged the churches, presumably because they have failed to insist on the observance of the law. We understand, from a newspaper telegram, that Brother Grafton was fined $25 because he refused to tell the court just where the beer had been purchased. More will come of this case, as it has, we understand, been appealed. Brother Grafton's method of fighting the evil of law-laxity is perhaps not the one usually to be employed. But he, with his fighting ability and a great church behind him, can perhaps accomplish more in this way than by any other.

"Strolling players" sounds better than "strolling ministers." The former get more gold, but the latter fewer church members by their constant travel.

In this connection it may be worth while to listen to a discerning foreigner who has come to live among us. Hugh Black, one of the most brilliant of young Scotch preachers, has been living in this country about a year, and had, prior to this residence, visited us several times. He has been expressing himself about American ministers. He thinks that the short pastorates, which he deplores, are due to superficial knowledge on the part of the preachers. While they are "brighter and keener" than their brothers over the sea, they are "not so profound." "They know too many things" and not enough of the one thing, the foundation. The result is that the pastor soon loses his grip on his church and is compelled to move on.

It is a poor church that can not send one member to the convention.

We have never favored the bill-board ugliness. But as long as there are bill-boards they might be utilized by those interested in righteousness. The Chicago temperance people think so and they are putting up big signs in conspicuous places, with the motto, "Whiskey Did It—That's All," and underneath an invitation to seek salvation of the Lord.

We hope to publish at an early date an issue devoted to the country church problem. Many of our brethren have special means of understanding the situation with regard to this problem and we shall welcome such co-operation as will aid us in our efforts to present any suggestions that will lead to the real building up of the country churches. Copy should reach us at once.

The "Interior" properly resents the attitude of the thoughtless maker of jibing paragraphs, who says that "the devil never takes a vacation," and then gives a list of services suspended in churches during July and August. "He will not care to state," says our contemporary, "that a church is a community affair, conditioned in its successful work on the workers of the neighborhood; that these workers are business men, housewives, shop people, and clerks of all kinds who work overtime to serve the community through the church during the year, and that they go their widely scattered summer ways, taking the church with them, simply leaving behind them the building. Most frequently the slowing up of organized church work for the heated term is a matter of self-preservation and makes for the final advance of the kingdom."

Editor's Easy Chair.

Pentwater Musings.

For several years the United States government has been engaged in connecting two oceans by digging a canal, and the task is likely to continue for several years to come. But during the past few days we have been engaged in an enterprise of connecting two lakes—Lake Michigan in front and Lake Pentwater in the rear a half mile distant. Last night we finished the job. It is not a connection by canal, but by a pathway which we have surveyed and constructed through the wilderness. At points it required some engineering skill to zigzag the path along the hillside so as to avoid making the grade too steep. At places we resorted to digging a stairway up a steep place, instead of building one of lumber—an invention which we will not patent until we see how well it lasts. While this task has involved considerable toil, it is, after all, a fascinating kind of work to be pioneering a way through primeval woods, across hills and ravines, which thousands of feet are to travel in the years to come. From the highest point along the path, on the crest of the ridge that separates the two lakes there are views that rival any that we ever saw in Switzerland or Wales. Looking to the northeast Lake Pentwater lies out before you its full length, with all its bays and inlets clearly marked, gleaming in the sunlight like a gem in a glorious emerald setting. Directly to the south you have a view stretching far away over a seeming wilderness of green trees, whose tops are below you, rimmed in the far distance by a blue ridge that stands up against the horizon. To the west rolls Lake Michigan as far as the eye can reach toward the setting sun. The object of this pathway through the woods is to furnish a direct route to our new boathouse which has just been completed on the little lake, near the northeast corner of Garrison Park.

This boathouse, built on piles driven in the lake, is large enough to accommodate five large rowboats, and can easily be elongated so as to accommodate a still larger number when necessary. It is securely built, is kept under lock and key, and furnishes not only a secure anchorage for the rowboat, but a safe place of deposit for oars, cushions, rudder, sails (for we sail occasionally when the wind is favorable), and for our fishing tackle. A good rowboat is essential to the enjoyment of a place like Pentwater and a boathouse is essential to the safety of your boat and other belongings. Our boathouse fairly divides the distance between our cottage and the village, so that we go half way by land and half by water, giving an agreeable variety to the trip. We shall open up other paths and roadways through the Park during the summer, making it possible for our friends who may visit us to get a better idea of the beauties of the place than they could otherwise have. We have an Irishman assisting us in this work. The other day we said to him, "Hurley, you know Fremont gained great celebrity as a 'pathfinder,' but you and I are pathmakers." "Sure," said he, "we've got him beat, haven't we?" So this enterprise of pathmaking, together with the grading we have done about the cottage, has given us opportunity of physical labor which we have mixed freely with our literary work. The Easy Chair has discovered that there is no promoter of sleep equal to physical toil, and we recommend it to all victims of insomnia. If matters were so arranged that every man could do a stint of physical labor each day, it would be a healthier and happier world.

But our Easy Chair readers must not suppose that "The Pioneer" household give themselves up wholly to work, either literary or physical, for the sake of resting. We manage to work in a little sport between times which serves the purpose of dessert after the regular diet of toil. One day during the past week we took an afternoon off, the whole household of us, and rowed up the lake, not only to its extremity but we followed up the stream that makes the lake for a half mile or more. Near the mouth of the lake we had paused long enough to catch all the fish we needed and then we went on an exploring expedition up the stream whose pent-up waters form Lake Pentwater. It is a curious geological fact that all the towns and summer resorts along the east shore of Lake Michigan, where there are inland lakes, have been formed in the same way. The water courses flowing into these lakes have been obstructed at their mouths, during the centuries past, by the sand blown in by the prevailing winds from the west. These streams thus choked at their mouths, have backed up and formed lakes. In modern times channels have been cut at most places, connecting the small lake with Lake Michigan, thus forming a splendid harbor for boats, and this has made the towns and summer resorts possible. It is a significant fact that no streams on the west side of the lake are thus obstructed by the sand; hence geologists account for these sand dunes on the eastern coast, and these lakes as well, by the prevailing winds which, during the remote past, have reared this remarkable range of sand hills that characterize this eastern coast. It is one of the providential agencies which have conspired to make this eastern shore favorite summer resort grounds from Michigan City on the south to the Straits of Mackinac on the north.

But we were sidetracked from an account of that cruise up Pentwater creek, by a geological dissertation. We had an idea we might strike a bass up that winding stream, and had prepared an artificial minnow for that purpose, but we had not gone far until the ladies of the party began to discover white water lilies blooming in all the perfection of their beauty in the rushes along the shore of the stream. The picture of one of these as a frontispiece on the cover of "Everybody's Magazine" for August, is not more perfect than those which we found growing in profusion along the banks of this stream, showing that not many boats had penetrated so far as we had gone. This, of course, put an end to fishing. Any woman that wouldn't prefer a white water lily to a bass would be abnormal, and we must confess to an enjoyment not only of the beauty of the water lilies but of the delight of the young ladies and the matron of the household, at the discovery of these exquisite flowers, and the gathering of the same. Not until more than two score of these beauties had been gathered were they content to return down the stream to find a suitable place for landing where we could rest from our labors and partake of our supper. A splendid place was found around the bend of the lake, under the shade of an oak where we, with keen appetites, partook of a bounteous feast. After this repast we launched our vessel again and rowed down the lake to another point where we landed and gathered a supply of ferns and birch bark until our boat was well laden with the spoils of the trip. It was a delightful ride homeward over a glassy lake reflecting the golden light of the setting sun, and we made a most picturesque procession as we marched homeward, by way of the clubhouse, laden with fish, ferns and flowers—the trophies of our afternoon expedition.

Few things are more awe-inspiring than a summer storm. Last evening, after what would be called a warm day for this latitude, there appeared, on the northwestern horizon, a dark cloud which seemed to be advancing over the lake, against a strong southwest wind. We sat upon the veranda and watched its steady advance while the lightning flashed incessantly, lighting up its dark bosom and revealing the lake agitated by the approaching storm. Suddenly the wind shifted to the northwest and then the storm descended upon us with all its majesty and power. A fiercer rain storm we have never witnessed along this coast, and the tall pines bent before the fury of the blast. In an hour the storm had passed and the stars were shining in the sky. There was a lull for a few moments in which there was scarcely enough breeze to stir a leaf, and then a strong northwest breeze set in, which kept the lake roaring and the pines singing all the night. This morning the lake presents a scene of indescribable grandeur, the great white-crested waves clapping their hands in glee, with nearly all the colors of the rainbow reflected on the surface. The "Kansas," which was due to arrive at 7, came by this port three hours late, but on account of the roughness of the sea did not enter the channel and will land its Pentwater passengers, no doubt, at Ludington twelve miles above. We are anticipating a number of new arrivals for August, including the Moores, of Columbia, our Assistant Editor, for a few days outing, W. W. Dowling and G. L. Snively, of the Christian Publishing Company, the Arthurs and Stows, of Grand Rapids, the Jennings, of Detroit, etc., to all of whom we extend a cordial welcome.

A Pastoral Letter* By Cephas Shelburne

You are now a Christian. Take this letter of advice and instruction from your pastor.

Understand what you have done.

Know what you must yet do.

First.—You have become a Christian.

Be assured of this so that you may never doubt it. This is the way you became a Christian:

1. You believed on the Lord Jesus Christ. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." (John 3:36.) This faith purified your heart. "And put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith." (Acts 15:9.)

2. And led you to repent. "Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be ye baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Acts 2:38.) "And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." (Acts 17:30.) Repent means to turn. You turned from sin to good; from the world to the Church. Turning,

3. You confessed Jesus Christ. "Whosoever therefore shall confess Me before men, him shall I confess before my Father which is in Heaven." (Matt. 10:32.) You did this "'with your mouth,' before men, believing with the heart." (Romans 10:9, 10.)

4. Now you "showed your faith by your works." "Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works. Shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works." (Jas. 2:18.) And proved your love—your heart right—by your obedience. "If ye love me keep my commandments." (John 14:15.) After your heart was purified by faith and you turned to do right, and confessed Jesus before men, the first "commandment" was, to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, Acts 2:38, and you obeyed.

Now your heart, your purpose and your life being changed, the proof of which is your obedience in baptism, you were brought by your baptism "into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." (Matt. 28:19.)

Into the Kingdom (Church) of God. "Jesus answered, Verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit, he can not enter the Kingdom of God." (John 3:5.) (To be born—begotten—of the Spirit is to believe. The Spirit has made you believe by the gospel preached to you.)

Into Christ, "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into His death?" (Romans 6:3.)

"Put on Christ" also. "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal. 3:27.)

Being "in Christ" you are a "new creature," "Therefore if any man be in Christ he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold all things are become new." (2 Cor. 5:17.) It brought you to the promise of Jesus, "shall be saved." (From past sins). "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16:16.)

With the assurance that you are in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, in Christ, in the Kingdom (Church) of God, a new creature, have the remission of sins, and gift of the Holy Spirit, you know you are a Christian, a Child of God.

A word of caution: Many teach that forgiveness and the Holy Spirit come with signs and feelings. This is not taught in the Bible, nor to be expected. You know you have forgiveness and the gift of the Holy Spirit because it is promised. Acts 2:38. And your evidence is just as strong and as lasting as the word of God. Trust God's word without a doubt.

Now you are a Christian. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is." (1 John 3:2.)

Saved from past sins, Mark 16:16, but not saved in heaven.

The crown is yet to be won, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." (Rev. 2:10.)

Second.—What you must yet do.

Here are some rules to observe:

1. Learn to say no when sinners entice thee. "If sinners entice thee, consent thou not." (Prov. 1:10.)

2. Read some in the Bible every day.

3. Pray in secret every day.

4. Attend, if you can, all the meetings of the Church.

5. Be a worker in the Church.

One duty must be especially urged: Never let anything you can control keep you from the Lord's house on the Lord's day when the Lord's Supper is to be observed. Jesus said: "Do this in remembrance of me." (Luke 22:19.) And the apostles evidently taught the disciples to do this on the first day of every week. "And upon the first day of the week when the disciples came together to break bread. Paul preached unto them." (Acts 20:7.) Be watchful and prayerful against sin and temptation. When you do sin we (Christians) have an advocate with the Father." "And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous." (1 John 2:1.) When you know you have sinned, you must "repent and pray God." "Repent therefore, of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee." (Acts 8:22.) "Confess your sin," "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." (1 John 1:9.) Ask the Father, in the name of Jesus, to forgive. "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." (John 14:14.) He who has never been a Christian finds forgiveness as you did at first by believing, repenting, confessing Jesus, and being "baptized into Christ." The Christian finds forgiveness by repenting, confessing his sins and asking the Father, in the name of the Son, to forgive; and his assurance is not in signs and feelings, but in the word of God. God has promised and therefore it is true. Do not expect any sign or feeling, but believe His word and feel secure. Have a Bible of your own. Write on the fly leaf under your name the place and date of your baptism and by whom baptized. Keep your Bible in your room and always in sight. Wear His name. (See Acts 11:26; 1 Peter 4:16.) "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." (Rev. 2:10. See Luke 6:38).

Practice the grace of giving. Paul says: "No covetous man shall inherit the Kingdom of God." Give regularly and often. Lay by in store as God hath prospered you; and when the basket is passed give it willingly, freely and cheerfully. "Give, and it shall be given you." Follow your Bible in giving in obedience. (See 1 Cor. 16:2.)

6. Do not attempt to live in past experiences. The first entrance on a new life is usually attended with experiences more or less charming. These may not last. Spiritual life will cease to be a novelty, and that which to-day, because new, is exciting, will soon be toned down into an everyday experience. Moreover, in the first ecstacy of the heavenly life, all evil impulses are so completely smothered that the young Christian fondly dreams that he will never know anything but good; but after these extraordinary feelings settle down into the ordinary, and he goes forth from delightful spiritual surroundings into a world of temptation and sin he will feel anew the power of sin's enchantments, and will find a serious battle on hand between good and evil. He will need—nay, will be compelled—to seek knowledge and wisdom and strength to keep on his way.

7. Spiritual desires grow by feeding. They must be fed and fostered or they will perish. We are therefore exhorted to feed on the unadulterated milk of the Word, that we may grow thereby. Form at once the habit of reading and studying the Word of God, and of praying. Do not be deceived by the conceit that you are strong enough in yourself to resist temptation and conquer sin. It is a fatal delusion. We must have help from God—a help that can only be available to those who keep themselves in a receptive mood by daily reading, meditation and prayer. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." It is a day fraught with danger, the day that you allow yourself to be cheated or crowded out of communion with God. Don't forget to pray.

8. Religion is a personal matter. Others may assist us, but, after all, "every man must bear his own burden." While, therefore, you may wisely appropriate the help tendered by others, do not become a spiritual imbecile or pauper by seeking to live on the charity of others. "Have salt in yourselves," said Jesus. Don't attempt to trade on borrowed capital. Religion will help you only as you make it your own. Learn to walk alone as soon as you can, so far as human help is concerned.

9. Be careful as to your associations. Duty often calls us into associations with the unbelieving and ungodly. In that case, gird yourself for the conflict and bravely meet the issue. But let your chosen friends and associates be such as shall help and not hinder you in your spiritual life. Not even all in the church will be helpful to you. Seek out such as are congenial, and such as are wiser and stronger than you. Let these be few and carefully selected.

10. While avoiding all display of your piety, let nothing tempt you to hide your faith or be false to your principles by a concealment of your religious profession. Stand up for Jesus.

11. If you are tempted into any sin or folly, do not attempt to hide it; don't wait for others to publish it. Go at once to God and confess your fault and ask forgiveness. Then make it right with any one you may have injured. Be frank and true. It is the only sure way to victory.

"My little children, these things write I unto you that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous. If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

12. All Christian virtues thrive by exercise. Put them to the test. Do not attempt the cultivation of pet virtues to the neglect of others, nor make the practice of one duty a substitute for the practice of another. Holiness is wholeness. Aim to stand "perfect and complete in all the will of God." Not prayer, nor reading, nor meditation, can be a substitute for so doing. Each has its place. Have something to do. Aim to be useful. Seek to lead some friend of yours to Christ. Be kind to the needy and distressed. Save something out of your earnings to help forward the work of the Lord. Deny yourself for the sake of doing good to others. He who is not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the word, shall be blessed in his doing. Your faith and hope and love will grow stronger by the exercise.

13. Beware of secret sins. Let them not have dominion over you. Though others may not know of them you know, and they will effectually shut out the light of God's presence. Cast out evil imaginations, or they will cast you out from the smiles of heaven. Only the pure in heart shall see God. Not what we seem to be, but what we are, settles the question as to our standing before God.

14. Take up some course of reading and study that may fit you for usefulness. Get some competent person to assist you in the choice of books. Be ambitious to be useful, and diligently prepare yourself for usefulness, both by study and benevolent activity.

15. You must endure hardness as a good soldier; 2 Timothy, 2-3. Instead of living in ease and pleasure, fine clothing, rich food, etc., God's great men are one-eyed, one-footed, one-headed veterans, covered with the scars of battle.

16. The Sunday-school ought to be especially valuable to the Christian. It is the training school in the use and the contents of the Christian's guide, the Bible.

It is the particular place where you may testify by your works.

It is the one branch of the church's activity open to all.

It is the most important of all the church's activities, because it must train the recruits to the army of God, and to a great extent it must enlist them. It is not children's work, not old people's work, not the work of the middle aged, but it is the opportunity and the privilege of all—the place to learn of the Master.

17. Let every member fall in line with the great missionary, benevolent and educational interests of the brotherhood at large. Our Lord and Master has said: "Ye are the light of the world;" "the salt of the earth" not of our own church or city. Remember the offerings as they come around and give as the Lord prospers you.

The Conflict.

18. It is a triple confederacy against (1) The World.—Evil companions and associations, deceit and dishonesty in business, love of pleasure, the saloon and the billiard hall, gaming table and club room, infidelity and evil customs, corrupt politics, bad literature; against all these Christianity has declared an irrepressible conflict.

(2) The Flesh.—The fleshy appetites and desires that war against the soul, such as drunkenness and gluttony. In the Christian, the old carnal nature is not entirely destroyed but only subdued. (See Paul, Rom. 7:21, 24. 1 Cor. 9:24). Luther said, I fear my own heart more than all the Popes and cardinals of Rome. I have in me the great Pope—self!

(3) The Devil.—The devil is the great adversary of man, the author of all evil. Leader in this rebellion, he has his agents everywhere at work. "We war not against flesh and blood but against principalities." (See Eph. 6:12, 18.)

Remember that one characteristic of a good soldier is devotion to duty. The first essential of a good soldier is not what suits my convenience, but what is my duty. "Perish discretion when it interferes with duty."—Hannah More.

"Counsel duty, not events."

Duty—it took Daniel to the lion's den. It took the three Hebrew children to the fiery furnace. It took Elijah to the desert. It took Paul to Rome, Luther to Worms, Christ to the Cross.

After awhile the reunion in heaven will come—meeting of lost ones, comrades fallen on life's battlefield, shaking hands with the general, song of triumph—the crown of life! Peace forever in a land where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. May we all take part in the reunion on Zion's battle-field at last!

Be Faithful to Your Church.

19. This is a great field and there is a great work to be done. It is the Lord's work; and to do it effectually, it becomes necessary that we join heart and hands. If our cause succeeds, we must become workers together with him. Ask yourself the question: "Am I doing what I can?" Can you not pray more, love more, give more, do more, be more faithful in attendance upon the services of the Church and in your work for the Master? Let us proceed with renewed confidence in our plea and in the great Head of the Church to hold up in this city a banner for truth. In vain will your minister stand in the pulpit and preach, hold up holy hands in prayer, and go about his pastoral visitation, unless the Church stands by to encourage, help, and hold up his hands. Pray for your pastor that he may preach the Gospel in its simplicity and power, rightly dividing the word of truth, and that it may become the power of God unto salvation; that he may study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, and that he may live before you as an humble servant of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Let us be faithful in attendance upon all the services of the church, and in the discharge of every Christian duty. Remember, you cannot expect more of the world and outside than you are willing to do yourself. Let the world take note of us that we have been with Jesus. Become the living epistle, known and read of all men. Let your pastor, and, better still, let him who is the Head over all things to the Church, say of you: "Thou doest well and faithfully whatsoever thou doest."

"The Bosira for Christ"

Brother Hensey and I have just returned from a trip to the Bosira, where we went prospecting a site for a new mission station. The work up there has developed so much that, despite the former persecution of the government and their religious advisers, the Catholics, we are gaining some ground. The government seems to be willing to grant us opportunities there now that a year ago we could not have dreamed of. At a recent conference with the Commissaire General (local governor of district), we were told that he knew of no reason why we could not get a site for another mission station. We left the next Friday at 4 a. m., and reached the site we wished for another station on Monday night, Sundaying on the way at a native village. The people turned out in crowds to welcome us, even in the driving rain, and our Christian paddlers said, in telling their experiences, "we forgot all about the aching backs and tired arms and the cold of the rain, we were so cheered." The chief of the village came down soon to meet us, and with the elders of the town, made us welcome. This is a town where our evangelists were driven out a year ago by the State and Catholics. We looked over two available sites, both with running springs of water near them, but chose the up-river one as being the high-ground, the best site. The next day we left for a tour of exploration of the contributory towns. We found that there are about fifty large, populous villages in the hinter-land of "Longa," the site picked out, and many more on the river banks.

They are all tired of Catholic despotism and hypocrisy, and welcomed us gladly. Then the new site of "Longa" has another value to us in that it lies just below the junction of the Momboyo river with the main Bosira river, which in turn empties into the Congo near Bolenge, a very strategic situation.

As Bolenge has been a basis for the development of the work done thus far, so "Longa" will be a fine basis for an even larger work up that great unevangelized region, "the regions beyond" of our work, where the name of Christ has never been uttered, save in curses by the traders, whose zeal is far ahead of the Church of Christ, be it said to her shame. We reached districts where they had never heard of the gospel before, and there are still two weeks by steamer of river where the Evangel of God has never penetrated. Our one small half-manned station in "Darkest Africa," to reach these millions of people dying in a darkness of superstition and sin you at home can but little imagine, while the traders and state are rushing men up into all these vast tracts for the rubber and ivory it produces. For years back they have covered these vast sections with rubber and ivory and gum copal sentries, who have bled the people's very life-blood and devastated many populous sections. We can not give you data, for there were never enough to even be able to leave the station for a single tour; and we have no steamer to travel with.

But now that our Lord is giving us opportunities of evangelization up there, we must arise and reach out the "bread of life" to these famishing, dying millions. Here is a great opportunity; the work at Bolenge has passed the pioneer stage and gives us encouragement for the larger work lying before us now. The State is willing to grant us a site up at "Longa," if we can assure them that a doctor will be sent there. We must not lose this fine site and strategic opening and very opportune moment for lack of a doctor! Surely there are men who are willing to give themselves to Africa. As a physician, I say most sincerely and heartily, there is no practice at home that would entice me from here. Nor are there any other fields where the gospel of healing is more needed and more readily a key to people's hearts. We must have other men as well, and the man answers twice who answers now to the "Macedonian call" of "come over and help us." The opening of a new station is going to cost means, as well as men, and those who have been interested in "Darkest Africa's" redemption and in the great results the Lord has given the little investment made will be glad of the opportunity of larger investments in this great virgin tract of land. These hundreds, yes, thousands, who are being killed yearly by the ivory and rubber raiders, besides the normal death rate, are dying in ignorance of a loving God and a personal Saviour. Brethren, you are the only ones who will ever give them this news. Men and money are needed imperatively for the great Bosira. This must be our watchword from now on, "The Bosira for Christ." Too long rapacity and mammon, the votaries of Satan, have held undisputed sway. Let us take to Bosira the startling message of Life and Love before this generation has passed away. Brethren, the next generation can not preach the gospel of eternal life to the men of our generation who need it. Shall it be said of us, as it is of the past generation, "Ye did not unto me"?

In as much as ye did it not to one of the least of these."

Yours in His glad service for "Darkest Africa," Royal J. Dye, M. D.

Nine Bosiras, who had been long interested in the gospel message, made the good confession at Longa while we were on this trip, and Sunday saw the first baptisms in the Bosira—five women and four men. Another strange sight also was given these wild peoples, the first communion of the Lord's table was held, twenty Bosira Christians, eighteen evangelist paddlers and missionaries partook. A miracle of God's love,—alien tribesmen who before fought bloody feuds, sitting in brotherly love about the sacred memorials of the Lord's great sacrifice for the world.

Alexander Campbell on Instrumental Music

By C. C. Redgrave

The brief note of Brother W. T. Moore in The Christian-Evangelist (July 4), on "A. Campbell and Instrumental Music," will receive additional interest when read in the light of Mr. Campbell's own words, here given:

"That all persons who have no spiritual discernment, taste, or relish for spiritual meditations, consolations and sympathies of renewed hearts, should call for such aid is natural. Pure water from the flinty rock has no attractions for the mere toper or wine-bibber. A little alcohol, or genuine Cogniac brandy, or good old Madeira is essential to the beverage to make it truly refreshing. So to those who have no real devotion or spirituality in them, and whose animal nature flags under the oppression of church service, I think that instrumental music would be not only a desideratum, but an essential prerequisite to fire up their souls to even animal devotion. But I presume to all spiritually-minded Christians such aids would be as a cow-bell in a concert." M. H., Series IV, Vol 1, p. 581.

Thus spoke Campbell in 1851.

In the "Millennial Harbinger" for 1864, two years before his death, he thus expresses himself (see page 127): "We confess to a fondness for good music of all kinds, and find it no offense to our feelings of piety or praise to hear the grand and majestic swell of the organ rolling forth, laden with the strains of our sacred music; yet, like Paul with respect to meats, I would rather never hear one again, than to have them interfering with the free, full, grateful, heartfelt singing of the whole congregation. Better the occasional discord of an untrained voice, and more acceptable to God, provided it bear the melody of a true and loving heart, than the sublimest swell of harmony ever uttered by the deep-throated organ."

A Dose of Don'ts for Dull Disciples

By Hugh T. Morrison

Don't tell all you know.

Don't believe everything you hear.

Don't be continually finding fault with your brethren. Turn your eyes inward once in awhile.

Don't expect perfection in any one. We are all human like yourself.

Don't encourage any one to speak evil of his neighbors. Such speaking is positively forbidden in the Scriptures.

Don't be hot to-day and cold to-morrow. Look carefully, and you will see that it is the people of an even temperament who have the greatest influence, and who are carrying the burdens of the Church.

Don't be irregular in attendance at the Lord's house. Persons who are spasmodic in attending the meetings of the church, as a rule, have very little religion or influence for good in the community.

Don't give business affairs first place in your daily life. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness" is Christ's command. Our Christianity should always have the right of way.

Don't try how little you can get along with giving to the Lord's cause. Rather try how much you can possibly give. Giving that is not felt to be a sacrifice is of little benefit to the giver.

Don't give grudgingly. Such giving, no matter how large the amount, is not acceptable to the Lord. The Lord loveth the cheerful giver.

Don't put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day. If you do, the chances are it will never be done.

Don't worry about what you can not help. Worry is an enemy to both body and soul. Christ forbids it. Do your best and leave matters in the hands of God.

Don't get so out of sorts with any fellow-being that you refuse to speak to him when you meet. A kindly, forgiving spirit is most becoming to one who proposes to be a follower of him who, in his dying moments, prayed for his murderers.

Don't allow yourself to monopolize all of the time in any company, even if you have many things to tell about yourself. They may not prove to be as interesting to your hearers as they are to yourself.

Don't be too sure that all of your ideas on the way to run a church are absolutely correct. Very wise people sometimes find out that they are mistaken in things they were very sure of.

Don't criticise too many of the mistakes of young Disciples. They need words of encouragement oftener than words of criticism. Give them time to grow. Criticism is rather a slim diet to grow upon.

Don't be overconscious about the outcome of your good deeds. Do your duty faithfully each day and leave the outcome in the hands of a loving Father. He will see to that part of it.

Don't form any cliques in the church. Remember the church is one family, and that families are not supposed to be divided up into cliques.

Don't go to church with a view to being entertained. The true preacher is God's prophet—not a stage actor—to admonish and warn you of your dangers, as well as to encourage you; therefore don't count him as an enemy because his words sometimes cut and burn.

Don't make a wry face or refuse the medicine wisdom prescribes for you at different times along through life. We all need the bitter as well as the sweet. Happy is the man who cheerfully and truthfully drinks the cup the Great Physician sees fit to press to his lips.

Notes From the Far East. By Laura DeLany Garst

The little paper, "Japan Harbinger," published in Tokyo by the mission of the Disciples, is full of thrilling interest from month to month. In clubs of ten to one address, the paper is but twenty-five cents a year. Every disciple interested in the work in Japan should have it, and those not interested would soon become so, could they see it. A recent number gives echoes from the World's Student Federation Conference, which convened in Tokyo early in April. The 160 delegates from abroad returned inspired for greater work. Over 300 Japanese workers, missionaries and teachers, were delegates. Of course, hundreds besides were present at the various simultaneous sessions, and scores of students accepted Christ. Many more will do so during the meetings which are to follow. An earnest Christian girl was asked what impressed her most during the Conference. She said: "The thing that struck me most was the modesty of the men and women who made the addresses. They were people who are doing a great work. Some of them are known the world over, not only for their Christian work, but also as leaders in science, literature, medicine, commerce, yet not one of them even hinted at his own greatness, but all magnified the Christ, and exalted him. How different in non-Christian circles, where each one would think most of winning praise for himself."

Marquis Ito gave $5.000 toward the expenses of the convention.

Mayor Ozaki of Tokyo said in his welcome address: "I can well imagine what would happen if a World's Politicians' Conference were held. The meeting would end in a regular pandemonium, each delegate trying to overreach the other, and all wrangling for their own selfish interests. Here you are assembled in perfect harmony and fellowship—you who represent over twenty different nations—and the only scene I witness is that you are all striving to do good for others in the veritable spirit of brotherhood of mankind. This is one point where you can well shame us politicians to silence, and I am glad that you have come to Japan to teach the lesson of unselfish effort for mankind."

The newspapers did their part in reporting the convention. Cablegrams from President Roosevelt, King Edward, the Crown Prince of Sweden and other royal personages were received.

"Such a picturesque audience can seldom be seen. Here were the fair-haired Scandinavians seated next to the handsome, dark-skinned Hindus; French and German sat side by side; Filipinos, Hawaiians and Koreans in foreign dress; Chinese in rich brocades and long queues; while Miss Sing, of India, in scarlet satin blouse with cream silk scarf over her head, made a dash of color. Miss Sing graduated from Calcutta University with the highest honors of her class of seventy-five, the only woman in it. Of her, the late Ex-President Harrison said, had he put a million dollars into missions, and seen but this one result, he would have considered himself amply repaid.

Mr. Yung Chi Ho was a striking figure in the assembly. He came to Japan when seventeen, studied English and other demons of greed, at once self-sacrificing branches, and after seven years returned to China and married a Chinese woman. He was secretary of the Korean Legation in Washington, D. C., subsequently was transferred to London, and received promotion as Foreign Secretary at Seoul, which position he resigned to become president of the Christian University at Penyang, Korea. In his address he said: "The watchword of the old east was 'Backward, Ho!' Let the dead bury their dead. Be fruitful, replenish the earth and subdue it. This is the message which Christianity has brought to the young men of the new east. Finally, my fellow citizens of the new east,—citizens of no mean city,—in no spirit of bombast, but with all humility, I say, forty centuries look and altruistic. Their very plea for justice is mechanical, unfeeling, inhuman. Within the past ear H. G. Wells, one of the foremost among them, has come out into the open and boldly declared for the disintegration of the family, recognizing only the individual as the basis of society. Be it said that this arises not so much from any intention of unclean licentiousness, as from the logic of an outlook upon life and an approach to its problems purely materialistic. It is coldly mechanical, unfeeling, wholly lacking in all that is warmly human.

ATTITUDE OF CHURCH TO LABOR.

Every man, laborer or capitalist, who looks at life in terms of dollars and cents, who hopes in things rather than in ideals, plays into the hands of the rank socialist. The Christian capitalist who sees no real relation between religion and business; who counts religion a thing for Sunday and the church house, and for six days in the week has for his motto the unfeeling, cold, materialistic sentiment that "business is business," is helping mightily to produce a public sentiment in which the tenets of the socialist shall thrive. He is putting a weapon in the hands of his arch enemy.

Socialism would have social regeneration proceed from below; as if humanity could lift itself by the bootstraps. It makes no provision for changing the character of the man, except to change his condition and environment. It does not recognize in man a creature with needs or desires higher than the material. It holds his mind to that level. It directs his energies on that level.

The Church offers the teachings of Jesus as the proper basis for the righting of all human conditions. It builds its hopes for humanity on the attainment of humanity in character. It labors for the development of the spiritual nature of men, believing that the Spirit of Christ in men will find expression in the establishment of wise and beneficent relations among men.

We never can find in his teaching any disposition on the part of Jesus to put dividends first in his estimate of things. With him everything is to be judged by its fruits; and "fruits" always has reference to spiritual results in the lives of men. Instead of ignoring the spiritual in man, he makes it of primary importance. Instead of ignoring or despising material things, he counts them as useful, inasmuch as they may minister to the great achievement in life—spiritual development.

Not things but men Jesus holds forth as the social desideratum. The Church is committed to the attitude and teaching of Jesus in all matters pertaining to the life of men in the world.

The business of the Church is to put first things first; to direct the settling of this problem on the higher lines of Jesus. Never, otherwise, will it be settled. There is in all the attitude of Jesus a sublime optimism. He believes in men. Gross they were and dull of hearing, but he believed in them. They scorned him and rejected him, but he steadfastly believed in them. It was evident to him in his great temptation, which must have presented itself before his eyes almost every day of his life, that the road to speedy and temporary and apparent success lay in lowering the standard. If only he would bow down and worship the god of this world once; if only he would release his hold on his high ideals and descend for once to the practicable, to the attainable; if he would proceed on lines suited to the attainments of the people of the time, present success would be sure and immediate betterment for men would follow. But he steadfastly set his face to do still better things. He believed in men more than they believed in themselves. Though they demanded bread without work, as their fathers had had in the wilderness, yet he believed even in such men so strongly as to withhold from them the thing they demanded in order that he might give to them the bread of life. He believed in men. He counted them capable of the highest. So the Church stands committed, so long as it is the Church of Christ, to proceed on similar lines. The best is none too good. The people can reach it. They are worthy of it. Even though they do not now see at all the ministry of blessing which he offers them, yet the spark divine is there and the Church must fan it into flame.

The spirit which the Church should manifest is that of love of men—all men. The Church is not the champion of a class. It is a lover of men. The Church does not exist to befriend the workingman. It should be his friend, not because he is a workingman, but because he is a man. The Church does not exist to right his wrongs. The Church is the friend of man and exists to teach men to right all wrongs. Not to exhibit paternalism to any class, but to teach all men such self-reliance as to need no paternalism; to guide men into such righteous living that grievances will take flight from the earth.

The Church exists to restore to normal life and condition a perverted humanity. Jesus Christ is the Way. Christianity is the way of life, the way to live. The gospel of Christ in the minds and hearts of men is the power to set men in the Way. The Spirit of Christ in the lives of men is the Helper and Guide to cheer and direct them in the way of salvation—a salvation spiritual, moral, social.

The church should manifest a spirit of absolute adherence to high ideals of righteousness; and she should teach men so. The rich man that a man is greater than his fortune; that to be a man is to be greater than to be rich; that to be a lover of men, a benefactor of his race, is the highest achievement of any man; that to grind the poor, to spend all of life's energy in devotion to self is to make one an outcast from the best of men, and to miss the whole grand purpose and opportunity of living.

The poor, that a man's life consists not in the abundance of things he possesses; that to envy the rich, or to be eaten up with selfishness, is to miss their highest attainment and privilege. The Church is to teach men, rich and poor, to live in the realm of the highest self.

Todd, formerly one of our Missouri preachers but now in New York, were on the steamship "Columbia," which sank off the coast of California several days ago. At this writing they are still among the missing. They were members of our church at Marshall, Mo.

—J. G. M. Luttenberger, who about six months ago took charge of the church at Carondelet, St. Louis, has resigned. G. E. Ireland is preaching in the mornings until September, when other arrangements will be effected. There is a move on foot for a handsome new church building to supply the needs of this part of St. Louis.

Deserving of Success.

The marvelous growth of Borden's Condensed Milk Company is due to unceasing vigilance in observing rigid sanitary regulations in the manufacture of their products. Eagle Brand Condensed Milk and Peerless Brand Evaporated Milk (unsweetened) have received highest awards wherever exhibited.

—Prof. Charles Louis Loos, one of the oldest leaders of the brotherhood, is summering at Orchard Lake, Mich. He still keeps up his practice of a daily swim.

—After several successful meetings in Oklahoma C. R. L. Vawter and J. Y. B. Wood are back in old Kentucky where they will hold several meetings. In Oklahoma they were very successful, having had 74 additions, 68 of these being adults. At present they are in a good meeting at Munfordville; later they will return west.

—Crayton S. Brooks, as already announced under our telegraphic news, is to leave Colorado Springs to take charge of the First Christian Church, New Castle, Pa. We have three churches in the latter city, and the one to which the western preacher will go was erected several years ago at the cost, we believe, of about $150,000. It has a large membership.

—W. J. Dodge is able to report a prosperous and happy work at Leavenworth, Kan. During a period of about two months there were thirty-six added to the membership, eighteen of these being by primary obedience. A delightful reception was recently tendered him. It is expected that the church will have a good revival meeting in the autumn.

—We regret that T. N. Kincaid will be compelled to take his wife away from Hot Springs for a couple of months by reason of her ill health. They have selected Indianapolis, Ind as the point where they will spend the time, and Brother Kincaid can hold a couple of meetings during September and October in that city or nearby, or else do supply work. He may be addressed at Hot Springs, Ark.

—E. A. Child, the writer of "Not As The World," which is appearing in our columns, has resigned at Meridian, Idaho, to allow the church to get a permanent supply, and he has accepted a call to fill the pulpit at Boise for the summer, expecting to move south with his family in the early autumn. Mrs. Child and the children are resting in their suburban home in the meantime.

—It ought always to be a pleasure to a man to return after many years to the church where he first dedicated his life to Christian service. S. J. Vance recently returned to Boone Grove, Ind., where, under the preaching of Galen M. Goode, he became a Christian, and where, thirty years ago, he preached his first sermon. He writes that Brother Kern, the present pastor, is doing a great work for the people.

—From a clipping from a local paper we learn that L. E. Murray is at the home of his brother-in-law at Ladoga, Ind., slowly convalescing from a protracted illness. Several members of the Ladies' Aid Society of his church at Middleton have recently written a few lines each to him of their kindly feeling and that his many friends there are hoping for his speedy restoration to health.

—W. Pearn, from whom will be found in another column a letter from Kingston, Jamaica, has relinquished his duties there as temporary pastor of the Duke Street Christian Church. Brother Pearn and wife went to Jamaica last November with the thought of resting, but he was persuaded to take charge of the church at a most trying time, and went through all the troubles of the earthquake and fire. During his spiritual oversight there was an addition of about 100 to the membership, and on behalf of the church a testimonial was presented to him when he retired.

—W. H. Allen, minister of the Jackson Street Christian Church, Muncie, Ind., writes that the churches of that county are to gather in mass meeting at the West Side Park on the last Sunday in July, and that Brother Scoville will be there and make the afternoon address, and, perhaps, at least one other speaker from abroad. It will be an old-fashioned basket-dinner, and a great outpouring is expected. Immediately following this meeting Brother Allen leaves for a vacation, having an engagement with Harry Minnick, of Worcester, Mass., to meet him at "Rocky Lake," in the pine woods of Maine. He has promised to send us some of his vacation experiences, including, perhaps, some fish stories.

—Thomas T. Waggoner, of Texola, Okla., publisher of "The Texola Herald," sends us a printed affidavit made by "Grandma" Mary A. Crossman, who testifies that she attended a protracted meeting conducted by Alexander Campbell, and that she was converted under his ministry; and that "Brother Campbell's song services were led by one who used as fine an organ as was in the church buildings of those days, and that Brother Campbell was not opposed to the use of the organ in public worship in his day." She is eighty-one years of age, and has been a member of the Christian church sixty-four years. See the article by Brother Redgrave elsewhere, confirming this statement and W. T. Moore's recently published in our columns.

—Fifteen new members have been added to the church register at Rock Island, Ill., since the beginning of the present pastorate. Five of these were by confession and baptism. The total membership is now 701. The departments have their work well in hand. The report of the pastor, William B. Clemmer, is that, despite important changes both in leadership and financial program and other problems, the church will be ready for an aggressive campaign beginning in September. The Second Christian Church of the same town shows an enrollment of 110 in the Bible school, which has just closed its first year of life with an average attendance of 72. The teachers and the officers show a perfect attendance on twenty-six Sundays out of the year.

—Cephas Shelburne and family, of Huntington, Ind., go this week to Bass Lake, where they will spend the month of August. His admirable article which appeared last week in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on "A Vacation Among the Pines," was, we believe, inspired by the place which he is to visit this year. On another page will be found a very admirable letter to new converts, to which Brother Shelburne lays no claim for special originality. When we examined it, we asked that we might use it in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, for we believe it will prove very serviceable to many pastors and of great help to the converts. It should be widely read. Brother Shelburne has had a very busy year and a great work and the Huntington church has voted him a long vacation. His address will be Knox, Ind.

—We regret to learn that a cyclone, which struck the town of Pittsfield, Ill., on the evening of July 25, wrecked among other buildings the First Christian church. The roof was torn away and a large section of the floor collapsed from the weight of the timbers. The walls are still standing. The building was erected in 1891, we believe, at a cost of $12,000, and there is $6,000 of insurance. W. E. Spicer, the pastor, writes us—"Beginning our revival in temporary tabernacle, July 26. The Lord give us grace and victory." That is the right kind of pluck. Brother Spicer is evidently a man of great energy, for the message we have just quoted comes on a post card on the back of which is a photograph of the ruins in the interior of the church. That kind of despatch is unusual outside of a newspaper office.

NATIONAL CONVENTION

—C. H. Winders has resigned at Columbia, Mo., and will take charge of the church at Irvington, Ind. Brother Winders has carried on a very successful work at the Athens of Missouri for about twelve years. The church is now one of the strongest in the state. It has a beautiful building, a large membership and is well able to accomplish its part in our brotherhood's progress. There was a strong protest made against Brother Winders leaving, but there were some weighty reasons which finally influenced him to take the course he has. On the whole, we believe his decision is a wise one. It will be much easier to find a man who can carry on the work at Columbia than one who can push forward the work at Irvington. The pulpit there has been vacant for some time and needs an aggressive leader. This Brother Winders is pre-eminently. He will be a strong factor in the development of Butler College. We shall be sorry to lose him from Missouri, of whose state Bible work he is one of the leaders.

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is in full sympathy with all state papers, and it has been our policy at all times to give a helping hand to these, as we could. It is no easy matter to conduct a religious paper of limited circulation, and in many states the editor generally has to pay for the privilege of being an editor. Just now some of our state papers are having hard times. Recently the "Southern Evangelist" found it the wisest policy, apparently, to cease publication, and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST promptly took all of its obligations, so that the Christian church in Georgia should have a paper coming to them weekly. We did this, understanding that no other paper was to be started, and we made special effort to secure the news of the state. Later on another paper called the "Southland" was started. We were fully in unison with it, and at the first opportunity, feeling that from past experiences it would have a hard struggle, we offered our help to make it a success. We have been aware that this paper also has ceased publication temporarily, but that an effort was being made to bring it into life again in another form. We refrained from making any remarks that would hinder the work and perhaps prevent such a desirable end. We offered to co-operate with Brother Simpson, its editor, and he accepted this with a firm belief that the paper could be kept going if sufficient encouragement resulted from his last circular. Brother Simpson is still awaiting answers from the brethren in Georgia, and from these answers it will be determined whether the "Southland" will be continued.

FROM THE HOUR OF BIRTH

Mothers Should Use Cuticura Soap, the World's Favorite for Baby's Skin, Scalp, Hair, and Hands.

Mothers are assured of the absolute purity and efficacy of Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure, and purest of emollients, in the preservation and purification of the skin, scalp, hair, and hands of infants and children. For baby humors, eczemas, rashes, itchings, and chafings as a mother's remedy for annoying irritations and for the many sanative, antiseptic uses which readily suggest themselves, as well as for all the purposes of the toilet, bath and nursery, Cuticura Soap and Ointment are priceless.

Texas Campmeeting.

This convenes near Knox City, August 10, and continues sixteen days. It will be a great occasion. J. L. Minton and J. L. Haddock will preach. Write O. T. Wood for information.

A Pleasant Anniversary.

The fifteenth wedding anniversary of T. P. Haley and his wife was made the occasion of a joyful meeting at Macatawa, Mich., on the evening of July 12. A party of about twenty-five members of the Christian church met at the home of J. H. Hardin and went over to Brother and Sister Haley's, taking with them refreshments and a beautiful piece of cut glass as a token of their love. This gift was presented by G. W. Muckley, of Church Extension fame, and Brother Haley delighted all present with his response.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. George W. Muckley, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Combs, Mr. and Mrs. Harmon, of Milford, Ill.; Mr. and Mrs. John H. Duncan, of Marion, Ill.; Mr. and Mrs. J. Bennett, of Macatawa; Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Earle, of Irvington, Ind.; Sister Rogers and her two daughters, Mrs. Holland and Mrs. Crittenden, of Kansas City, Mo.; Mrs. J. H. Hardin, of Kansas City; Mrs. Cady, Mrs. Banks, Mrs. Tinsman, the Misses Campbell, granddaughters of Brother Haley, Mr. and Mrs. Halleck, Mrs. Findlay, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Jones and R. A. Long, of Kansas City.

Brother and Sister Haley are much beloved by all the Disciples of Christ colony at this watering place. We have heard, though it has not been officially communicated to us, that Brother Haley has retired from the active ministry, and that Burris A. Jenkins has accepted a call to his church. Brother Jenkins has been in Kansas City for medical treatment and is assured, so we understand, that the cause of his physical suffering can be removed.

The Centennial Emblem.

At a recent meeting of the Centennial Committee an emblem was adopted, consisting of a Keystone, in which the picture of the Reformers is reproduced with the words, "Where the Scriptures speak we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent." Over the Keystone is "1809, Pittsburg, 1909." The whole is enclosed in a circle, giving a quotation on Christian union. It was designed by Wallace Tharp, chairman of the Special Committee on Emblem, and will be used on all stationery. O. H. Phillips was elected corresponding secretary, and will give much of his time to the work of the convention.

Why Not Get Ready for Norfolk, Va., in October?

The attention of the whole world is directed at this time in this direction. The celebration of the greatest event in the history of this nation is now bringing many to Norfolk, Va. Adverse criticisms have been indulged in, but close and fair inspection will prove how unjust this was and is. The success of the exposition means much to this city, its growth and development, and what makes for the city is for its citizens and its churches. With the end in view of helping our city and our churches, we ask that our brethren will visit us at the time of the convention, and let the world know what the great Reformation of the nineteenth century meant and means. Send the ministers; let us hear them; let them hear us; let the glad hand of Christian fellowship arouse the enthusiasm that comes from close contact with the Master. Churches throughout the country will feel that they have done well to send their minister. He will appreciate the courtesy, and they will feel better for having sent him, and through and by him receive blessings that always come with Christian giving. Therefore, my brethren, do not fail to send your minister. The people of this section are prepared to care for all who may come. Rates are reasonable. All things combine to induce you to come or to send. Your influence for this convention will help the cause in this vicinity. We invite you. You will help us. We will be glad to help you, to meet you and to greet you. Come.

Yours for the Master, W. C. Wade,

School of Evangelism.

The American Christian Missionary Society announces a School of Evangelism to be held at Chautauqua, New York, the great educational resort, August 5-12, 1907. The following is a partial program:

Lectures—(1) By Archibald McLean, President of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society—The Place of Evangelism in the Church; Some Elements of a True Evangelism; The Evangelist for the Twentieth Century; Preaching to the Conscience; Alexander Campbell as a Preacher. (2) By George Hamilton Combs—The Newest Evangelism; The Evangelistic Theme; The Personal Factor in Evangelism. (3) By William J. Wright—The Revival in Nineveh; The Evangelistic Church; The Evangelistic Sermon, Its Spirit and Aim; The Evangelistic Sermon, Its Theme and Form; Evangelism for Cities; Other Themes.

We hope to have addresses from a number of the following well-known and able men: E. M. Todd, North Tonawanda, N. Y.; R. H. Miller, Buffalo, N. Y.; J. G. Slater, Pittsburg, Pa.; Wallace Tharp, Allegheny, Pa.; I. J. Spencer, Lexington, Ky.; J. M. Van Horn, Toronto, Ontario; C. J. Tannar, Detroit, Mich.; T. W. Pinkerton, Kenton, O., and others.

There are excursion rates to be had on all railroads running to Chautauqua. Three great systems of railroads—the Pennsylvania, New York Central and the Erie—run directly there. The other great systems, which will take you to Buffalo or Niagara Falls, will likewise sell low rate tickets.

Chautauqua is about 1,500 feet above the sea level. A more delightful place for an outing can not be found. Preachers, evangelists and other Christian workers are all invited and urged to attend this school.

Wm. J. Wright.

Bible Head for Christian University.

The Board of Trustees have elected Prof. C. A. Lockhart, now of Waco, Tex., Dean of the Bible Department of Christian University, Canton, Mo. Prof. Lockhart has accepted, and will begin his work at the beginning of next session, September 10.

We desire to congratulate the Church in Missouri for the return of this scholarly and consecrated man to the state in which he secured a part of his education and won his first honors. The faculty of C. U. is now complete, and prospects for a large attendance never were better.

A New Station in Africa.

For some time past the Foreign Society has hoped to be able to plant a new mission station in the Congo Free State, Africa, not far from Bolenge, our present successful work. The government has not in the past been disposed to grant our missionaries any concessions. The situation now seems to be changed somewhat. The government officials recently encouraged Dr. Royal J. Dye to hope that land might be purchased.

Longa is the site of the proposed station. Here we have five native Christians. Our missionaries were driven from this place by both the State and Catholics fifteen months ago. Upon a recent visitation of our evangelists the whole town turned out to meet them.

Longa is situated about one hundred miles from Bolenge, southeast. This region is densely populated. Of these, nine were baptized during the recent visitation. These are the first ever baptized in the waters of the Bosira.

It will require not less than $5,000 to open up this new station. Are we ready for this advance step? Remember, the $5,000 would be the first cost of the land and a few buildings. We are abundantly able to reinforce work in darkest Africa. Their cry for help is loud and insistent. Let us make one more forward move upon Africa.

down upon us. Clouds of witnesses are watching us. In the face of such responsibility who is there that does not cry out with Paul, the young man of Tarsus,—'Who is sufficient for these things?' In the words of Neeshima, one of the noblest sons of the east, 'Let us advance on our knees!'"

The address was given in perfect English, and repeated by this remarkable gentleman in Japanese. He was the only speaker who interpreted his own speech.

Dr. Guy and K. Ishikawa, one of the teachers in the Drake Bible School, were delegates to the conference. A brother of K. Ishikawa, also a teacher in the Bible School, interpreted very acceptably for Mr. Mott.

A chorus from the girls' school in Tokyo, of which Miss Clawson is president, sang very sweetly a special number, at the National Christian Endeavor Convention. Twenty-seven baptisms were reported for the month in the mission.

Miss Lewis, of Osaka, recently visited a town of 8,000, where there is but one Christian woman, she the wife of the evangelist.

Much more of interest in the "Harbinger" should be noted, but it is hoped the above will give many a taste for the excellent little paper and set enthusiastic missionary spirits to canvassing for clubs.

The Union of Christian Forces in China

In response to a letter sent to the great missionary conference of Shanghai the following reply has come to the office of the National Federation of Churches in New York:

Shanghai, May 7, 1907.

To the Executive Committee of the Inter-Church Conference on Federation:

Dear Brethren—Your letter of February 13 has been presented to the China Centenary Missionary Conference, in session at Shanghai. We have been instructed to reply to your welcome message. In so doing, we desire to thank you most heartily for your appreciation of our work, for the sympathy which prompted your letter, and for your desires and prayers for our success.

In the first hundred years of our work in China, the Lord has done great things for us. The early missionaries hoped for one thousand converts after a century—and they were men of faith; but to-day we report more than 175,000 communicants, with certainly 500,000 adherents. Beyond this, Christianity has already proved itself a leavening power in the national life of China; no one knows how much of the new spirit is due directly to missionary effects; but we are sure that all of the uplifting influences now manifesting themselves are from the spirit of God. And we give thanks.

Stirring as the past has been, its greatest interest is in the astounding promise it gives for the future. The tasks before us are tremendous and immediate. Within half a generation, it is possible for Christianity to be established as the most decisive force in Chinese affairs. To this task we propose to set ourselves with renewed devotion and a new sense of its urgency.

In this emergency, we require the backing and co-operation of the combined forces of Christendom. Your prayers, your fellowship, your efforts, united and forceful as never before, are a source of profound gratitude on our part.

It is not less important that we, on the far-flung battle line, shall be one in spirit and aim, and that we shall co-operate in our common work. This has already led to union or combination in educational work, increasing economy of working force by division of labor, and frequent consultation in our plans.

At the present conference, Protestant missionaries, representing many countries and many branches of the Church of Christ, have come to a new realization of our unity, and have given definite expression to a common desire and hope that, in China, we shall not perpetuate our Occidental distinctions; and we have expressed our definite purpose to plant one church, in which all disciples may have a common fellowship of joy and service. We have taken action which will soon result in organic union between churches having a common polity. And we have planned for a federation of all Christians in the empire. In these deliberations, we have been conscious of divine guidance—without which all our plans must fail.

Please accept, on behalf of this conference, this expression of sympathy with your committee, as you undertake a work similar in many respects to that on which we are entering here.

In prayerful dependence on our common Master and Savior, we remain

The Antidote to Christian Science

Is its insiduous influence felt in your community?

This is not a virulent and unintelligent attack. There have already been too many of these. The author shows where Christian Science fails as a religion.

Since it professes to stand on the Bible he shows how it antagonizes the Bible and how the Bible antagonizes it.

The concluding chapter contains an antidote for error and teaches what the Church may learn from Christian Science.

After several months one finds it still hard in taking pen in hand to steer clear of earthquake thoughts. Surrounded as we are with ruins, it is difficult to think of anything else. In fact, now that the first rush of emergency work made necessary by the earthquake is over there is time to look around and view things more calmly than before with the result that one is even more appalled and distressed at the awful ruin than was at first the case. One gets a longing to be away from the city and look upon sound buildings. This desire grew so strong with me a couple of weeks ago that, with a German scientist, I determined to climb the 7,500 feet to Blue Mountain Peak. It was in the hope of getting away from ruins. The hill scenery had lost none of its grandeur, but ruined buildings and huge landslides met our gaze all the way to the summit. Though the city of Kingston has been the place that suffered the most, this whole section of the island from south to north, has been severely damaged, and the people caused considerable suffering. A walk of twenty-one miles, and a climb of 7,500 feet was no mean accomplishment in this tropical country, but a temperature of 37 degrees at sunrise and scenery unsurpassed in the world more than repaid us for the exertion. The journey took us two and a half days, and we walked forty-two out of the sixty miles. Some of the worst wrecks caused by the earthquake that we have seen anywhere were seen during this trip.

But it is not so much of earthquake conditions, and distress that I want to write. It took a climb of 7,500 feet to get above the clouds, and to witness the beauties of the sunlight effects on the clouds. It has taken a climb to get above the clouds in our church work in Kingston, but we have been looking from the sunny side on the glorious possibilities of our work in this city. Recently I decided to preach every night for a short time. There had been additions in our regular services, and I had baptized and received into the church about fifty new members. This fact led me to feel that a series of special meetings would result in a still larger ingathering. For twelve nights I preached to splendid audiences, and during that time baptized over fifty. The total additions to the church during the three months I have acted as pastor are over a hundred. For these results we are profoundly thankful, and rejoice in the prospect that our plea is attracting attention as never before in this city. The depressing conditions by which we are surrounded have not affected the religious zeal of our people, and we are looking for a steady growth in the work here.

Since writing the above Mr. Sidney Olliver has been appointed governor. He is well known and popular with all classes in the community. In his speeches delivered in response to addresses of welcome he has said some very helpful and encouraging things and assured the city that the government would stand by and help in the work of restoration. This statement is proved by the fact that a free grant has already been made of $750,000 and a loan of $4,000,000 by the British government for the purpose of restoring the city and providing for those who lost their means of support. Soon after the earthquake it was realized that the words and actions of ex-Governor Swettenham was having the effect of shutting off the sources of relief and giving the outside world to believe that the disaster was a very small affair and did not mean much loss. To counteract this a deputation consisting of Archbishop Nuttall and A. W. Farqueson, crown solicitor, was sent to England for the purpose of explaining the situation and to ask for a free grant and loan. These two men were successful in their mission and it is mainly due to their efforts that the government assistance has been given to the island. The insurance companies are paying claims, and it is confidently hoped that the English companies will decide to pay as well as the Jamaica companies. The work of restoring the city has begun and it will not be long before out of the ruins will rise a beautiful and much more attractive city than that which existed before the disaster of January 14. The churches will have no part in the grant or loan. Yet the churches should be the leading spirits in all progressive movement, and in this case should show by the kind of buildings erected that there is faith in a great future. The action of the churches should go a long way in restoring the confidence of the people and bringing them back to a normal condition of life. As a people we should lead the way, and it is to be hoped that the C. W. B. M. executive will be placed in a position to restore our buildings as quickly as possible. In all our churches on the island large additions are reported, but this is especially true of Kingston. The Duke Street Church has about doubled its membership since the beginning of the year and our work is more widely known in the city than ever before. Now is our opportunity. Before us is the great and victorious future. The kindly sympathy shown the Jamaica mission in its sore distress has given a new impetus to the work, and the workers are confident that the interest will not abate but will continue in such practical form that soon all our buildings will be restored and the work placed on a firmer basis than ever. We ask the continuance of the prayers and practical interest of the readers of The Christian-Evangelist.

Kingston, Jamaica, W. I.

Great Gains for Home Missions.

Advices from the American Christian Missionary Society are to the effect that the gains this year promise to exceed those of any previous year. Already more than 700 churches, which last year contributed nothing, have sent in offerings this year. And more than 600 churches have increased their contributions this year. The total amount received thus far is $86,911.75, a total gain of $9,699.98. This includes but a small portion of the receipts for San Francisco.

The Oregon Convention.

In many respects our state convention just held at Turner, Ore., may be marked down as our best. We are now laboring to digest and assimilate what we there "took in."

It is a matter of congratulation that our state work for the year has been brought to a close out of debt and with money in the treasury. Experience teaches that state conventions, as well as individuals, should keep out of debt. When our people learn to pay the tithe we need have no fear of the Lord's work being burdened or hindered.

The program of the ministerial association was up to the standard. The papers, addresses and discussions were both interesting and profitable. We would like to give space to each subject discussed, but can not. Definite plans were laid for a ministerial institute next year, to precede the meeting of the association.

The state board was fortunate, indeed, in securing the services of H. A. Easton, of Portland, as musical director. Those who heard Brother Easton recognized in him a master of song. He was for several years associated as singing evangelist with the lamented J. V. Updike.

The two days' meeting of the O. C. M. C. were days of rejoicing, not only because of work well done during the past year, but also because of the bright outlook for the future. Several of our infant churches have deliberately weaned themselves. Notable among these is the Rodney Avenue church, in East Portland. This church is making remarkable progress under the ministry of our beloved Bro. Elmo Robinson. Among the new fields to be entered are Baker City and Prinesville, two important Eastern Oregon cities. Oregon City and Astoria are still unoccupied. Klamath Falls is a splendid opportunity—and little else, seemingly.

F. E. Billington was re-elected corresponding secretary. His faithful, efficient work is most pleasing to the brotherhood of this state. It is to be hoped that he may be retained for a long term of years. Brother Davis Errett, of Salem, was elected president of the O. C. M. C. Brother Errett presides with dignity and ease. Aside from the corresponding secretary our state officers are supposed to be remunerated in the coin of gratitude. We fear that not a few of our retiring officers are made to feel that their tasks have been thankless.

C. W. B. M. day deserves special mention. Brother Louie Hugh's address was studded with good things. His work as minister for the Chinese mission in Portland is most commendable. His methods and plans clearly indicate that he is—as he has well been called—"a wise man." It is the intention of the C. W. B. M. workers to erect a $10,000 mission building in Portland. The C. W. B. M. of Kentucky, which was represented by Mrs. Ida W. Harrison, proposes to raise half of the above mentioned amount.

Bible school day gave evidence of a steadily increasing interest in this important part of our state convention. The Bible school is second to none as a field of real service for the Master. Christians are beginning to awaken to its vast possibilities. In the evening W. A. Moore, of Tacoma, Wash., preached a splendid sermon on "The Rights of the Child."

Endeavor and education days were exceptionally good in many respects. New plans for larger and better work were brought forward. Not only during these days but throughout the entire convention there was manifested a spirit of unity and love, and an intelligent zeal that "does things."

Please permit us to say right here that it is our candid opinion that the Disciples of Christ in Oregon are doing more in proportion to what they have to do with than the brotherhood of any other state in the union.

Among the visiting brethren not previously mentioned in this article were: Geo. B. Ranshaw, of Cincinnati, O.; Geo. W. Muckley, Kansas City, Mo.; J. H. Mohorter, St. Louis, Mo.; R. H. Waggoner, Cincinnati, O., and Brother Warren, Pittsburg, Pa. All of these brethren delivered stirring, masterly addresses, and they richly deserve our thanks for what they brought us.

The convention closed with a fitting, able sermon by J. J. Evans, of Albany, Ore.

Diamond Jubilee.

On June 23 the church at Carthage, Ohio, celebrated its diamond jubilee, having been organized by Walter Scott in 1832. In the morning A. McLean preached one of his characteristic sermons on "The Church." Lunch was served on the beautiful lawn by the ladies of the church. In the afternoon there was a historic sketch of the church by John Dorman, an elder and trustee of the church for many years. Prof. C. L. Loos then gave personal recollections of Walter Scott, having first met him in Carthage in 1843, and being intimately acquainted with him till his death. He paid a beautiful tribute to his piety, learning, eloquence, tact and generosity. Several visiting preachers then expressed their congratulations.

At night there was a service of praise and thanksgiving in which many rendered thanks to God for the inspiration and blessing of the day. Letters from former ministers were also read at this service.

Special music was sung during the day by descendants of pioneer preachers who had preached at Carthage—Mrs. Annie Crone, of Cincinnati, a daughter of J. H. Lockwood, and A. L. Fillmore, of Allegheny, son of A. D. Fillmore.

One of the most unique features of the day was a letter from Mrs. Emily Scott Church, only surviving child of Walter Scott. Though 82 years of age, she still retains all her mental powers in great vigor, as her letter shows. We reproduce it below.

Two aged members still live in the community, Miss Mary Thomas, a member of this congregation for seventy years, and Mrs. Josina Alcorn, a member for sixty-seven years. Mrs. Elvira Boake was also present, having been a Christian more than seventy years, though not all that time a member at Carthage.

CHAS. M. FILLMORE.

718 Ivy Street,
Pittsburg, Pa., June 18, 1907.

Rev. Charles M. Fillmore, Pastor The Christian Church, Carthage, Ohio.

My Dear Brother Fillmore—Your letter informing me that the church at Carthage will, on next Sunday, celebrate its seventy-fifth anniversary, interests me very deeply. This church was started by my father, Walter Scott, when we lived in Carthage, and when I was a little girl of seven years. The approaching celebration brings back vividly to my mind some of the dearest recollections of my childhood. For fourteen years after the inauguration of that church our family lived at Carthage, and the consecrated labors through which my father ministered to its spiritual needs have made a permanent impression on my mind. During this long period of service at Carthage, my father employed his great mental powers in spreading the primitive gospel throughout the world. It was then that his intellectual strength was reaching its fullness, and he composed at Carthage his great book, "The Gospel Restored," a work which was essential to that age, when special scholarship and argument were needed to clear away the errors of creed and of bigotry.

It was not only by his literary work and his ministry in the local church that my father sought to impress the world, but he traveled almost incessantly through the middle sections of our country, preaching everywhere the love of Christ and the beauty of holiness with such fervor, piety, eloquence and learning that he frequently affected whole communities to accept the gospel as he interpreted it. I do not think it is the exaggeration of a daughter's love to say that his teaching, his genius, and his wonderful personality have impressed themselves indelibly upon the mind of the nineteenth century. My father was so much away from home on this good work that it seemed to my childish heart that he really lived in some other part of the world, and once when he was mounting his horse to ride away I ran to him and cried out: "Father, are you going away home again?" The idea that he was going away to be at home brought the tears into his eyes, and he assured me, while he held me close to his heart, that the only home he knew was the little house in Carthage where mother, the boys and myself made it the most sacred spot on earth for him.

It is a precious assurance that the church which meant so much to my family and our friends and neighbors in that distant period has survived for seventy-five years, and is still a living force in the spiritual life of a great community. There are many hallowed traditions clustering around you, and the characters of the splendid men who labored there are beautiful examples for other lives to follow.

I wish that I might be with you in person at your celebration; nothing would give me greater joy or touch my heart more tenderly. But the little girl who was seven years old seventy-five years ago, while still well and happy, is advised by loving children that her strength could not well endure so great a journey with its attending excitement. But I pray for the blessing of God upon your continued labors, and send you all my good wishes for the welfare and happiness of a church and congregation which will be especially precious to me as long as I live. Faithfully yours,

EMILY SCOTT CHURCH.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Progress at Center, Texas.

Our meeting at Center closed with sixty additions at the last invitation. This is the best meeting ever held in the town. Our church is small, young, but aggressive. A fine new building stands as a monument of the spirit of doing things. A. L. Oder, the pastor, is one of the kind loved by his people, a leader, moves by order of the King. With a fine, new church, new seats and carpet were needed. We called for the money and in ten minutes had $1,250, all having a part in the fellowship. We succeeded in doubling the Sunday-school, which means much and speaks of future possibilities.

We go next to Amory, Miss., where Brother J. Ross Miller joins me as my singer in our labors for the King. Thos. L. Cooksey.

Union and Additions at Silverton, Ore.

The six weeks' meeting conducted by Kellems and Davis, of Eugene, Ore., closed with fifty-six names added to the church roster. There were twenty-two confessions, seven from other fellowships and the remainder by restoration and statement. D. C. Kellems is teacher of oratory in the Eugene Divinity school, but is thoroughly at home in his old field of evangelism. J. S. Davis, who recently came to us from the Congregationalists, and has been employed to teach vocal music in the Eugene Divinity school, is also at home in evangelism.

A greatly appreciated result of the meeting was the adjustment of a certain difficulty which has existed for some time and the introduction of an era of peace and good will. The members of the Bethany church (a country church two miles out), who had not yet done so, transferred their membership to the Silverton church, thus bringing all of our people in and around Silverton together in one congregation. Equipped with its new and modern building, admirably located, this reunited and strengthened congregation is able to undertake great things for the Lord. At the reception given to new members, there were two more confessions of faith. There are no better people than those in the Silverton church nor can there be a church with a fairer prospect of usefulness. Surely the Lord has been with us during the two years we have labored together in his name. Albyn Esson.

Monser at Syracuse, N. Y.

The work in this thriving eastern city moves along in summer as well as in winter. The Second Church has just closed a series of meetings which in many respects is the best in the church's history. Harold E. Monser, with Miss Nellie Pollock, soloist, conducted the meetings and did the work faithfully and well. A large tent was used, and on several evenings it held several times as many people as the church would contain. The neighborhood is entirely residential, and in consequence much quick work was done which only time will manifest. Hundreds heard the message, and our aims and ideals were placed before the people as never before.

Brother Monser was handicapped by several things. For several months there has been no regular minister. The Bible school offered no field for evangelism. The membership, only 59, naturally did not exert a wide influence in the community. Undaunted though, Brother Monser threw himself into the meeting without reserve. He brought new people in touch with the work, and leaves a good opening for Brother Stauffer to begin with. The immediate results of the meeting were eleven additions, all adults. Six are men, all of standing in the county. This means that the church is increased nearly 18 per cent in numbers. Measured by the standards of the Central West this may not be great, but we have our own standards of measurement here and by them we are quite satisfied with the results. It was with satisfaction that the writer viewed the spirit of unity prevailing between our churches in the city. With sacrifice of time and means the members of Central Church stood behind the meetings. We look forward with hope for an advance along all lines of work.

J. A. Serena.

Western Pennsylvania.

On last Lord's day the McKeesport church voted unanimously to erect a new church to cost $25,000. It will seat 1,000 in the Bible school room, auditorium and galleries. It will contain twenty-four rooms, including reading and game rooms, bath and gymnasium.

The united and social auxiliaries held their midsummer meeting at McKeesport. In the afternoon the board instructed the committee on foreign work to purchase a lot and erect a building for that work. Miss Vasicek was selected as superintendent of the Wimodansis vacation school of McKeesport. It gave her an excellent opportunity to bring her work before the women of the city and enlarged her acquaintance with the foreigners of the city. Howard Cramblet.

Indian Territory.

During July the corresponding secretary has visited the following places: Wagoner, Muskogee, Tulsa, Bartlesville, Okmulgee, Weleetka, Tishomingo, Atoka, Durant, Bokchito, Hugo, Poteau and other points. Everywhere we have met with a royal reception. Surely nothing can so lighten the burden of a preacher as he toils and plans for the building up of the Kingdom of God, as does the hearty co-operation and appreciation of his brethren. As yet we are but a feeble folk in the Indian Territory. We have but one church that is strong in members and money. With this single exception we have not a church that can say it has a house of worship that is adequate to its needs and at the same time is able to employ a preacher who is adequate to the demands of the field. We have all told about seventy-five organizations. Each of these struggling missions could spend every dollar they can raise at home and thrice as much, and then not meet the demands. But they do not spend it all at home. They stand ready to help and do help every worthy cause—foreign, home and state missions, educational, benevolence, church extension and every other worthy cause. The truth is, this territory is a remarkable country, and is destined to contribute to the world a remarkable people—a people who do things. It has attracted hundreds of thousands of the soberest and sanest people from all quarters of the globe, and particularly from these United States. After traveling over about forty different states and over the Indian Territory for more than three years, I am of the candid opinion that nowhere else in this wide world can a spot be found of the same size, that has as many resources and advantages as are to be found in the limits of this highly favored country. No country is more seasonable, no climate more acceptable to the majority of inhabitants, a country noted for health, where all manner of grains, fruits, vegetables and crops grow aboundantly, where the highest grades of coal are inexhaustible, and oil and natural gas are found in astonishing quantities, with pipe lines stretching away across the continent to New Jersey on the east and the Gulf of Mexico on the south, and where every county without a single exception, has one or more railroads (this applies to the Indian Territory, not to Oklahoma Territory). Thus the markets of the world are at our doors. With such advantages in material things and such developments as are taking place in this country, and with prosperous times everywhere, and open doors on every hand, we can afford to be liberal, to plan great things and to do great things.

The church at Vinita, where A. J. Williams preaches, will shortly be ready to dedicate their splendid new stone house of worship. M. S. Dunning, of Tulsa; H. J. Corwine, of Bartlesville; R. A. Martin, of Muskogee; D. N. Manley, of Okmulgee; Ed Ewell, of Durant; J. R. Baird, of Hugo; W. R. Tener, of Sapulpa; R. Jackson, of Claremore, and W. H. Burgess, of Poteau, all "new comers," are proving to be the right men in the right place. They have caught the spirit of the country, and have fully identified themselves with their respective fields and with the territory in general.

Our annual convention will meet in joint session with the Oklahoma convention the first week in September in Oklahoma City. There should be a large and intelligent delegation in attendance from the Indian Teritory. The question as to whether or not we will unite our Indian Territory and the Oklahoma mission societies will be discussed, and in all probability settled on this occasion. All of our churches should be represented, and all interested should be present to help decide this important matter. There are several hundred dollars in outstanding pledges that should be paid before the close of August. Should any one read this who has not sent an offering to help support this work during the past year, please do so. Send remittance in any proper manner to the writer and due credit will be given. S. "No Creed but Christ."

The pastor of the church at McConnelsville, O., closed a two weeks' meeting at the Meigs church, which is a historical old church and has been a strong country church. A few years ago it fell into the hands of our conservative brethren whose negative creed forbids Sunday-schools, missionary societies, musical instruments, except note books and tuning forks, in the church. The church died. They had ceased to meet for some weeks before the meeting. I went out to preach one sermon for them. Conditions seemed so favorable for a meeting that we continued. The church was reorganized with "No creed but Christ and no rule of life but the Bible." Nine were baptized and one more is to be baptized. Several were reclaimed. We now have practically a new church of 43 members. A splendid Bible school was organized. There were 78 present. The Meigs church is in a rich farming community, six miles from McConnelsville. The church has engaged me to preach for them each alternate Sunday afternoon. The McConnelsville church loaned me to Meigs for the meeting except Sunday mornings when I preached at home. John Moody, who is now 76 years old, sang for us the first week of the meeting. JOHN MULLEN.

Georgia Notes.

The Central Church is doing well. Our large stone building is completed and furnished. The auditorium is the finest and largest in this part of Georgia. I organized the church two and one-half years ago. There was one addition last Lord's day and three the week before. H. B. Coleman is in a meeting at Orphans at this time. He is doing a good work at this place and Eastman, where I preached five sermons for him recently, and will hold a meeting there soon. Brother Mullins is looking after the work at McRae, and Dublin is building a fine church. The brethren at McRae have bought a house vacated by the Baptists. They are very hopeful. Brother Dell, a U. B. minister, is now preaching for the First church in Fitzgerald. He has been, until he took charge of this work, traveling with the Holiness band. That seems as if Christian ministers were scarce in Georgia. N. G. BUCKLEY.

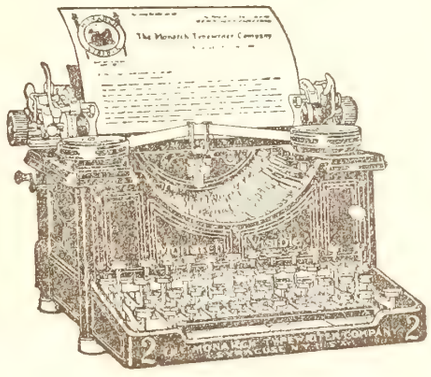
A Kentucky Assembly.



A unique and very interesting assembly was held at Mt. Olivet, Ky., covering the dates July 3-14. This was the first assembly held by our people in the state and attracted unusual attention. It was under the direction of R. M. Hopkins and the State Bible School Association. W. H. Book, of Columbus, Ind., was the assembly evangelist and he preached every night. There were seventeen accessions to the church, among them being the sheriff of the county and other prominent citizens. During the day various church interests were considered and helpful programs were carried out. Among the speakers were R. M. Giddens, C. L. Collins, superintendent Anti-Saloon League; Bela Metcalf, Marion Pfanstiel, J. W. Hagin, H. W. Carpenter, Traverse Harrison, F. M. Rains, P. A. Cave, E. J. Willis, J. T. Sharrard, W. S. Irvine, C. W. Barnes, J. R. Farris, J. D. Waters, W. M. White, W. T. Donaldson and R. N. Simpson.

Robertson county had never before witnessed such a gathering of our people. Large crowds were in attendance every day and on Sundays the capacity of the camp grounds was severely taxed. The assembly was made possible by the earnest efforts of a local committee composed of Judge M. F. Chandler, W. J. Curtis, Wm. Stewart, W. T. McConnell and J. M. Thompson, who guaranteed the financial success of the undertaking. This combination of evangelistic services and educational addresses proved exceedingly helpful to our cause in the remote county of Robertson. The people are unanimous in their desire for a similar assembly next year. The matter of combining the state convention with some such assembly is being seriously contemplated in Kentucky.

DEDICATIONS.

Princeton, Ky.

The church here has recently expended about $600 improving and beautifying the building which has been frescoed throughout, the organ loft lowered, city waterworks put in, a concrete baptistry built and a new carpet ordered. This will be one of the prettiest church buildings in this part of the state, when it is completed. The church work is in good shape. W. G. Eldred is the minister.

Silex, Mo.

The new church building at Silex was dedicated June 30. T. A. Abbott, of Kansas City, preached at all three services. We have a membership of 70, a good Sunday-school and a Union Endeavor made up of the four congregations of the town. A protracted meeting will be held in the near future and we expect good results.

Canton, Mo. A. L. COLE.

Marshall, Texas.

After an absence of two months from our church building while it was undergoing repairs, we are back home. Our building was completely renewed, both outside and inside. We have a very much better house now, it being one of the best auditoriums in the city. The East Texas district convention is to be held with us in September. We have had 50 additions since January 1, 1907. Our future is hopeful.

T. F. WEAVER, Pastor.

Ottumwa, Iowa.

Visitors from Osceola, Eldon, Bloomfield and many other neighboring cities and towns were present for the formal opening of the new First Christian Church, which was dedicated on June 24, at Ottumwa. F. M. Rains made the special addresses and altogether about $4,000 was subscribed, leaving a very small deficit, which the board of the church will provide for in the near future. There was a fellowship meeting in the afternoon. The Y. M. C. A. dismissed their regular meeting for men and many of these attended in a body. Nearly all of the city pastors were present and spoke informally, welcoming the congregation into the central circle of Ottumwa churches. L. J. Otto and congregation are rejoicing at the opportunities now before them.

Newport News, Va.

On June 23 the remodeled, refurnished and enlarged church building at Newport News, Va. (Thirtieth street), was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies. A Sunday-school room with beautiful class rooms was recently added to the old building, and the entire building refurnished with granite-finished walls inside, new oak pews, new carpet, new chandeliers, new windows and new pulpit furniture, at a cost of $5,000. About $700 was unprovided for before dedication day, which sum was doubly raised during the day. Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, preached in the morning and afternoon to large and enthusiastic audiences on "The Mind of the Master" and "Another Comforter." These sermons were thoughtful, eloquent and deeply spiritual. J. J. Haley, of Richmond, preached an able and scholarly sermon at the evening service, to an overflow congregation on "The New Appendix to Mark's Gospel." The services of the day in every way were highly satisfactory and eminently successful. We feel proud of our beautiful and commodious church and predict for the future great success in all departments of the work. W. R. MOTLEY, Pastor.

Kentland, Ind.

Our new $10,000 church will be ready for dedication about October 1. Our cause there has needed a more commodious building for some years, but we could not see our way financially to get it until now. The building will be a gem of architectural art, is well arranged and will well serve our purposes for years to come. I have spent almost six years with this congregation, and have seen the work grow slowly but steadily all this time. We owe much to Evangelist J. A. Bennett, Macatawa, Mich., who has held us two meetings which strengthened us greatly, both numerically and spiritually. Brother Bennett endeared himself during these meetings to all our people. His message is a gospel one; tender, loving, void of the sting of anger or malice, yet full of the truth. J. L. BRADY.

Japan.

Tokio, July 1.—Baptized three men yesterday. Have three native evangelists employed; work prosperous.—W. D. Cunningham.

Lawrenceburg, July 22.—We closed a week's engagement with 14 by confession and baptism, and one from another organization. All work was done by home forces, and we closed with a crowded house. Our Sunday-school workers made a very thorough house to house canvass of the town.—Walter C. Gibbs.

Michigan.

Benton Harbor, July 22.—Two additions last week and three confessions yesterday.—G. Roland Hull, minister.

Minnesota.

Worthington, July 22.—I had the privilege of being with the brethren here yesterday. G. N. Walker is their pastor, and they have had several accessions during the year.—J. P. Childs.

Mississippi.

Jackson.—I have just closed a nine days' meeting in Houston, with two baptisms and one by letter. This is a new church of about 35 members, organized by W. M. Baker, of Meridian, about eighteen months ago. This little band has bought a church house, with seats and all appurtenances, and paid for it in that time. Our meeting could not have been held in a more unfavorable time. There were two elections in the town during the meeting, one public entertainment, with public practice every night for another, while the meeting lasted.—M. F. Harmon, Living Link evangelist of Mississippi.

Missouri.

Crane, July 22.—We closed a two weeks' meeting here last night with ten added, seven by baptism, the church stronger and $70 raised for Stone county missions. We attended this county's convention, where Brother Blunt raised nearly $100 for the same purpose.—E. W. Williams and wife, evangelists; J. T. Harland, minister.

Wheatland, July 22.—Meeting one week old, with five confessions.—Pleasant Clark, pastor.

Salem, July 23.—We are having a great meeting, with J. V. Coombs and Miss May Park leading. Fifty-four added Sunday, July 21, eleven last night. There have been 77 baptisms to date, with 11 more to be baptized. Thirty-three have united by letter and statement, making 121 additions at the present writing. The Lord has greatly blessed us.—W. T. Walker.

Nebraska.

Falls City.—The church here, having been pastorless since April 1, asked me to hold them a meeting, following a union meeting that had just closed. I was with them ten days, during which time 32 were added to the church, and pledges were made toward a minister's salary to exceed $1,100. They hope to secure an efficient man, capable of leading them in a forward movement, for which the church seems ready and anxious.—Cassius V. Allison, Mound City, Mo.

New Mexico.

Roswell, July 22.—Five added yesterday, three by confession and baptism and two by letter.—C. C. Hill.

There have been two baptisms not reported there. I will hold a meeting at Stafford in August.—Ferdinand F. Schultz.

Oklahoma.

Lawton.—Fife and son, of Kansas City, are in a meeting here, nearing the close of the fourth week. There have been 150 additions to the church. The town has been greatly stirred. The meeting has been greatly handicapped by the small building, which does not seat more than 300. They will conduct two revivals during the month of August. Roger H. Fife, with J. Wallace Tapp as assistant, will lead the forces at California, Mo., in a tent meeting, and Clyde Lee, with his brother Robert as helper, will assist J. F. Bickel at Eldon. Their next engagement will be at Huntsville in September.

Perry, July 23.—The meeting led by Vawter and Wood resulted in 20 additions, and all departments of the church strengthened. Vawter is a tireless expounder of the Word, putting energy and love into his work. Wood is a fine singer, and together they do excellent work.—W. L. Dalton.

Texas.

Plano, July 17.—We are beginning a meeting here with fine prospects of success. G. L. Bush, of Gainesville, Texas, is the evangelist. E. H. Holmes is the minister. One addition to-day.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

Abilene, July 18.—Eight additions in the last two weeks. We begin a revival August 1.—Granville Snell.

Canyon, July 18.—Closed three weeks' meeting with ten additions, five by confession and baptism, the others by letter and statement. J. L. Haddock did the preaching and Talmadge Stanley led the music with a cornet.—J. H. McCartney.

Tyler.—We closed a good meeting here, with 23 added. There was a union tent meeting carried on at the same time. The church feels that our meeting has done them a great deal of good. Our next meeting is at Garden Valley.—Clark family.

Venus, July 22.—Just closed a short meeting here with nine additions. Alverada and Venus desire to employ a good minister.—W. F. Reynolds.

Virginia.

Skelton, July 24.—At my last appointment here Brother Crites was with me, and we set the church in order and had three additions. At Mt. Hope we received one by statement and one from another body. Harvey Lee, of Bethany College, is now in a meeting there, with several additions.—A. M. Dial.

A Big Difference.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist.

Your editorial, "A Big Difference," is one of the best—I think the best—you have ever written. It states "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth" so clearly, so intelligibly that it leaves no excuse for misrepresentation.

The Kind of Preachers.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist.

An article in The Christian-Evangelist of July 4 by J. W. McGarvey says there is a loud and increasing cry for more preachers. I believe the writer is mistaken. The cry is not for more, but better preachers. We want preachers not of the mere scholastic type, but good men, filled with the Holy Spirit; men whose preaching will make it so that hypocrisy shall be cleaned out of the Church and everything that savors of professional and conventional Christianity. We need men in the pulpit who have been born again and have the grace to know how to do those things that will turn the world upside down.

S. P. Henry.

Worth While Reading.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

The Church is held back in the conquest of the world because the people do not know. Mission offerings are small for the same reason. If they only knew, I am persuaded the Kingdom would go forward by leaps.

Read, friends of Christ! Inform yourselves. One of the richest missionary books that has come to my hand this year—and there have been nearly a score of them—is "Our Moslem Sisters." These twenty or more chapters, written by as many missionaries of long experience in various Mohammedan countries, will tell you more of the terrible life lived by Moslem women than you will learn in many moons otherwise. You will seldom spend $1.25 to greater profit. The soul-fire you will get will burn many a day to the benefit of our Lord's kingdom.

BUNCH.

David Bunch died near Drakesville, Ia., July 5, 1907, aged 85 years. He was a faithful Christian and elder for many years. His life was a great blessing to the world and his good works follow him. Funeral services by the writer.

Floris, Ia. E. A. Hastings.

CLARK.

John Franklin Clark, who was born May 15, 1871, died April 21, 1907. He had been a Disciple for a number of years. He leaves a widow and several children. Services were conducted by Francis M. Biddle, his minister, from the late home of the deceased, Newcastle, Pa., assisted by Erwin Stafford, of the Third church.

HAYS.

George Campbell Hays was born in Overton County, Tenn., September 25, 1828, came with his parents to Ralls County in 1835, and settled in New London where he continued to reside until the day of his death, July 20, 1907, following a stroke of paralysis which he sustained July 24, 1906. His father was a Virginian, and mother a Kentuckian. The father of deceased was a soldier in the war of 1812, his grandfather was a soldier in the war for the national independence, while he was a soldier in the Civil War from 1861 to 1865. During his residence in New London he saw two generations come and go. Brother Hays was educated principally under a private instructor; he was a splendid Greek and Latin scholar, a man of wide reading, and one by nature richly endowed. He had a mind well stored with such information as made him a valuable part of community life. In 1854, he was married to Miss Mary J. Wise. To this union were born six children, five of whom, together with his faithful wife, survive him. He united with the Christian Church under the preaching of John A. Brooks in 1873. For years prior to this time he was a constant attendant upon church service, and the leader of song before organs came into use. During his entire church life none more faithful could be found. Too much of the Lord's work could not be put upon him. Careful, circumspect in life, guarded in conversation, gentle and tender by nature, cultured and scholarly, he was of incalculable value to the cause which he espoused. For many years he was an elder in this congregation. The strong and unwavering faith of our brother during all the years of his Christian life, and especially during his illness which lasted for one year, was such as to beget faith in the rest of us. Judging from his own utterances, when he realized that he could never regain his health, he longed for the end to come,—"to be unclothed that he might be clothed upon with his house which is from heaven." Gladly did he exchange mortality for immortality. To his faithful, Christian wife and children we extend heartfelt sympathy in this hour of their sorrow, and would remind them that they should not sorrow as those without hope, knowing that through Jesus Christ they may also come to a glorious immortality, and be with him who has gone on before, through the Ages of the Ages.

REED.

Belle McMillen Reed was the daughter of George W. and Cornelia (Field) McMillen, and was born in Bracken county, Kentucky, April 13, 1850. The remaining members of her father's family are J. W. McMillen, ex-representative and lawyer, Kansas City, Mo.; Dr. Drewry J. McMillen, dean of Dental College, Kansas City; John A. McMillen, banker, Mooresville, Mo.; Dr. Geo. A. McMillen, Alton, Ill., and Mrs. Lucy M. French, Kansas City, Mo. Belle McMillen was united in marriage to O. S. Reed March 21, 1867, and in all his labors as minister, lecturer and author, she shared as a true helpmeet. She had come to Toledo, O., to visit her daughter, Mrs. Charles S. Hitchcock, and after an illness of only a few days she departed this life July 12. Her husband, who is now pastor of the church at Ladoga, Ind., reached the city the morning after her death. The two daughters from Cleveland, Mrs. Maude Bachmann and Mrs. Lucille V. Painter, with their brother, Lovell Reed, of Terra Alta, W. Va., reached the city after her departure. Mrs. Reed was a noble woman, gifted with a genial disposition, varied abilities, an artist and authoress. Her funeral was held in the Central church, Cleveland. The ministers of the city were in attendance. The minister of the Central Church read an extended obituary and the Netz sisters sang.

Many messages of sympathy were received by Brother Reed from all the churches he had served and from a wide circle of friends. He returns to his work in Ladoga with the sympathy of all who knew his great sorrow.

SHAFFER.

William Shaffer, who was born September 25, 1906, died at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Shaffer, April 15, 1907. Services were conducted by their minister, Francis M. Biddle, Newcastle, Pa.

WITWER.

Weaver D. Witwer, of Topeka, Kan., died May 24, 1907. He was the oldest of that stalwart band of Witwer brothers, who have ever been a bulwark to our cause wherever they have been located. In later years they have been most widely known in connection with the Cedar Rapids, Ia., church. The deceased was a pioneer in the church at Williamsville, N. Y., and afterward a charter member of the Rockport, Ill., church and also of the First Church, Topeka, Kan. His family consists of his wife and six worthy children, one of whom is Mrs. B. T. Wharton, of Marshall, Mo. These, especially his aged wife, a true "mother in Israel," have the deepest sympathy of many friends. He was a subscriber to The Christian-Evangelist, I think, from its beginning. No better man ever lived. B. T. W.

IN MEMORY OF LULIE M. TAYLOR.

What "eye hath never seen,"
Spreads fair before her sight;
Her sweet eyes hold the sheen
Of heaven's beauty bright.

What "ear hath never heard,"
Those sounds divine, eternal,
Her raptured sense have stirred
And filled with joy supernal.

What "to the heart of man ne'er came
And entered"—"things prepared
For them that love His holy name,"
With God her heart has shared.

For oh, she loved Him well,
His paths of beauty trod:
To her, the Spirit aye will tell
The deep things of her God.

The Tragedy of a Soul.

Topic, Aug. 7.—Luke 22: 3, 4.

This story of the betrayal of Jesus by Judas is well called "The Tragedy of a Soul." It was infamous, beyond that of any other betrayal of which we have a record in history. It was the betrayal of the Master by one of his chosen disciples, one, too, whom he had especially honored and trusted; for Judas carried the money bag, indicating that he was especially entrusted with the interests of the Master and his fellow disciples.

What was the motive of this strange betrayal? Apart from the question of pre-ordination, which is beyond us, the human elements are worthy of our consideration. First then as to the character of the man. He was mercenary in spirit. This was shown clearly in the case of the woman who broke the alabaster box of precious ointment on the body of the Master. It was Judas that said, "Why this waste? This ointment might have been sold for three hundred pence and given to the poor." "This he said," adds John, "not that he cared for the poor, but because he was a thief, and having the bag, took away what was put therein." This is a plain, blunt statement of the fact, by one of his fellow apostles, who was in position to know. John intimates that he had stolen from the common purse. The words "took away" mean more than simply carried or "bare," as in the old version. If the whole history were written, it would show Judas up in a sad light before the time of the betrayal. A man does not do a deed like that without some previous betrayal of sacred friendship and trust. Men do not become a "thief" in the sense in which Judas is named, except by a course of duplicity and deceit, such as we are sure marked the career of this miserable man. There is scarce a shadow of doubt that he joined the apostolic company with the design of making it pay. He was a thrifty fellow.

The money-loving Jew finds his type in this Judas, who betrayed the Master for thirty pieces of silver. And their sort is not confined to the Jews, though they seem to be among the most grasping and low-minded of their class. They are known the world around for their bargain-driving proclivities. In country and city they thrive, and they are the same petty, mercenary set the world over.

But there are other factors in the case. Judas was a Jerusalem Jew. His friends were of the class that haunted the national capital and dominated in creating, fomenting and guiding public sentiment. It was this thing called "public sentiment", manipulated by the Pharisees and Scribes, whose religious and political interests were at stake, that really crucified Christ. It was their influence that cunningly led the crafty soul of Judas on to the consummation of the supreme act of perfidy. Judas was himself the willing victim of his friends—those who flattered him and used him for their own wretched ends. Of course they cared nothing for him, as shown in their treatment of him when he brought back the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, saying, "I have sinned in that I betrayed innocent blood." But they said unto him, "What is that to us? See thou to it!" For downright cold-blooded, hard-nearted wretches, these chief priests and elders out-Judas Judas. For he repented himself and cast down the silver into the sanctuary and departed and went and hanged himself. Pitiful as was his end, there is something tragic in this sudden remorse that seems to have swept his soul in the hour of revelation. He went to his "own place." What place? I don't know! Let the Christ who knows the secrets of the heart and the tragedies of the soul judge even Judas. There is infinite pathos in it all. But what about Satan entering into Judas? Well, such characters, under such circumstances, are in a fair way to receive the insinuations of the Tempter of men. He could not enter into Judas without his consent. The betrayal of Jesus was a voluntary act on the part of Judas. "Every soul stands or falls before his own master." In his case, Judas gave Satan the mastery, and he fell. It is the old tragedy of sin and shame—old as the race!

S. Topic.

"He shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water." On a day like this with the thermometer registering 90 and still rising, the comparison in these words is appealing and tantalizing. Who would not, if he could to-day, be under such a tree? Rest under its shade and refreshment in its fruit, gladness in its beauty, quietness of soul as we think of its steadfastness, deep rooted in the earth beneath.

"He shall be like a tree." We may be like that. That is, we may be a delight to all who observe us, our lives a "thing of beauty and a joy forever." Our lives may impart to others a sense of strength and steadfastness. Men may leave us more patient and consequently more brave and strong. Hungry souls and weary hearts may leave us fed and rested.

In such a life as this true blessing inheres. "Blessed is the man" who through the observance of certain things, becomes "like a tree." How may we young people realize such a beautiful ideal? Some of our summer-day dream hours may well be given to learning this wondrous secret.

The secret, like multitudes of other mysteries, is clearly revealed. We need only to recall the words of the first psalm which most of us have hid in our hearts.

How simple it all is—"his delight is in the law of Jehovah, and in his law doth he meditate day and night." That is all. But it is sufficient. A life intelligently surrendered to the law of Jehovah can not be otherwise than "like a tree planted by the rivers of waters." This beautiful life is produced by the "law of Jehovah" as naturally and as inevitably as the beautiful tree is produced by the law of nature.

What are we to do? Only two things—first of all, "delight in the law of Jehovah." Read and study the Bible because we delight to do so and because of the consequent delightsomeness which must come into our lives. And as we read it with such an appetite we shall find ourselves meditating upon it day and night. Ragtime music and literary trash and puerile gossip will have no place for the more delightful meditations which fill our minds and occupy our thoughts.

Are we willing to pay the price? It takes time to grow a fine tree. It takes time and trouble and money to bring a fruit tree into beauty and richness. But the law of nature will reward our efforts. So in this matter of a beautiful life—it takes time and effort and trouble and waiting, but the law of Jehovah transforms human lives.

Is it not strange that we miss so much in our lives from ignorance of Jehovah's law, from unwillingness to surrender ourselves to it? What a sin against our fellow-men our unlovely lives are? How much of needed beauty and rest and strength and refreshment are we denying them because of our neglect of one of the fundamental laws of divine growth. It is one's duty to be as beautiful as one can, in face, in form, in carriage, but especially in life. It is a debt we owe to others.

Suppose we do not choose to do this? Then we shall be "like the chaff which the wind driveth away." The secret of a light, frivolous, aimless, restless, valueless, lost life lies in the neglect of the "law of Jehovah" by which alone life can develop.

Such a refusal means to choose the path against which we are warned in the first verse, the "counsel of the ungodly," the "way of sinners," the "seat of the scornful." There is neither loveliness nor help in such a life as that.

Let us thank God for the beautiful trees. Let us resolve like them, to submit our lives to the power of the higher law, that God, our Creator as he is theirs, may fulfill the beautiful purposes of our being.

The Sin of Nadab and Abihu.—Lev. 10:1-11.

Memory Verse: 9.

Golden Text.—Wine is a mocker; strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.—Prov. 20:1.

The Hebrew religious system was essentially a system of a priesthood. That is to say, it was a system in which the common people were not supposed to come into direct and immediate relations with God, but were expected to employ priests as intermediaries. The priests were to be the connecting link between God and man. The people made their offerings and sacrifices and presented their petitions through the priesthood, and through the priesthood the will of God was to be revealed to men.

The advantage of such a system for a people in the stage of development which Israel then occupied, was that it gave the people a definite and fixed mode of worship and prevented them from running into every abuse and irregularity of worship which their fancies or their knowledge of heathen practices might suggest. The disadvantage was that the connecting link always tended to become a separating wall between God and man. The priesthood, originally designed to afford a means of connection and a means of communication between the Deity and the worshiper, gradually took to themselves the whole process of worship except the most barren formalities, and became a positive barrier between God and man. So it has been in every priestly system, from the earliest prehistoric religion to the Roman Catholicism of to-day.

There have been times, however, when such a system was wise and necessary. But the prime requisite in such a case is a worthy priesthood. The priests must be thoroughly obedient to the divine will, as well as absolutely devoted to the religious interests of the people whom they serve. If they fail, the whole system breaks down. So it was necessary to punish with terrible severity any unfaithfulness of the priesthood, just as it is necessary in time of war to punish severely a sentinel whose unfaithfulness or negligence endangers the safety of the whole army.

Nadab and Abihu, sons of Aaron and next to him in priestly dignity, "offered strange fire before Jehovah." And fire came forth and destroyed them. A trifling offense and a terrible punishment, we say. Going to sleep is also a trifling offense, but the rule of war is that the sentinel who sleeps dies. It is not required of a priest that he shall initiate. It is required that he shall obey. Obedience is not the last or the highest of virtues, even in religion. But it is the first and the most fundamental. There can be no intelligent religion which does not begin with it. The offering of strange fire may seem a small matter, but it stood for innovation at a time when innovations were not to be endured. In religion, as in life, the first lesson to be learned is that of obedience. After that, one may pass on to deeper and higher and more spiritual lessons. But Nadab and Abihu had not learned that first and most essential lesson, and they were therefore disqualified for any useful and acceptable service.

Another essential requirement of a priest is purity. In the old days, the priests were required to be more pure than the people. A remnant of this belief lingers in the feeling that there is one standard of morals for the clergy and another for the laity. Many a church member does things which he does not think that his preacher ought to do. It was this requirement of extra purity in the priesthood which led to the precept that Aaron and his sons should not drink wine. There was a feeling, even in those days, that drinking wine was not conducive to the development of the best virtues and the highest spirituality. The people could do as they pleased about it, for the highest degree of spirituality was not required of them. But the priests, who were to be the religious guides of the people and their mediators with God, must keep themselves free from it.

What was a piece of special legislation for the priests has become, for the same reason, a common requirement upon all. We have passed out of the age of priests. The minister of to-day is not a priest. He is, or should be, a teacher of religion and morality, and he must teach by his life as well as by his words; but he occupies no priestly position between God and man. Every believer is his own priest. Every man must, therefore, put away from him those things which would interfere with the highest and best development of his moral and spiritual life. We can no longer benefit, vicariously, by the abstinence of others. When called to account for what we have done or left undone, we can not answer, like Tomlinson, at heaven's gate:

"Oh, I had a friend on earth," he said, "who was my priest and guide,
And well would he answer all for me, if he were by my side."

The universal priesthood means not only freedom from the burden of priestly tyranny; it means, also, that every man is responsible for maintaining as high a standard of morality as he expects of his religious teachers. The only way in which we can profit by the morality or the abstinence of another is by imitating it.

The Home Department

My Mother's Garden.

Her heart was like her garden,
Old fashioned, quaint and sweet,
A wealth of buds and blossoms
Hid in a still retreat.

Sweet violets of sympathy
Were always opening there,
And lilies white and pure unclosed,
Each one a whispered prayer.

Forget-me-nots there lingered,
To late perfection brought,
And there bloomed purple pansies
In many a tender thought.

There Hope's first snowdrops took deep root
And flowered because they must;
There Love's own roses reached toward heaven
On trellises of trust.

And in that quiet garden—
The garden of her heart—
Songbirds built nests and caroled
Their songs of Cheer apart.

And from it still floats back to us,
O'ercoming sin and strife,
Sweet as the breath of roses blown,
The fragrance of her life.

"Not as the World."

CHAPTER VI.

A Just Judge.

It is too late! Ah, nothing is too late
Till the tired heart shall cease to palpitate.
For age is opportunity no less
Than youth itself, though in another dress.
And as the evening twilight fades away,
The sky is filled with stars invisible by day.
—Longfellow.

Thou has made us for Thyself, and the heart never resteth, till it findeth rest in Thee.—St. Augustine.

Dr. Reid went over to the other end of the corridor and stood in silence, when there came to his mind this passage of Scripture:

"Thus saith the Lord God, I will yet for this be inquired of," and he praved: "O Lord, forgive me that I have walked in my own wisdom and strength, and have not inquired of thee concerning the way I should take. Make a way even in this extremity, my Father, even as thou always hast done for thy people who trusted in thee." While he was thus lifting his heart to the Father who seeth in secret, there came to his mind the fact that he had been to see Judge Taylor that morning at the hospital and that he was expecting to hold his court there for a few days, while he was being treated for a slight disability, until he could resume his functions again in the city hall. Seizing his hat he stepped over to the hospital and aroused the old judge, laying the case before him.

"Why, certainly," said the Judge, drawing down his portfolio. He hastily drew up a writ of habeas corpus. "Put that into Sheriff Lane's hands and bring the president before me at once," said he.

The ambulance was waiting at the door, and inside of twenty minutes they bore the president before the judge, who declared that there was no cause for his detention longer in the prison.

The decision being given, they placed him upon the operating table, and the skilled hand of Doctor Reid soon had the fractured bone into place, and the scalp nicely mended and ready to unite with the skull from which it had been taken for the operation.

Mrs. Brown was then called up and acquainted with the condition of her husband, and she too was soon at his side.

Dr. Reid could not sleep that night from the thoughts which the article that had appeared brought to him. What did it mean, anyhow? How did it happen that such an unfriendly attitude had been assumed by the paper, to himself and the president? How could the editor, who had always appeared such a gentleman and so courteous to them, lend himself to such an astonishing article, in which there were no less than a score of plain falsehoods and as many more implied and misleading statements that were as false as could possibly obtain?

This was not a new experience to him, however, for he had been intimately acquainted with the Ottoman, and his unreliable disposition. He had known the Turkish journalist to print the most astonishing falsehoods about Christians and the truth; but to find this practice in Christian America! and that too by a man who claimed to be a model of moral conduct and an extraction of Christian parents, was more than he could solve.

Then his mind ran on to the president's case. How did it happen? The president must have gone into the saloon to see Mr. Schlitz about the article, and was probably set upon by a drunken mob, and some one had struck him with a piece of glass. Yes, he had taken some broken pieces of glass out of the wound. The judge came into the office, saying that he felt so badly that he could not sleep either, and wanted to talk about affairs at the college, the president's case in particular.

"Don't it beat all," said the judge, injecting a huge pinch of snuff into his nostrils and adjusting his skull cap, "how all-fired quick things have taken a turn in this town since the day of that contest?

"Now, doctor, I ain't no Christian, never wuz, and don't know that I ever can be one, but ef I ever am, I want to be and will be consistent. (Bringing his cane down with a thump.)

"I have been a judge on this bench for the past twenty years, and let me tell you, doctor, I have come to know about everybody in this city, and that like an open book. Let me say right here, that Schlitz and his gang are the worst set of cutthroats out of jail, and I am sorry to say it, but they are maintained and suffered by the so-called Christian people of this community.

"How, do you ask? Well, first by their votes. There is a superstition, or fool notion, that the town could not prosper without the saloon. It has somehow gotten into the unwritten curriculum of popular holding, that trade would be dull and that a town would have grass in its streets, and people would go where they could get beer, and all that kind of nonsense, so they must allow the saloon full swing here.

"When this town was incorporated, they got up all kinds of stories about what would happen if we did not have the saloon, and they have kept up the deception ever since, so as to keep the votes of a majority of the people in its favor. And say what you will they let the unmitigated curse that it is go on damning the young men of the place to the fullest extent of its power, and yet, at the election, enough so-called Christians will deliberately walk up and cast a ballot to continue the blighting institution indefinitely, just the same.

"And I will show you the secret of it. Schlitz runs the town, with his money, college, churches, lodges, paper and society; and he is a murderer, a thief, a seducer, a villain; and so are many who, like himself, move in higher circles and pass for fine fellows. I know them, doctor, I know what I am talking about. If doctors Jannes and Jambres, his co-partners in that paper, had their just deserts, they would be on the gallows this minute, and I would be glad to put them there. They have long wanted a chance at you and Brown, and now they have taken their opportunity.

"My daughter told me of your talk at chapel, and also how she was at the dormitory that night, and knew of the circumstances connected with the Gordon tragedy. She saw Mrs. Gordon and heard her talk to you and the president. Got acquainted with the trained nurse they had there, and she is all taken with them and, doctor, I believe that is the nearest like gospel religion that I ever heard. I believe every word my daughter told me. It compares with Christ's methods, as we read of them in the good book. But just as sure as you are a foot high, doctor, it won't go here. You see, if I don't tell the truth about it. Why, it would mean that Schlitz must surrender his right to damn humanity with his accursed system of saloons and brothels and gambling hells. The devil is a wise old fool. He scents true Christianity afar off, and he cries out: 'Why hast thou come to torment us before the time?' It would mean, doctor, that Drs. Jannes and Jambres would have to give up their dirty practice of the slaughter of the innocents. Oh, I know those two men just as well as if I had wheeled the bog muck to make 'em. I could write a whole book of things about them that I try hard to forget.

"But say, Doc, you and President Brown will never get redress for these grievances in this life. Never. No, sir, never! Mark what I tell you. I know the world too well. You are both marked for martyrs, and so is every true man and woman in this world, who has the courage of his convictions.

"Let me whisper something to you, Doc, I would venture to bet my head agin' a tater, that it was Schlitz' son who hit the president, and it was one or both of those scape-graces of Dr. Jambres' who kicked Gordon; and young Jannes was in it, too, and that accounts for the whole affair from beginning to end. But you can't get around the secret influence that they are entrenched behind. They are members of those Greek fraternities, and also of other orders in the city, that would raise all hell to protect them. Then there is the political influence, which, if you could get past all the rest, would put up walls of impassable difficulty before you. The delays of courts; the unfaithfulness of officials; the bribing of witnesses and jurymen, and in the end, if you got the rope about their necks, ten chances to one they would slip the noose by some such device as they put up on a "black leg" here ten years ago, when they hung him in a swing of some sort, and that same Dr. Jambres pronounced him dead, and they put him in his coffin and slipped him out under cover of the night, and when we got wind of it, we couldn't prove a continental thing, for all who knew of it were as deep in the mud as the rest were in the mire. And they swore like troopers to clear themselves. Finally one squealed on the rest, and I'll be broke if they didn't shoot him before we could get his testimony.

"Then, doctor, the press of this country is in just about the shape that this paper is in. It is well-nigh impossible to get truth on matters of out-and-out justice and reform. If the papers of this country are not owned by such combinations as this one is, they are, as a rule, subsidized by the whisky rings and monopolies of the land. I do not say that all are so, but a big majority are. They can slander men into silence and compliance, and yet go unpunished, because they have the laws fixed up to suit themselves.

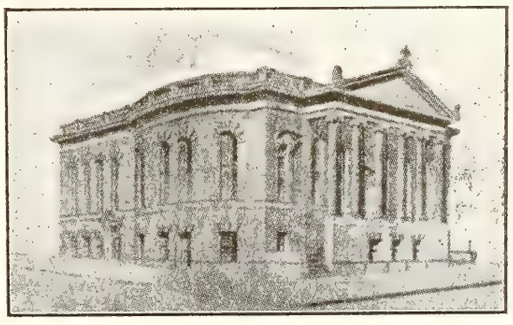
If you and President Brown should bring suit against this paper to-morrow, all they would have to do, would be to publish a little retraction of what they have said in some obscure corner in the smallest type they could find, and a court would be obliged to dismiss the case upon presentation of such evidence.

"I have in mind a preacher, who tried to clean up the town at one time, and they told some of the blackest lies on him that ever were hatched in the heart of Beelzebub, and he brought suit before me, and before I could arraign the guilty parties, they just printed one little squib not longer than a man's thumb nail, way down in the lower corner of the inside page of the last sheet, amongst some odds and ends that nobody ever reads. And, siree! I was powerless. There was their law, and it was satisfied.

"There they had raked that poor fellow fore and aft, with great screaming head lines, day after day on their first pages. Had him caught in all kinds of vileness; doing things, which if true, would have put him in the pen the remainder of his days. Not a word of it true, but it just ruined him. He never got a church after that.

"No man can hold this college presidency, who undertakes to run counter to their vile practices. No preacher can hold a pulpit here, who preaches the truth about these things. Let a preacher open out just one Sunday, and proclaim the gospel in its power and original purpose, and I am prepared to believe that his vestrymen, deacons or elders, would be at his door the next morning, with a request for his resignation.

"For instance, each of these doctors holds a prominent place upon church boards, and there are others like them, and Schlitz uses his money freely in all the prominent churches.



"Do you suppose that Doctor Tipler could accept and preach anything that woud displace Dr. James, who is his leading elder? Does it not stand to reason that he cannot displease Schlitz either, under the circumstances? Isn't it a pretty pass, Doc, that a pastor of the church of the lowly Nazarene must be tied up and hampered in the proclamation of the truth by such men?

"Why bless your eyes, Doc, it is impossible as the religion of to-day stands allied with the world, to do anything else but dance to their piping, and mourn when they lament. You see the preacher's salary is dependent upon how he pleases the worldly-minded patrons of his church. If like Paul, he tells them the truth, he becomes their enemy, and if like Jesus, he insists upon the practice of the truth, they will crucify him.

"They may not put up a wooden cross and nail him to it, but they will by a thousand ways, put him to an ignominious death, metaphorically, if not physically and literally.

"I understand that a man can preach a nice gospel and smooth things over and comb the wool all the right way, and shut his eyes to evil and not have much trouble. But I am suspicious that such a man denies his Lord and Master, and will do mighty little regenerating work, that will count before the bar of God. I just clipped a little piece from a church paper published out west somewhere, that speaks my sentiments, and is, I believe, the truth. It seems to have been written by a man who himself has had some experience in the ministry, and it reads:

"'Now after some years of popularity and the lack of it, I am persuaded that the truer men are to God the less popular they will be. The world and the church need men who care not for popularity, but for Christ; yes, God is calling for men who after counting the cost will take up their cross and follow him who was the most unpopular man the world ever saw.'"

After reading this the judge sat as if thinking of something far away. Doctor Reid's heart was too sad to utter his pent up mind. All that the judge had said was true, too true. And Dr. Reid had spent his three score years in a mixed manner, not always following his conscience and the leadings of God's word, but pleasing men and receiving their praise to a large extent, and now the one time in his life that he took the course that he knew to be the right one, behold how soon he is brought into derision!

But he could stand it for himself, if it was only he, for he had no family now, and but few years yet to bear the burdens of life. But the president, with his six children to rear, and he in a critical condition, with the slander of a great newspaper and the misrepresentations of such a strong combination of unprincipled men to meet, with no one of influence as he could see to help him, if what the judge had said was true, and it must be (for Judge Taylor was a man of rare probity, one who could be relied upon in most intricate cases, to get at the exact truth and right of a matter, if it could be had at all), since the judge had such a wide experience in worldly matters, that his word was looked upon as final when a decision was rendered. Here he had rendered one at length to him, which he knew to be true upon first thought, and because it was, it made him very sad

The judge rallied out of his reverie of thought and drew his big silk handkerchief across his eyes: "Yes, doctor, I played truant with God," he said, as if he had been speaking his thoughts aloud. "I ought to have preached the gospel, but I saw what it involved, and I could not bear the cross and follow my Master in one direction and bear a palm of worldly glory and praise and follow my own inclinations in another at the same time. But I have gone back to the dividing of the ways, where I diverged fifty odd years ago, and Doc, by the help of God, I am going to follow Christ the remainder of my days. I have counted the cost, and it will take all I have, and that will not atone for the past, but with the grace of Christ to make up the deficit, here it is," holding out his hand to the doctor, which he grasped with a "God bless you, judge. May he give you years yet in which to serve him."

At this point Mrs. Brown came into the office and requested the doctor to come in and see the president, as he was passing through a strange symptom.

Try It.

A famous English gardener once heard a nobleman say, complainingly: "I can not have a rose garden, though I have often tried, because the soil around my castle is too poor for roses."

"That is no reason at all," replied the gardener. "You must go to work and make it better. Any ground can be made fit for roses if pains are taken to prepare it. The poorest soil can be made rich."

It was a wise saying, and it is true in other places than rose gardens. Some young people say, "I can't be cheerful," or "I can't be sweet-tempered," or, "I can't be forgiving," as if they were not responsible for the growths in their soul garden because the soil is poor. But "any ground can be made fit for roses," any heart can be made fit for the loveliest blossoms of character.—Young People.

I Remember the Alamo.

March 27.—After about six hours' sleep in our berth (I wonder how a man can pass a night in chair cars, crowded in with people who talk and tramp about all night?) we went to our toilet room, where anybody may shave while the train is speeding southward, anybody but me. Why do people talk about the discomforts and dangers of "sleepers," and, instead of a Pullman, cramp themselves in a chair, with no place to put their feet or means to keep the light out of their eyes, or to close their ears to the incessant noises? They say talk is cheap, and in this case the proverb is justified. But a person shouldn't travel for fun and try to be economical; it is so much cheaper to stay at home; and it wears the nerves to find what an expense you are to yourself when you keep an eye single on expenses.

At 7:30 we reached San Antonio. If you want to appear to the railroad man as a primary in the dusty art of travel, you call it "San Antonio"; but if you want people to know you have been out before you give it three syllables, thus, San-an-tone, with a hard hit at the tone. It is particularly gratifying to have a chance to say San-an-tone before travelers who never heard it that way before, and who take such labored and fruitless care to roll the "io" on the tips of their inexperienced tongues.

The train drew up at a beautiful station house which is a careful imitation of an old Spanish castle or fort or something medieval. There are towers and ramparts and walks upon the walls, and all in all it's the most artistic bit of architecture in the city. But I never heard any one speak a word of praise, because it was just "the pot," you know. It has a magnificent park at one side, set with palms and ferns and all kinds of greenery shaped into beautiful forms, and instead of a front porch, the tiled roof of the massive stone building is drawn out over the smooth brick pavement, making an open-air square set with rustic benches. Seated here you look back at the station-castle, and wonder at the vines clinging to the hoary stones (apparently hoary) and weighted down with full blown rose. On the other side of the track you see a row of dusty, dilapidated and ragged banana-trees with something like half-formed ears of corn growing on their yellow cornstalks of bodies,—and you pronounce banana-trees the poor dumb asses of the vegetable kingdom. Just as at New Orleans, these bananas never get ripe; they are always stolen.

One reason why we saw a good deal of this station was, that on leaving the car we found a wheel of Jebly's tricycle had been smashed in the baggage-car. The train for Mexico was due to leave at noon, and there was a good deal of excitement in getting the wheel to the repair shop and persuading the mechanic to hurry the work. By noon the wheel was as good as new; charges, $2. By that time Jebly knew each fern, palm and cactus in the plaza. There were a good many Mexicans in the square, looking uncommonly like the reputation their race has spread abroad. None of them could speak English; but in asking a question they said "Huh?" and in laughing they said "Ha, ha, ha!" so they were not altogether incomprehensible.

As soon as Jebly could ply his tricycle we left the station and started for the other one, about two miles away; but finding our train was five hours late we stopped up town for dinner, and went to rest in a pretty little park called "Milam Place." It has a fountain, of course, which, of course, wasn't running; and there is a statue of a man with this under it: "Who will follow Ben Milam into San Antonio?" I asked a man in the park who did follow him, but he only said, "No comprendo." Another man, more light-complexioned, said he though Ben Milam had been killed near the spot on taking San Antonio from the Mexicans. This reminded me that I was on historic ground. As we had expected to sail to Mexico across the Gulf, this stop at San Antonio was a pure accident, and we had not read up anything about it. We were glad the train was late. Even with this most historic ground, they have modern methods, for as Morton lay full length upon the thick, but coarse, grass, an attendant came up and said the policeman would arrest him if he didn't get off. The sun was unbearably hot where the benches stood; in fact there was no shade except on the grass, so we left. Across the street stands a large building, an ice-cream factory. They manufacture ice-cream by the hogshead, and I suppose it is done just as we manufacture ice, for apparently there is no cream used in the process.

Leaving this disappointment, we went to the heart of the city, to study the people. They form a marked contrast to the crowds that throng the spacious thorofares of New Orleans. The city itself is distinguished by extremely high sidewalks that kept Jebly's tricycle jolting along over cobblestones and cedar-block roads. At the end of the pavements one finds two or three steps coming down to the crossing; steps of careless height. I think perhaps the pavements are built not to keep wayfarers out of the water—for the city seems dry—but because the Texans have such long legs and ample feet. They like to step high, perhaps, being built for it. At New Orleans it seemed that the cream of southern beauty had been collected; but at San Antonio the women—well, it wasn't in evidence. I think all the pretty women staid at home, that day. It was a Wednesday. Perhaps they were resting up to go to prayer-meeting. Now, I am interested in people as they are, and care no more about beauty than I do about money. Not so Morton; and when he had looked at two or three thousand souls without finding a face to delight his eye, he set out upon his favorite method of consuming time by hunting for that particular variety of suspenders which, it seems, nobody but he ever dreamed of. While he was exciting the hopes of shop-dealers, I espied a very old-looking building at the head of a street and went to look at it. And it was the Alamo, which you must pronounce Ahly-mo, no matter how dear to you may be your old way of saying, "Remember the Alamo." I hadn't remembered it, I am ashamed to say, but I was as jubilant over my find as if every schoolboy oughtn't to know that the Ahly-mo is at San-an-tone. I persuaded Morton from the suspenders, and we found that Jebly's tricycle would roll right into this historic building. Although the day was tropically hot, as soon as we passed under that portal, we entered a cool, rock-smelling atmosphere. Walls of a yard's width surrounded us. The front door opens into a large central chamber. On either side are small rooms or cells, with curved stone ceilings, and floors of the same earth trodden by the heroic defenders of the fort. The windows are guarded by iron bars. There is no access to the upstairs. The powder vault where Evans was killed while trying to blow up the magazine, has no opening except into a dimly-lighted cell. It is like a dungeon hollowed out of a rock. The house was built in 1718 for a convent, although some encyclopedias say it was built for a fort. They don't know; I have been there. The upstairs, now closed up, was used by the choir. The little rooms where Evans and Bowie were killed, had been used by isolated worshipers of God, who had regarded the religious life as a lonesome business.

The way you think of the Alamo depends, I should imagine, on whether or not you are a Mexican. All this part of the country formed once a Mexican state, and when the Mexican government allowed Austin to bring two hundred American families here to colonize, it of course supposed they were coming for the good of Mexico; but they weren't. They prospered, and when Mexico forbade the immigration of any more Americans, the colonists and their descendants asserted their independence from Mexico, and rallied under Sam Houston. They believed in States' Rights, you see, and when Mexico sent Santa Anna to put down the rebellion, or secession, or independence, or whatever you choose to call it, it was not unlike General Grant taking his horse to see about things down South. Only Santa Anna wasn't Grant; he couldn't be, for he was a Mexican. It was in 1836 that Santa Anna, with 4,000 men, surrounded Fort Alamo, including within its grim walls 140 Americans under Colonel Travis. After a desperate and valorous defense, the Americans were obliged to surrender on promise of their lives being spared. As there were only six of them left, and still several thousand of the enemy, Santa Anna could well grant this condition, especially as he had no intention of keeping his word. That last contest had been terrible in its slaughter and hopelessness. The Americans, unable any longer to keep the Mexicans at bay, and seeing them pour over the ramparts, clubbed their muskets, and taking heavy toll for every wound, died in a mangled heap about their leaders. The six who survived, and who gave up their weapons on promise of protection, included Evans, Bowie and Crockett. Santa Anna ordered them instantly killed. Yet we are told that Evans was killed while trying to blow up the powder magazine. Was this after his promise of protection? We were shown the room where Bowie died. "He was wounded and lay in the room on the right," said the lady who sells souvenir post-cards in the central chamber; "he died in the room on the left, after making the men carry him in his bed across the line Santa Anna had forbidden him to cross." Now, if Santa Anna had marked out a line, why didn't Bowie stay on the right side of it? I wonder if Santa Anna has had all said for him that he deserved on that occasion? That he was treacherous, all proclaim; but did he have no provocation? As to David Crockett, his death in the Alamo seems a fitting ending to an adventurous, picturesque and patriotic life. It is worth much to his fame that he did not die peacefully of old age, And it seems prophetic of any career mapped out on his principle of "Be sure you're right, then go ahead,"—that posterity will treat you better than your contemporaries. Bowie is better known as the inventor of a certain kind of knife than as the prisoner who had his bleeding form carried across a line. He made a knife, once, of a blacksmith's file, and when he had killed a man with it—let us hope, some man who was better dead,—the knife was found to work, so it was taken as a model for the effective blade of the ranger. I can imagine the rugged fighter, covered with wounds, commanding the men to carry his helpless body whither his conqueror had forbidden an American to pass. He must have known he would be killed; he simply wanted to show that he was not afraid. I have known people just like that. Well, not very long after, Santa Anna led his army to San Jacinto, and the Americans cried, "Remember the Alamo!" If Santa Anna had forgotten it, he had ample opportunity to think of it in his prison. I am glad this captor didn't treat him as he treated Crockett, Evans and Bowie. I am glad those rough cowboys and rangers and lusty fighters, crude and untamed as they were, had no treachery in their hearts, however treacherous might be the foe. I am glad I am an American.

So the Mexican army was beaten and then the United States recognized Texas as a republic, and other countries helped her with recognition when she no longer needed help. And it was independence and not secession. So here we are in the Alamo, the monument of it all, and the oldest house—some say—in the New World. But they are still fighting over the Alamo. It is a fight among ladies, now. One side claims the credit of persuading the city to own the building and keep open house for the public; the other party claims it furnished the monev to adorn the interior with souvenirs—such as autograph letters of Houston, the splendid painting of Crockett, the iron pot whose pegs have been worn away by centuries or service, etc.,—and hence it deserves the credit of the open house. Each side is contending for the management, and bitter with taunts of "ingratitude" against the other faction. Those huge cold walls which have seen sure-enough fighting, look down upon this modern warfare and say nothing. It reminds me of the church. There used to be battles over one's faith, with faggot-piles and block-and-ax and guillotine for arguments; but now the fray is waged over an organ, or a church choir, or somebody's opinion of something. We must fight; we must have divisions; and if no worthy cause presents itself, we trump up the most ridiculous excuse and clothe it with dignity and awe. I don't know which faction was in charge of the Alamo when we were there, but it was very kind to strangers. We were permitted to sit at the little table under the barred window and write home; and our every question was answered genially. Our greatest handicap was that we didn't know what to ask. I wish I had summoned up courage to inquire after Ben Milam, and whether or not his question on the monument was answered by many voices with, "I will follow you into San Antonio!" for, since coming home, I can't find him in any of mv books. There is a Milam county, Texas, no doubt named after him; and the Milam apple is a mighty fine variety; do we owe it to him? If so, he deserves that that fountain should be set to going.

There is a beautiful stream that flows through the city; it is neither wide nor deep, but verdant banks descend to it, set with flowers and rich shrubbery; it is a sweet relief, after the glare of the white streets. There is a pretty bridge over it, on Commercial street. I asked several what it was called, but they said it has no name; they don't call it anything. At last, a driver told me it was called "San-an-tone Creek." I find (on coming home) that San Antonio is on the San Antonio river. Perhaps that is what it was.

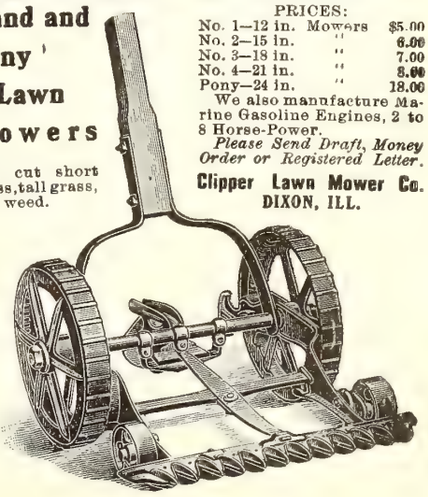
Practical Christianity.

A benevolent old man who lived on his farm in Iowa never refused shelter to anyone who might ask it of him, says the Pittsburg Press. His many friends remonstrated with him about his characteristic, knowing that many unscrupulous hoboes would avail themselves of the opportunity, and that there was great danger of the old man being robbed. To these remonstrances the old man replied that he believed in "practical Christianity."

"But," said one of his friends, "this seems very impractical. Suppose one of these men took it into his head to rob you one night?"



"My dear young friend," was the reply, "I bid all enter in the name of God, but I prove my belief in practical Christianity by locking up their pants during the night."

This Little Boy was Right.

Said Peter Paul Augustus: "When I am grown a man,
I'll help my dearest mother the very best I can.
I'll wait upon her kindly; she'll lean upon my arm;
I'll lead her very gently, and keep her safe from harm.
But when I think upon it, the time will be so long,"

I think it would be wiser to be her pride and joy
By helping her my very best while I'm a little boy."

The Feast of Cherries.

By Fred Myron Colby.

There are many holidays observed throughout the world, the larger number of them commemorating some event performed by grown-up people. There is only one that I know of that celebrates the action of children, and that is the Feast of Cherries, which is annually kept in the old German city of Naumburg.

Of course, the young folks take part, and a large part, too, in the observance of other holidays. Young America has things pretty much its own way on the Fourth of July, and many of the festivities of Christmas and New Year's are designed largely for the amusement of the children. St. Valentine's day, though once popular among older people, has of late years become almost wholly a holiday for young people.

But the Feast of Cherries is not a holiday for the children, but its celebration is due wholly to and is intended to commemorate the heroic and self-sacrificing action of the German boys and girls.

It has been a holiday for over four hundred years, and is still popularly observed whenever the season of ripe cherries comes round—some time in July—so that perhaps while the boys of America are firing cannons and torpedoes, and ringing the bells, the children in far-off Naumburg are parading the streets in holiday attire, carrying branches laden with clusters of red ripe cherries.

In the first place, perhaps you would like to know just where old Naumburg is. If you will look at the map of Germany in your big atlas, you will find it in the province of Saxony, in Prussia, on the River Saale, near the junction of the Unstut. It is a large fortified town, with reminders of its mediaeval splendor in its vast, dim cathedral, and its moat and lofty walls. A lovely old romantic place, in the midst of orchards, and girdled by the shining waters of the double rivers.

Being a strong and populous town, Naumburg was always a place of strategic importance. So in time of war—and in the old time folks seem to have been always fighting—it has withstood many sieges, for there was always somebody who wanted to get the city away from its proper owners. Of course, this made troublous, anxious times for the people of Naumburg. Its most famous siege was that by the Hussite army under Procopius, in the summer of 1432.

The Hussites were the followers of John Huss, of Bohemia, a religious reformer who was burned at the stake in Prague in 1415. In less than a dozen years after his death, his followers were so numerous that they were more powerful than their enemies. A great army of them marched up and down Germany, plundering and burning the country, and besieging the cities that did not open their gates to them. This Hussite war as it was called, lasted a number of years and occasioned much suffering. The leader of the Hussites was the famous John Procopius, a dark, swarthy, one-eyed man, enormously fat, and more cruel than the rest of them.

And now this savage, one-eyed old general and his host of warriors sat down before Naumburg, the inhabitants of which closed their gates against him. Two months the siege continued, and Naumburg did not yield. The Hussite army drew closer and closer lines around the city, and the eyes that had gazed anxiously from the ramparts day after day for help now knew that no help could reach them. Even the stern, dark-browed warriors, who more than once had sallied out against the enemy, dared no longer go without the gates.

Despair and famine stalked with silent tread through the quaint, narrow streets. The provisions that had been garnered were consumed, and the people were gaunt with hunger. Meanwhile, too, the enemy grew more fierce without. The hot summer sun dried up the springs about the city. Procopius swore that he would take the city and slaughter every man within it.

So there was good reason that brave hearts faltered, good reason that the minstrel's harp should be mute, and that tears glistened in the eyes of highborn dame and lowly milkmaid. But better they thought the slow death by famine than to be killed outright by the Hussites, and so the mailed sentinels still kept watch and ward upon the walls.

In the middle of the city a rich citizen named Wolfe had a walled garden, where cherry trees grew in great profusion. Wolfe had been very watchful of his trees, and they had made him both rich and famous.

This season they promised a more than usual harvest. The trees were in blossom when Procopius sat down before the walls; now they were red with the ripe, juicy cherries.

Returning from the walls one bright July day, their owner had a sudden thought, as he looked upon the superb fruit ripening in the sun. A strong hope arose within him that he might save the city. There was not much time to lose, he knew well enough, for another day of suffering would make the people delirious. He had his little daughter assemble all the young children of the town, and having them all dressed in white, the funeral color at that time, he gave each one a branch of cherries, and ordered the gates to be opened. It was a touching sight to see those little children, so thin and wan, dressed in their mourning robes, go forth to the enemy's camp. None knew if they would ever return, and many a parent's heart must have groaned at the thought of what might be.

The children's voices were sad and plaintive as they chanted a sacred hymn. Solemnly it rang among the tall towers and narrow streets, and the last echoes floated like a wail to the anxious watchers on the walls.

Procopius, the Hussite, stood without his tent, surrounded by his chief captains. A fierce light was in his eye; his stern, weather-beaten, bearded face shone with the light of a conqueror. On the morrow he would lead his soldiers to the attack, and he felt that Naumburg would be his. But even as his heart swelled at the thought of his triumph, he saw the juvenile procession approaching from the city gates.

"What do those youngsters mean?" he said. "I have half a mind to order my cavalry to charge. But no, I will bespeak them first," and he glanced frowningly at the approaching array.

And now they were quite near him, and he saw that they were pale and thin, and worn with hunger. Their young eyes looked out from pinched, gaunt faces, and they walked slowly and heavily as though their little limbs had hardly strength enough to support them. As he gazed at the pitiful sight his hard heart relented, and tears welled out of his fierce eyes and glistened on his war-worn cheeks. A spring of fatherly love that had long been choked in him, gushed forth, and he opened his arms to the children who had conquered his savage heart by their innocence and want.

It was a sight worth seeing—those little ones crowding around him, clambering upon his knees, and pulling his long beard. And the great general had them fed, and then told them stories, and laughed with them till his fat sides shook. No one would have guessed him to be the fierce, cruel ravager that so many knew him to be.

That afternoon before the sun had sunk down before the tall, grim towers, the peaceful, white-robed procession returned to the city. Following them went a long procession of carts loaded with provisions for the starving people, huge carcasses of roasted beeves and mutton, and wheaten and barley loaves, enough for all to eat, the gift of the generous Hussites.

And the next day the warlike host marched away, leaving Naumburg free and peaceful among its green meadows, saved by the heroism and the innocence of its children.

Who Was It?—A Good Housekeeper and Her Company.

BY JULIA H. JOHNSTON.

Long ago in a pleasant home on a hillside lived a happy family. The one who did most of the housekeeping was a very good woman. She liked to have things neat and comfortable and she knew how to keep them so. She was a busy sort of a person who always seemed to find plenty to do, and she had a kind heart that loved to make her friends comfortable. The housekeeper had a sister and a brother whom she dearly loved. The sister was rather a quiet person, who liked to be still and think pleasant thoughts and was anxious to learn all she could. This home was pleasant to visit because it was quiet and peaceful, and there was so much love there, and friends were made welcome.

One day company came to this house, and a glad day it was. It was the Best Friend who came, and who so welcome as he? He often came there to rest, for he was a great traveler. Indeed, he had no home of his own at all, and it was good to have this place to visit whenever he would, and to be sure that all the family would be glad to see him whenever he could spare the time to come; for he was very busy, going about doing good and helping people. Now, here he was to-day, the family's Best Friend, and the housekeeper thought nothing was too good for him and too much could not be done. So she bustled about getting as good a supper as she could. She thought of so many things and planned so much that it made a great deal to do for one person. By and by, as she hurried about, the housekeeper got tired and she felt troubled about her work. Why did not her sister come and help her? Surely she, too, was glad to see the Best Friend. Why did she not try to do something for him? She looked around and there sat her sister at the Visitor's feet, listening to him as he talked. She did not seem to remember that supper was to be made ready, nor to think of anything but the words she heard. The busy, tired woman thought this was not fair, and she said to the Best Friend: "Don't you care that my sister has left me to work alone? Do tell her to help me." But the kind and wise Friend said: "You are troubled about many things, but there is but one that is really needful. Your sister has chosen the best part in listening to me and learning all she can." And then I am sure that he gave a loving look at the tired housekeeper who was trying to show her love by doing a great deal, and at the sister who showed hers by listening to what he had to say and learning sweet lessons at his feet. Who was the busy woman? What was her sister's name?

Finding Out How to Begin.

Two boys sat down together to work out some problems in algebra. One of them had been busy with his pencil a full minute when he noticed his companion sitting with folded arms and knitted brows:

"What is the matter?" he exclaimed. "Why don't you begin?"

"I'm finding out how to begin," returned the other quietly, and he went on thinking. The first speaker covered a page of foolscap with figures, found himself in a labyrinth from which there seemed no escape, and, looking back over the statement of the problems, discovered a mistake in his first equation. Long before this, however, his companion had worked the problem through and reached the correct result. He had not wasted time, because he had looked at all sides of the question before he began.

A Bad Mark from God.

A little girl was called to court one day to be a witness. She was so small that the lawyers thought she might not know what an oath was. So they asked her some questions.

"Do you understand the nature of an oath?" asked a lawyer.

"Yes, sir," said the little girl.

"What is it?"

"It is a swear."

"What do you mean when you say, 'It is a swear'?"

"Well, it is that I have to tell the truth."

"If you don't tell the truth, what then?"

"That would be a sin."

"What is a sin?"

"A bad mark from God."

They let the child tell what she knew, and they all believed her.

Baby's First Steps.

The child of one year experiences little difficulty in learning to walk or to balance himself; he has no fear of hurting himself, for, if he topples over, he is so small and light the concussion is very slight, and apparently makes no impression. He immediately picks himself up and resumes his endeavors to balance himself, and with each effort gains more confidence. It is quite different with a child who has been withheld from the privilege of walking until he is a year and a half or two years old. The chances then are that he has grown heavy from lack of exercise, and at last, when allowed to use his feet, is not sure of himself and fears a fall; or, from constant holding and fondling, the child may have become delicate. Lack of strength alone stands in the way of the child's walking.—Harper's Bazar.

University Advantages

Drake University, with its many colleges and special schools, affords rare privileges of varied courses of study to the Bible student. The Bible College courses present almost every branch of Biblical learning that Christian workers need, such as Exegesis, History of Missions, Hermeneutics, Old Testament History, New Testament History, and the like. The College of Liberal Arts is one of the strongest in the country. The Normal School and Academy are available to students of this school without extra charge for tuition, and offer the usual branches of preparatory work. The College of Music affords as fine musical training as can be found any place in the West, and this is supplemented by special instruction in church music. The Business College offers Stenography and Typewriting, or any other branch of business training that might seem desirable to pastors' assistants.

The many churches of Des Moines illustrate every phase of religious activity, and afford opportunities for practical work of every kind. A large number of charitable institutions, missions, rescue stations, social settlements and other enterprises of a similar character are located in and around Des Moines, and are accessible for the instruction of students in the Bible College.

MEMORIAL HALL.

Memorial Hall, especially constructed for the Bible College of Drake University, is in every way admirably arranged and equipped. This splendid structure contains twelve large recitation rooms, an assembly room, a well equipped dining room and kitchen, and numerous offices and cloak rooms.

More than 800 ministers and missionaries in the field received their training in the Bible College of Drake University.

Scope of Instruction

By a combination of studies which have been taught in the University, and the addition of various courses directly suited to workers of every kind in the church, and especially in the cities and on mission fields, opportunities for special training are offered to the following classes of workers: (1) Preachers' wives, assistant ministers and others, whether men or women, who wish to be efficient promoters of local church work; (2) Christian women who wish to prepare for acceptable service in the churches as pastoral clerks and amanuenses; (3) Preachers who desire special practical training, sermonic, pastoral, or any other kind not leading to thorough theological scholarship; (4) Evangelistic singers, church choristers, sacred soloists, and church organists; (5) Teachers of Sunday schools, leaders of Endeavor societies, secretaries of Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, and organizers of religious societies of any kind.

The growth of this Bible College has been rapid from the first. There are reasons for this.

Students are assisted in various ways:

1. Service scholarships of the value of $50.00 each have been provided for a number of students.
2. A scholarship established for the benefit of young women preparing for the mission field has been provided.
3. The Phillips and other loan funds make it possible for worthy students to borrow the funds necessary to pay a part of their school expenses, the same to be returned after the student has completed his course and has a chance to earn enough to reimburse the loan fund.
4. Opportunities for young men to preach for churches near Des Moines are abundant and remunerative. Many earn their entire school expense in this way.
5. Those not yet prepared to preach find many opportunities to work and earn all, or a portion of their expense while in school.

Some things you will find out if you attend the Bible College:

1. Scholarly, broad-minded men on the faculty who have Christ for their creed.
2. A corps of instructors that know how to develop true men into successful preachers of the Word.
3. Thorough, practical courses of study arranged to help men to the acquirement of the fundamentals of religious truth.
4. An excellent library of books specially selected for the use of ministerial students.
5. Memorial Hall, the home of the Bible College, the best building on the campus of the University.
6. A splendidly equipped Bible College that challenges the admiration and secures the patronage of a great Brotherhood in this and other lands.
7. One of the most self-respecting, aggressive bands of students ever enrolled in any Bible College.
8. An institution whose graduates are filling many of the most important pulpits in this country, and whose trained missionaries may be found in every foreign field.
9. That the Bible College is but one of several prosperous colleges that constitute Drake University, viz: Liberal Arts, Bible, Law, Medical, Dental, Music and Normal.
10. A Bible College that has sent a representative to the mission field for every year of its history.

THE EXPENSES ARE LOW—so low that no ambitious young man or woman should find it impossible to attend school here. The opportunities offered in Des Moines for students to work for a portion of their expenses are numerous and remunerative. Fully one-half earn a portion of their expenses while attending the University.

Drake University always has been and still is a school pre-eminently for the poor man or woman who is willing to work for an education.

We are anxious to correspond with every young man and woman in the Church of Christ that desires to prepare for the ministry or the mission field. It will be a great accommodation to us and to this paper if, when writing you will state that you read this advertisement in The Christian-Evangelist. We gladly answer correspondence and willingly send announcements of any of the various colleges of the University. Let us send to you our complete Bible College Announcement.

—A wise old preacher said to a group of young ministers: "Brethren, begin doing now in your present pastorates what you think you would do in a new field." If, going to another charge, many of our preachers would send for Munnell's "Setting Churches in Order," 10 cents, or his "The Care of the Churches," 75 cents. We advise that these books be read and their teachings applied by those who would transform their present pastorates into more nearly what they ought to be.

—Moral and Spiritual Aspects of Baptism, by N. J. Aylsworth. 471 pages. $1.50. Many of our greatest men, without the slightest reservation, pronounce this the greatest work on baptism that has ever been written. No man is best prepared to meet the deeper difficulties regarding the design of baptism till he has studied this book.

—The Strenuous Gospel, by Thomas G. Shelby. $1.25, postpaid. This author is a preacher of righteousness along lines that appeal to all classes with a directness and forcefulness which classes him among the leaders of his times. The book will help you into a divine strenuousness.

This treats of the pastor and evangelism, evangelistic organization, decision day in the Sunday-school, some remarkable conversions, the personal religious touch, and many other of the vitals of soul-winning. Our evangelists should study this book. So should our pastors.

A Great Centennial Offering

Will every Disciple of Christ carefully read the following and then act in accordance with the facts of the case?

During the recent commencement exercises of Bethany College, West Virginia, at a meeting of the alumni it was unanimously and enthusiastically resolved to raise a sum of $500,000, as a Centennial offering to the college for a permanent endowment fund. This was believed to be not only reasonable but necessary, if our coming Centennial celebration is to be worthy of what it commemorates. Bethany College stands out alone in the early history of our religious movement. It was founded by Alexander Campbell, and for many years it was the only college devoted to the education of preachers for the great work of a ministry pledged to support the principles for which Mr. Campbell contended. Nor will it be denied by any one that our religious movement is largely indebted to Bethany College for the success which has attended it. It was the first college in the United States to adopt the Bible as fundamental in its teaching course, and its influence upon both our religious movement and the general civilization and religious development of the American people can, perhaps, never be over-estimated.

How then could the Disciples of Christ celebrate the issuance of the "Declaration and Address" of the Campbells more appropriately than by raising the sum of $500,000 between now and the great meeting to be held at Pittsburg in 1909, to permanently endow the college which was for many years the center whence the principles of the "Declaration and Address" were successfully advocated? Indeed, it may be said with entire truthfulness that among the greatest documents ever written on the American continent were, first—the "Declaration of Independence," by Thomas Jefferson; second, the "Declaration and Address," by Thomas Campbell, and third, the "Charter of Bethany College." Nor is the last the least important when considered from an educational point of view. It practically inaugurated a new era in the history of education by giving the Bible a place which it had never before occupied in any college curriculum.

The plan adopted for raising this money makes its success practically certain if every Disciple of Christ will take part in it. It makes it possible to raise this sum without burdening any one, and without interfering with other colleges, or with other enterprises which require contributions from the brethren.

These well-known men, representing a a much larger number of brethren, have appended their signatures to the important statement which follows:

W. T. Moore, Columbia, Mo.
F. D. Power, Washington, D. C.
J. W. McGarvey, Lexington, Ky.
A. McLean, Cincinnati, O.
Philip Johnson, Bethany, W. Va.
L. L. Carpenter, Wabash, Ind.
Sumner T. Martin, Chicago, Ill.
J. A. Hopkins, Winston-Salem, N. C.
Francis C. McMillin, Cleveland, O.
E. W. McDiarmid, Bethany, W. Va.

One feature, which we believe will commend itself to every intelligent Disciple, is to use a small portion of this fund for the purchase of the Campbell farm and residence for the future use of the college. This farm consists of 224 acres of tillable land on which the Campbell homestead is located. By building a dormitory on this farm, and cultivating the farm with student labor, a great opportunity can be offered for young men to work their way through college. Bethany, by means of a trolley line running to Wellsburg, seven miles distant, will soon have easy access to the markets of both Wheeling and Pittsburg, and the Campbell farm thus utilized will not only help indigent young men in securing an education, but will easily yield a good income to the college from its products. This feature of the plan, when announced at the Bethany banquet, was enthusiastically received by all who were present.

As it is desirable that this movement shall be made practically universal, the following features will be observed:

1. The movement must be regarded as coming from the alumni of the college, though every Disciple of Christ is earnestly requested to participate in it, as the alumni of the college will act simply as agents for raising the fund, so as to relieve it as much as possible from expense.

2. It is very desirable that the whole amount shall be raised in small sums, running from $1 upward. If possible, it would be preferable to raise the whole amount in $1 subscriptions, so as to have at least half of our whole membership participate in this great offering. However, it will be, perhaps, impossible to reach every Disciple with our appeal, and consequently larger sums will be needed in order to make up for any deficiency in the smaller sums. Indeed, it is hoped that not a few will avail themselves of this opportunity to discharge, in a liberal manner, an obligation which certainly rests upon them. It would not surprise the committeee in the least if several $5,000 or $10,000 subscriptions should be made for this great purpose. Surely those Disciples who have been blessed with means could not in any way show their gratitude to the giver of every good and perfect gift in a more excellent manner than by making a liberal donation to this Centennial offering.

3. A book or books will be kept in which all the names, addresses and amounts contributed will be entered, and these books will be present at Pittsburg, and ever afterwards kept in the library of Bethany College as a memorial of this great Centennial fund.

4. All subscriptions of $100 and upward may be made on the condition that they will be due when the donors shall be notified that the whole amount has been secured. Of course this will not debar any one from paying at once, if he should so wish. We leave this optional with the donors.

5. All subscriptions must be sent to either of the following well-known banking houses: The Mercantile Trust Company, Pittsburg, Pa., The St. Louis Union Trust Company, St. Louis, Mo. The Hon. W. H. Graham is president of the Pittsburg Company, and Thomas H. West, the partner of Brother J. H. Allen, is president of the St. Louis Company. Subscribers can send to either of these their subscriptions, and they will promptly receive a receipt for the same, while their names and addresses will be entered by the bank in books kept for that purpose, so that everything will be done in a strictly business manner. Our plan is to have the money in bank, so that a cheque for the whole amount of $500,000 can be presented to the trustees of Bethany College at our coming Centennial in 1909.

6. Each member of the committee has agreed to superintend the securing of this fund within the state where he lives, or within the territory contiguous

Haywood Acquitted.

After twenty-one hours of deliberation the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty in the case of Haywood, who was accused of conspiring to murder Governor Steunenberg, of Idaho. Two of the jurors assert that they still believe him guilty but finally consented to vote for a verdict of acquittal because they did not believe a new trial would result in a conviction. This saves the state the expense and the public the excitement of a new trial, but it is a very doubtful method of discharging one's sworn obligations as a juror. The decision of the case depended almost wholly upon the belief or disbelief of Orchard's testimony revealing the score of murders which he confessed to having committed and which he asserted had been planned and ordered by Haywood and other officers of the Western Federation of Miners. If Orchard told the truth, Haywood was guilty of murder in the first degree. If Orchard lied, there was no serious evidence of Haywood's responsibility for the death of Steunenberg. Evidently the jury believed that Orchard lied. We venture the opinion that this belief was caused less by the evidence offered by the defense to discredit Orchard's testimony than by certain aspects of that testimony itself, or by what would be called, in higher criticism, internal evidence. They refused to believe Orchard's story not so much because it was proven untrue by other witnesses, but because it was the kind of story that seems inherently improbable, and because one does not readily take the word of a confessed villain in a matter of such importance. Of course the rejection of Orchard's testimony opens the very interesting psychological puzzle as to his motive in telling such a story if there is no truth back of it. But jurors are not psychologists, and they did not feel under any obligation to solve this problem before voting not guilty. The decision leaves Moyer and Pettibone still to be tried, but with vastly increased chances for acquittal. Moyer has been admitted to bail, but Pettibone, against whom the state is believed to have the strongest case, is still held in jail. It may also be observed that the verdict in no way vindicates the methods which have been employed by the Western Federation, and in no way disproves the President's statement that the three men are "undesirable citizens."

Representing the Public.

In his Georgia day address at the Jamestown Exposition, the President advocated a broader employers' liability law under which workmen will receive indemnity for all accidents received in the performance of their duties regardless of the question of negligence by themselves or some fellow-workman. The objection is made by a writer in the "International Magazine," that this plan assumes that "employers of labor represent the public and that the damages will be paid by the community at large in some way he does not clearly explain." But is it not precisely true that the employers of labor do in a very real sense represent the public? They sometimes need to be reminded of the fact, to be sure, but an employer of labor, for example, a corporation operating a large manufacturing plant, is essentially the agent through which the public performs the function of supplying itself with the articles which that factory produces. Whatever are the expenses of maintaining and operating the plant, the public must pay them. Who else? The corporation does not pay them. It merely advances the money with the expectation that the public will pay it back, and more too. Just as the public, by purchasing the product, pays the rent and the wages and the insurance, so it would pay the indemnity to the injured workmen. It would simply add another item to the expense account, which would be met by raising the price of the goods enough to cover it. The advantage of giving the workman the right to collect damages even when the accident is the result of his own negligence is that probably only in this way will he be enabled to get damages, without a tedious and expensive suit, for those accidents which are not the result of negligence.

Ohio for Taft.

At a meeting of the Ohio Republican committee last week, a resolution was adopted approving Secretary Taft's candidacy for the presidential nomination. A few days before the meeting of the committee, Senator Foraker wrote to one of its members an open letter in which he presented the reasons against endorsing Taft at this time. The reasons were: That it is too early to make declarations on that subject and that the raising of the presidential issue at this time will interfere with the municipal campaigns of the present year; that Taft is believed to be in favor of tariff revision and the approval of his candidacy would commit the party on this question without adequate consideration; that the committee was not appointed to select presidential candidates and therefore it lacks jurisdiction in the matter and its recommendations would not be binding upon any one; finally, that Mr. Taft is not the only possible Ohio candidate for the nomination, and that the others ought to have a fair chance when the proper time comes for them to place themselves in the field. Mr. Foraker refers to his own candidacy, saying, in substance, that the fact that he has not yet explicitly placed his name on the list indicates nothing as to his intentions since he thinks it proper for the party to seek the candidate rather than for the candidate to volunteer on his own initiative. This last statement indicates that Mr. Foraker either considers that Mr. Taft has volunteered his services as a candidate without sufficient urging to justify him in so doing, or that he is prepared to admit that Taft's friends have been more prompt in the matter than his own. The letter, in fact, definitely places Foraker in the field as a candidate for the nomination, so far as a man can, by his own unaided efforts, place himself in the field and the outcome of the incident with the state committee gives a chilling—though not necessarily a killing—frost to his hopes at the very moment of their first public appearance.

Schmitz in Jail.

Former Mayor Schmitz, of San Francisco, insists that he is still Mayor Schmitz, of San Francisco. The law provides that any official's tenure of office shall cease if he is convicted of a felony. Schmitz was convicted of a felony. The board of supervisors, acting in accordance with their interpretation of this law, declared the office of mayor vacant and appointed first an acting mayor for a few days, then one to fill out the unexpired term. This new mayor has become mayor de facto, taken possession of the office and made many appointments. But Schmitz has still an appeal pending and he takes the ground that the law does not deprive him of his office until his sentence shall have been affirmed by the highest court of appeal to which he may carry it. So he claims to be still a mayor (though he is by no means a still mayor), and he holds to the title of office, complains that his official mail is opened by one who has no right to it, attempts to exercise the appointing power, and otherwise whiles away the tedium of life in durance vile by making a noise like a mayor. As a result of his exercise of the appointing power while in jail, San Francisco now has two complete sets of municipal officials between whom there will doubtless be considerable legal warfare before either succeeds in driving the other from the field. Meanwhile the city's business is being carried on by the anti-Schmitz officials, so the city can afford to wait.

A Socialist Convert.

Jerome K. Jerome, the English humorist, is reported as a recent convert to socialism. This fact in itself is not specially noteworthy, for a good many literary men are socialists. But shortly after his announced conversion—or, as he puts it, his discovery that he had been a socialist for a long while without knowing it,—he dropped some words of warning which may have a wider application than was intended. In reply to a question as to how socialists could best advance the interests of the cause, he said, "Say as little as possible about it." Teach the doctrines, but present them without the label. It is easy enough, he thinks, to get people to approve many of the tenets of socialism, and even to put some of them into practice, but as soon as the proud propagator of the ideas triumphantly declares, "This is socialism," an alarm is sounded and nothing more can be done. It is a fact, is it not, that the advocates of new and unpopular causes often become more interested in the triumph of the cause, as a definite and recognizable organization whose visible victory is to justify them in the eyes of the world, than they are in the triumph of those ideas which the cause embodies and for which it exists. Whether it is preaching socialism, or Christian union, or the doctrines of any party or denomination, it is worth while for the zealous advocate to pause occasionally to ask himself whether he is more interested in the success of the principle or in the success of the party which happens to be advocating that principle; whether he could be satisfied if, by any chance, the principle should succeed while the party gains no recognition for having made it succeed; and whether the principle might not succeed a little faster if he were less eager for the world to know that his party is the special proprietor of it.

Our Debt to Bethany College.

The effort instigated and led by Dr. W. T. Moore, for the endowment of Bethany College, is one that ought to meet with universal commendation and co-operation among the Disciples of Christ. The place which Bethany holds in our movement is altogether unique. We have many worthy institutions that are doing a splendid work and are worthy of receiving increased endowment before our Centennial anniversary, but all of them, with one accord, will point to Bethany and say, "She is the mother of us all."

It has taken the first century of our history to make clear to ourselves and to others all that is involved in the plea for reformation which we advocate, and it may well be doubted whether, even yet, there has been a sufficient lapse of time for us to grasp clearly all that was involved in the movement inaugurated by the Campbells. But as time develops more and more the value of the movement, new importance necessarily attaches to its early beginnings, and to the agencies which gave it impetus. Among the mightiest of these must be placed Bethany College, where there were trained, first of all, under the direct tuition and personal influence of Alexander Campbell, a group of ministers whose influence on the cause we plead has been wide and far-reaching. They received a personal impress from the mind of the great reformer which made them most effective instruments, under God, of carrying forward the work which he and his father had inaugurated.

No wiser movement could have been made by Mr. Campbell than the establishment of an institution like Bethany College, for the furtherance of the cause of religious reform. Himself an educated man, he foresaw clearly that it was only by trained and disciplined minds for leadership in the new movement that it could hope to exert permanent influence on the religious thought and life of the world. Untrained and undisciplined minds are subject to extreme views and to all sorts of cranky notions for which the only remedy is intellectual enlightenment, with mental and moral discipline. It is altogether proper, therefore, that one of the methods of properly commemorating the completion of the first century of our movement should be a liberal endowment for the institution which has filled so important a place in its history. The relation of Bethany to the brotherhood makes it possible for all to co-operate towards its endowment without awakening any feeling of prejudice on the part of the friends of other institutions. Indeed, Bethany's success would aid them all. We sincerely hope, therefore, that this enterprise, to which we give considerable space this week, may meet with the hearty support of the brethren everywhere and may be carried forward to complete success as a monumental proof of our appreciation of the religious movement which received its primal impulse from Bethany. If this shall be done the problem of

"O where will be old Bethany
When a hundred years have rolled?"

will be solved, and aspiring youths, for generations to come, will continue to sing,

"My father sent me to old Bethany
And resolved that I should be a man;
And so I settled down in that quiet little town
On the banks of the old Buffalo."

The Problem of the Distribution of Wealth.

The one question which has, perhaps, absorbed more thought of men generally than any other is, how to accumulate wealth? All sorts of schemes have been devised for the realization of this one supreme passion which rules the minds of so many people. But there is a far graver question confronting us to-day than the accumulation of wealth, and that is the problem of its distribution. As a result of the unusual opportunities offered in our rapidly developing country, and largely, too, as a result of our present economic system, many persons possessing financial shrewdness have amassed tremendous fortunes which were unknown in the earlier history of our country, and which are a menace to the best interests of the whole people. In most cases these immense fortunes are the outgrowth of an economic system which lends itself readily to the accumulation of colossal fortunes by the few at the expense of the many. The fault, we cannot but believe, is more that of the system than of any special depravity on the part of the men who have accumulated these fortunes. Perhaps a majority of men, placed in similar conditions and possessing the same ability, would have pursued very much the same course in availing themselves of the opportunities thus offered.

But, however that may be, we are confronted by the fact that these large fortunes exist, either as the result of conspiracy and fraud on the part of their owners, or as the result of certain financial conditions and theories without proper safeguards of law, and in many cases, perhaps, as a combination of both these. The serious problem which confronts these men and the whole country is, How shall this wealth be distributed for the best interests of society? That these fortunes should be held intact, increasing year by year and transmitted from one generation to another, would be an evil that could not be tolerated. Either by the free, personal act of these great capitalists must these fortunes be distributed, or such laws be enacted in the way of income and inheritance tax as will effect the same end. It must be said to the credit of some of these men of vast wealth, that they themselves realize the responsibility that is upon them for a distribution of their fortunes in the interest of the people at large. No matter by what method these fortunes have been accumulated, it is at least to the credit of the men who have accumulated them that they feel some sense of responsibility to the public, and are seeking to make such distribution of their wealth as will promote the public good. For many years the penuriousness of Russell Sage was the theme of newspaper gibes, but since his death we notice that his widow, to whom his great fortune was left, has distributed large portions of it in the interest of philanthropy and Christianity. Andrew Carnegie has been earnestly engaged for several years in making such a distribution of his vast fortune as he believes will best serve the welfare of the public. John D. Rockefeller, it is well known, has been giving princely gifts in behalf of education and Christian missions. A great many others, however, are lavishly spending their fortunes on their own lusts, in extravagant living, and in every possible form of self-indulgence. They feel not the slightest responsibility to the public from which they have accumulated their wealth, and are using it to gratify their personal pride and ambition, and for purely selfish and unworthy ends. This class of men cannot be too severely condemned for their course, while those we have mentioned deserve credit, at least, for their apparently honest purpose to discharge their obligation to the public. It is a strange fact, however, that these men who are distributing their great wealth for worthy purposes, are receiving more censure from the religious press of the country than those who are hoarding their wealth or lavishing it upon themselves in extravagant living.

It may be said, of course, that the censure of the religious press is not so much directed toward the men who are making these large gifts to religious and philanthropic purposes, as to those who willingly accept them and use them for these beneficent ends. It cannot, however, be wrong to receive what it is right to give. If those in charge of Christian and philanthropic enterprises refuse to accept the gifts of these men of wealth, who are seeking to discharge, in some measure, their obligation to society, then they will be compelled either to spend their wealth for unworthy enterprises or to transmit it to their heirs. The failure to discriminate, as we have before pointed out, between the accumulation of wealth and its distribution, is responsible, we think, for this strange view. How a man has gotten his wealth is one thing; how he uses it is another. The one may be very wrong; the other may be altogether right. Money rightly obtained is often wrongly used; on the other hand, money obtained by questionable methods may be wisely used. It may be said that the only right use of money wrongly acquired, is to return it to those from whom it has been taken. This is no doubt true, so far as it is possible to do so. That, we suppose, is exactly what such men as Mr. Carnegie and Mr. Rockefeller and others like them, are seeking to do. To know precisely what individuals have been wronged, and to what extent, through the accumulation of their fortunes, is impossible. To so distribute their wealth as to make it promote the common weal, is, perhaps, the nearest possible approach to the principle of restitution. To place ourselves in opposition to this principle of restitution, as it finds expression in these large gifts of men of wealth, for worthy purposes, would be to assume a responsibility which we do not dare to assume.

In so far as the methods pursued by these men of wealth are amenable to law, let the law be enforced, by all means, and let the pulpit and press co-operate with the government in bringing to justice all who violate the laws of the country in their greed for wealth; and, more than that, let the pulpit and press condemn unjust laws and customs which have made possible these vast accumulations of wealth, and give their influence to such measures as will insure a more equitable distribution of profits between labor and capital.

But let no one suppose that the question of the proper distribution of wealth concerns only a few millionaires and billionaires. It is a question that comes home to the conscience of every man who has any means beyond an amount necessary to supply the legitimate wants of himself and those dependent upon him. There needs to be a great deal more conscience on this subject than exists at present. The question that should concern us, is not, whether we may receive gifts for worthy objects from men of wealth, but rather, how we may get men everywhere to recognize their solemn responsibilities to distribute the money or property which they have acquired, so as to discharge their obligation to God and to their fellow-men.

Read the Second Time.

The following letter from one of our ministers, addressed to the Editor, carries its own moral with it so plainly that it does not need to be pointed out. We commend the writer's spirit of investigation and his manly frankness in acknowledging his fromer error:

> Two years ago I read your book on "The Holy Spirit," and wrote you a letter containing some caustic words of criticism. You wrote me a kind letter in reply telling me that perhaps when I read the book again I might have a better opinion of it.
> Since the first reading of the book I have "searched the Scriptures" on the question of "The Holy Spirit." I have worked out and preached a number of sermons on the various phases of the subject. I made quite an investigation in every branch of it. Recently I read your book again. The margins of its pages are covered with notes and references made during the second reading. Now I want to revise my former opinion and treat the book according to Isaiah's rule, "Cease to do (it) evil and learn to do (it) good." The book has been valuable to me in arousing a spirit of research and investigation; then upon returning to it with the mind filled with the teachings of the Bible, I find it filled with the richest truths, the grandest conceptions, and the most helpful and inspiring thoughts of any book I ever read. This great truth comes to me—that when we open a book without the proper knowledge to begin on, we fail to get our minds in tune with its spirit and teachings. Please accept this not as an apology to you, but as a tribute to that splendid book, "The Holy Spirit."

Notes and Comments.

Should Christians eat meat sacrificed to idols? That was a burning question in Paul's day. Paul's common sense answer to the question was, in effect, Eat what is set before you, asking no questions as to where it came from. The fact that the meat was offered to an idol had no effect whatever upon it as food used to sustain life. If, however, some one should offer meat to a Christian, telling him that it was sacrificed to an idol and should expect him to eat it in honor of the idol, then the believer was to respectfully decline.

The question about eating meats offered to idols is not a living question with us, but the principle underlying Paul's answer has its application to many of our current questions. Should we use money for missionary or philanthropic purposes, or other religious uses, which has been secured by unjust or unclean methods? What would Paul's answer be to the missionary and benevolent boards? The principle underlying his answer to the old question would seem to clearly imply an answer in substance as follows: "Use such gifts of money as are freely offered to you without asking any questions for conscience's sake, for the money itself is not 'tainted' any more than was the meat offered to idols; but if any man offers you money, saying, 'This money was gained by extortion or through fraud, and in accepting it from us we expect you to condone our wrong-doing or approve our methods,' receive it not, but spurn the offer and the man making it." This, it seems to us, would be the Pauline view of the money question.

Many years ago the Editor of this paper undertook to join in a religious service with the narrowest sect of the Plymouth brethren, away up on the English lakes. Having been refused the emblems in the Lord's Supper, he undertook to drop a shilling into the contribution box but was promptly denied this privilege. What was the theory? That any money coming from those outside their own little sect was "tainted" money, and, therefore, it would be sacrilegious to use it. They were carrying out the principle of the nonuse of money which they did not know to be honestly gained, to its legitimate consequences. They did not select one man as a special victim, whose gifts were debarred, but applied it universally. It is this microscopic way of magnifying little things that creates division and strife among brethren and cuts the nerve of generosity in giving.

A few years ago a Congregational brother, using a microscope instead of a telescope, discovered a great heresy in the practice of the foreign mission board of that body. It was sending out men as missionaries who held to the possibility that men might perhaps have an opportunity of repenting after death. The discussion raged through all the papers and crippled, for many years, the contributions to their foreign work. Let us profit by the incident, and beware of using microscopes when we ought to be using telescopes which are able to disclose to us the sublime realities of the spiritual world.

The entire brotherhood is of one mind that all dishonest methods of heaping up fortunes ought to be punished by law and discountenanced by the Church. We are of one mind as to our duty to refuse all gifts to which there are attached conditions which would compromise our position as advocates of truth and righteousness. We are also of one mind that it is far better for men of wealth to devote their surplus means to the cause of Christian missions and philanthropy, to education and the diffusion of intelligence, than to squander it upon themselves and their families, or to hoard it up to be transmitted to those who do not need it. Agreeing upon these fundamental propositions, let us not waste time over a purely academic question as to whether money wrongly gained is forever debarred from being devoted to worthy enterprises.

Let us not forget that the principles of Christian union for which we contend, have their application among ourselves and to our co-operation in missionary work. The most fundamental principle in this plea is: Agreeing in the fundamentals of faith, let us not quarrel and divide over theories and fine-spun opinions, but allow every man the full liberty of thinking as he pleases in all matters which do not affect his faith or character. It is a very serious mistake to introduce questions of discussion on mere matters of opinion, about which brethren differ, and seek to make these opinions conditions of our co-operation with our brethren in the work of the Lord. This course must be firmly discountenanced by all who value the unity of the brotherhood, the success of our plea, and the welfare of our missionary organizations whose great task is that of evangelizing the world.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Pentwater Musings.

There is anything but monotony in our lakeside weather. This morning we witnessed that notable summer phenomenon—a hailstorm. The morning dawned fair, but soon a cloud appeared over the lake; low, heavy thunder was heard, and it advanced rapidly. After raining for a while hailstones fell in great profusion, averaging in size about like the marbles we used to play with as boys, and covering the hillsides. In a few minutes it was all over and the sun was shining again. They say these hailstones are formed by the rain passing through a cold current of the upper atmosphere, which congeals it. If there were some means by which this cold current could be utilized at will, for freezing water, how easy it would be to beat the ice trust! But perhaps some one would soon get a monopoly on the atmosphere and only enlarge the profits of the aforesaid trust. But returning to the weather,—in the afternoon, while we were all in the lake for a swim, with floating clouds here and there and one darker lying off on the horizon, there suddenly arose a furious wind which drove us hurrying from the lake and covered its surface with a confusion of waves coming in different directions and foaming out their fury until white seemed to be the predominating color as far as eye could reach. The gale kept up its pace all afternoon, blowing as if it were the outer circle of a cyclonic disturbance. And so August made its advent with these striking meteorological phenomena. We do not associate these unusual occurrences with the calm and serene month of August when summer has become old enough to be staid in its habits and to be sobered by the anticipation of the approaching autumn. When we think of August, we think of growing corn, of yellow stubble fields from which the wheat and the oats have been harvested, and the quail calling "Bob White," and the bright stars shining out of the clear heavens at night, and as the season of repose for man and nature. August is the thrifty matron of the seasons, who comes now with her lap full of the ripening fruits, roasting-ears, watermelons and other products of the season, which make glad the heart of man.

Speaking of August, its coming always reminds us that the summer is rapidly passing. Already half the period of our sojourn here by the lakeside has fled. Nowhere does time seem to fly more rapidly than at a summer resort. Each day seems full of its duties and pleasures. A new day has come since beginning these "musings," and in its cool breezes, coming out of the northwest, there is the prophecy of the end of summer, and of the oncoming autumn. In his "Mosses From An Old Manse," which we have been glancing through this summer, Hawthorne expresses this thought in his own inimitable way: "How early in the summer, too, the prophecy of autumn comes! * * There is no other feeling like what is caused by this faint, doubtful yet real perception—if it be not, rather, a foreboding—of the year's decay, so blessedly sweet and sad in the same breath. Did I say there was no feeling like it? Ah! but there is!—a half acknowledged melancholy like to this—when we stand in the perfect vigor of our life and feel that Time has now given us all his flowers, and that the next work of his never-idle fingers must be to steal them one by one away. * * Alas for the pleasant summer time! In August the grass is still verdant on the hills and in the valleys. The foliage of the trees is as dense as ever and as green; the flowers gleam forth in richer abundance along the margin of the river, and by the stone walls and among the woods; the days, too, are as fervid now as they were a month ago; and yet in every breath of wind and in every beam of sunshine we hear the whispered farewell, and behold the parting smile of a dear friend. There is a coolness amid all the heat—a mildness in the blazing noon. Not a breeze can stir but it fills us with the breath of autumn. A pensive glory is seen in the far golden gleams, among the shadows of the trees. The flowers, even the brightest of them—and they are the most gorgeous of the year—have this gentle sadness wedded to their pomp, and typify the character of the delicious time, each within itself. The brilliant cardinal-flower has never seemed gay to me." But the prophecies of autumn are far more pronounced here by the lakeside, where the warm breath of August is cooled by its passage over leagues of inland sea, than in the still woods about the Manse at old Concord. This coolness in the breeze and this fire that blazes on the hearth say to us, "The summer will soon be past, and what thou doest for the present season must be done quickly."

Our Lord told of a lost sheep, a lost coin and a lost boy, to illustrate spiritual truths. We have just had the experience of a lost watch. One day this week we sailed across the lake from our boathouse to the village on the opposite side, with our little granddaughter. When we had landed and were taking down the sail, a gentleman came up and inquired if this was "Dr. Garrison." I pleaded guilty to being the person thus designated at times, and inquired the name of the visitor. He introduced himself as Brother James Mailley, minister of the Christian church in Greensburg, Ind. I asked that he join myself and granddaughter in a little fishing expedition up the lake, and as he had just arrived that morning he was glad to accompany us and see how it was done. On looking for my watch to see the time, I found it was not in its usual place, but supposed it had been left at home. The fishing expedition was a success, and Brother Mailley caught the largest number, and did the rowing when we could not sail. But on reaching home in the evening it was found that the watch was not there, and I remembered definitely of having had it earlier in the day. The next day a vigorous search was instituted but without avail until in the afternoon when it occurred to me that when I was lifting the sail from the boat, on the shore, where Brother Mailley met us, I had likely pulled the watch from its resting place and thither went with Brother Mailley, and he reaching his hand down in a crevice of the sod that bordered the lake, drew out the watch dry and uninjured though just at the margin of the lake. There was great joy at the finding of that watch. I had prepared the notices offering a liberal reward for it, for it was a watch which the family had given me on my fiftieth anniversary, and, of course, was greatly prized. Never has the watch seemed half so valuable as since it was lost and found again, and it will always have a new value to me because of this experience. Brother Mailley would not accept the offered reward, but I shall see that he is fitted out with first-class fishing tackle. He is expecting to-day five of his friends from Greensburg to join him, and they have engaged board in the village, at a very pleasant place, and at very reasonable rates. He is entering upon his month's vacation with zest, and in a way and spirit that will make it very beneficial to him. There is much in how we take life as to what we get out of it, and we predict that he and his companions, one of them a brother minister in the Methodist church, will have a joyous and profitable time together on these lakes and through these woods during the month of August.

At times the lake has a note of sadness in its music, as if it were sobbing out the sorrow of the world. There is a moan in its waves to-day, as if it were in sympathy with all the pain and suffering of our common humanity. How strangely mingled are pain and joy in this world of lights and shadows! In so far as man has capacity for the highest joy has he, also, the keenest pain and deepest anguish. We may solace ourselves, then, with the thought that if we could suffer no pain neither could we experience any joy. No doubt the keenest pain and the most intense anguish ever experienced by any soul on earth was that of the sinless Man who embodied within himself the human and the divine. As he had capacity for the deepest sorrow, so he must have had capacity for the highest joy, for these are but the different sides of the same nature which is akin to the infinite and the eternal. A modern poet, in "The British Weekly," argues the immortality of man from his capacity for pain:

"I think man's great capacity for pain
Proves his immortal birthright. I am sure
No merely human mind could bear the strain
Of some tremendous sorrows we endure.

"Art's most ingenious breastworks fail at length,
Beat by the mighty billows of the sea;
Only the God-formed shores possess the strength
To stand before their onslaughts, and not flee.

"The structure that we build with careful toil,
The tempest lays in ruins in an hour;
While some grand tree that springs forth from the soil
Is bended but not broken by its power.

"Unless our souls had root in soil divine
We could not bear earth's overwhelming strife,
The fiercest pain that racks this heart of mine
Convinces me of everlasting life."

A Visit to Bethany

Bethany! Honored name whether in far off Palestine or on the borders of three American states. On the southeastern slope of the Mount of Olives, where was the home beloved of the Master, was a village of world-wide fame. In Brook County, West Virginia, is another Bethany that ought to be known to all the Disciples of Christ as they come to the year 1909. For here was established the first college that made the Bible fundamental in its curriculum. Its founder and first president in an address in 1854 said: "All that lies between barbarism and the highest civilization, all that distinguishes the rude American Indian and the most polished citizen, the barbarian and the Christian, has been achieved by the learning, the science, the arts, the religion and the morals which colleges have nourished, cherished and imparted to the world." At the time Alexander Campbell said this there were 120 colleges in the United States, yet but one of them had a chair for Sacred History and Bible Literature!

Alexander Campbell died before I came into this world, but my father was one who sat at his feet in the early days of Bethany College. My mother was the bridesmaid of one of his daughters. My grandfather was one of the board of trustees of the college and one of the men who participated in Mr. Campbell's funeral. Alexander Campbell and Bethany—they seem to be part of my very being! And yet until June, 1907, I had never visited the little town of such momentous importance to the churches of Christ, and, indeed, to the great world. But then was fulfilled the desire of many years, and at 6 o'clock on a cold morning at the end of the month, my father and I stepped off an express train at Steubenville, O., and taking a trolley, in a half-hour's time were at Wellsburg, the river town. Here a son of Alexander Campbell is still living, and here is one of the oldest churches; indeed, it is the second one in our reformatory movement. After breakfast a hack drive of seven miles brought us to Bethany. The beautiful scenery along that drive beside the banks of the Buffalo has not been exaggerated.

It was Baccalaureate Sunday and the services had already begun as we drove into the straggling village. Wending our way to the old meeting-house I saw the first object that made me realize I was at last in Bethany. The old building where my father had essayed to preach before "the Bishop" I recognized, for I had seen it in photograph. And yet how small it seemed, and how odd to one of the younger generation and a "city man," to enter the building with the audience facing you.

With the new Bethany there must be a modern church. Yet I hope the old one will never be torn down, but kept as nearly as possible like it originally was. We need some sentiment and we have little in the way of historic buildings. Let us keep at Bethany all we have. President Pendleton thus writes of this church about the year 1850: "This is Saturday night; to-morrow Mr. Campbell addresses, at the invitation of both houses of Congress, the representatives of our nation in the National Hall at Washington City, and to-morrow, the Lord willing, we shall meet in our humble temple to praise and invoke our common Father. We talked, when you were here, of pulling it down and building a new and larger one, but it yet stands upon the grassy banks of the Buffalo—a monument of more primitive times that has outlived many a bright spirit who once worshipped under its roof."

There is plenty of vacant ground at Bethany for us to exercise the American love of creating something new, and the hour for doing this is at hand.

It was a crowded house, with C. L.

Heb. 12:2; Rev. 3:20, 21. I will not attempt to describe the feelings that swayed me as I sat in this old sanctuary, for I have little enough space for a plain recital of facts. After the greeting of friends and meeting of new ones, we lunched with Mrs. Decima Campbell Barclay, and in the afternoon were driven out to the Bethany burying ground.

I have wandered in many old burial grounds varied as Pere la Chaise and

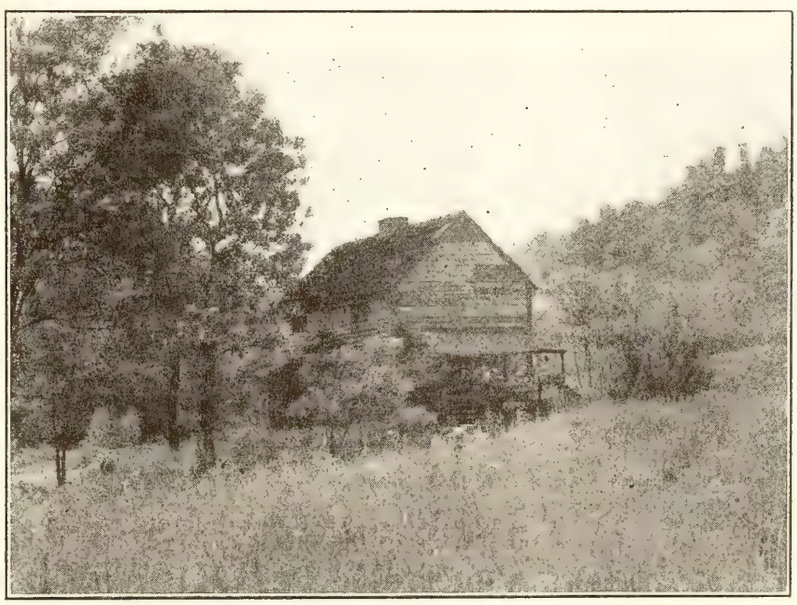
Westminster Abbey. I have stood by the graves of Wordsworth and Wesley and a thousand other men whom the world calls famous. And I can agree with Mr. Robert Owen, who at the time he was visiting Mr. Campbell to make arrangements for the famous debate, remarked that he "had not seen a more beautiful place in his travels in this country or Scotland." Situated on a hillside with a beautiful view overlooking the winding Buffalo and the hills beyond, the cemetery is entirely enclosed by a stone wall which goes three feet below the ground and stands four feet above. One has to mount this wall by steps, which is a somewhat inconvenient method of entrance or exit. The cemetery is just about one acre in extent. The photograph which I took, and which is reproduced on another page, practically takes in the full sweep of the graves of special importance, President Trible's alone, I believe, not being within the purview. Immediately at the juncture of the first two paths on the left near the little bush, is the unmarked grave of Dr. Barclay, our first foreign missionary, long located at Jerusalem, and whose aged wife I had the pleasure of meeting at the old Campbell mansion. The monument of Alexander Campbell can not be mistaken. It is the large one straight down the path on the left. The foundation stone is of granite and weighed 4,000 pounds; the upper structure is of beautiful Italian marble and the cupola is not very high. The monument stands opposite the graves of most of the Campbell family; nearest to it is a low, marble head-stone with the simple wording, "Alexander Campbell," inscribed on it. To the left of this grave lie the two wives of Mr. Campbell, while on his right is buried his father, Thomas Campbell, and next to him is his wife. On the side of the monument nearest to the grave are to be seen a representation of two Bibles—one large and closed, the other open and resting on the closed one, with the following quotation:

1st John, V Chap., 12 verse: "He that hath the Son hath Life."



Then follows:

In Memoriam,
ALEXANDER CAMPBELL,
Defender of the Faith Once Delivered to the Saints; Founder of Bethany College,
Who, being dead, yet speaketh by his numerous writings and holy example.
Born in the County of Antrim, Ireland, September 12, 1788. Died at Bethany, Va., March 4, 1866.

Others of the Campbell family are buried in the same cemetery, some of them near this monument. And others, too, who have been great factors in the Campbellian reformation were buried in this God's acre. The handsome shaft of marble in the center of the picture stands on the Pendleton lot, and here lies buried W. K. Pendleton, Mr. Campbell's successor in the presidency of Bethany College, and in the editorship of the "Millenial Harbinger." The shaft to the right of this marks the grave of Dr. Robert Richardson, the biographer and great helper of Campbell in all his work. Brother Loos, who alone survives of all the early Bethany College circles, here interred his aged mother and several of his children. The monument in the extreme right in the background of the picture marks the last resting place of President Woolery

On the way towards the cemetery and close to it, one passes the home where Mr. Campbell lived and which is still in the possession of the Campbell family. The illustration we print on another page is, I believe, from the only photograph which gives the study and house in the same picture and showing their relative positions. There are many historical memories connected with this spot beside the magnificent trees planted in the yard by Mr. Campbell's own hands. The first part of the old homestead was built between 100 and 110 years ago. Mr. Campbell taught some two years in the old parlor while he erected a large building on the upper-side of the house. A hall passed between, and there was a large room adjoining it. This part was framed in Pittsburg and brought down the Ohio River, being put up by carpenters at Bethany. After Mr. Campbell discontinued keeping Buffalo Seminary, the large room was divided by a wall. In the front portion, the spirit of Alexander Campbell took its flight on the night of Lord's day, March 4, 1866, while the old-fashioned family clock, which stands in the corner, was about striking the midnight hour. In this room the bed upon which he died may still be seen, and in the parlor of the homestead are several oil paintings of Mr. Campbell. One by Bogle, which we reproduced on the front page of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in our "Alexander Campbell number," is hanging over the mantlepiece. Another fine oil painting, which I photographed, has never before been reproduced, but will be found in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Mr. Campbell was very fond of trees and shrubbery, and it may be of interest when I state that many of those now giving beautiful shade to his home were brought by canal all the way from Philadelphia and he himself helped to plant them. To me the most interesting building on the grounds is the little study to which he used to re-

Its shape at first was hexagonal, with a raised skylight at the top. Indeed, the whole of the roof at one time was made of glass, but in later days, as to-day, it was slated. It was painted straw-color and had no windows other

Bethany and the Centennial---A Symposium

At Least One Dollar.

With all the friends of Bethany College, who are also friends of our great plea for the restoration of New Testament Christianity, I hail with joy the effort to endow this collegiate mother by our Centennial. It ought to be a privilege for every Disciple of Christ to contribute to this great cause; and by making it a popular subscription, it will surely appeal to a multitude of our brethren and sisters. Let every one give at least a dollar, and the thing is done.

W. F. Richardson.

For the Whole Brotherhood.

The idea of raising $500,000 as an endowment fund for Bethany College, by October, 1909, is certainly a splendid one, and it should by all means receive the hearty endorsement and support of the entire brotherhood. The history of this institution makes it of more than ordinary interest to our people throughout the world. In a sense it is, as has been said many times, "the mother of us all," and as such it is entitled to the warmest sympathy of the Disciples wherever they may be, regardless of geographical limitations. It was the pride of its distinguished founder, who was its able president from the time of its establishment to the day of his death, and upon it he bestowed lavishly the labors of his heart. Through his labors and those of the men who were students in the college, the influence of Bethany has been very extensive, and thereby the cause of primitive and unsectarian Christianity has been given a tremendous impulse.

There is no good reason why the influence and power of this historic institution should wane. On the contrary it should increase with every passing year, and that, too, without interfering with any of the other institutions of learning among us. For the purposes of such a college its location is ideal, and its environment is such as to adapt it to the highest development, other things being equal, of the best and noblest features and faculties of young manhood.

I hope and pray that the proposition to raise the amount indicated above by the date mentioned will be altogether successful. Perhaps nothing would be better calculated to thrill the hearts of the brethren assembled in Pittsburg in 1909, and kindle within their bosoms abounding enthusiasm than an announcement that old Bethany is handsomely endowed. The movement has my hearty approval and should commend itself to the favorable consideration of the entire brotherhood.

J. B. Briney.

Two Annual Education Days.

The American Churches of Christ could do no more beautiful and fitting thing than to handsomely endow beloved and historic Bethany College and thus place our Centennial educational aim where it really belongs.

Bethany and beginning are forever united in the history of our movement. About it there is a sentimental atmosphere that can not, in the nature of things, be found elsewhere. No other could array such an exhibit of real Centennial claims as can Bethany. It is the only common denominator in our college problem. It is folly to try to adequately endow them all by the Centennial convention time. It will be easy to put Bethany at the safe and easy point, financially, if we unite to this end.

What a charming and gracious thing it would be if the presidents and boards of directors of all our other colleges would just come out and say: "Brethren, let us make our next two annual educational day offerings special, definite and for Bethany."

This would touch the hearts of the entire brotherhood and thus center the effort and aggregate an offering that would fill Bethany's fondest hopes, and leave us something to advertise with pride when we come to the Centennial, all the churches of all the states thus lovingly turning their offerings to the beloved "mother of us all." No other college could dare ask for such partiality; but Bethany not only can, but should.

The alumni of other colleges need not feel that it would be disloyal to their own "fostering mother." Indeed, the very opposite would be true. It would clearly demonstrate that their training had been such as enabled them to rise above sordid, selfish claims and recognize the graciousness and beauty that lie in so desirable a thing as to have dear old Bethany College placed on a permanent and efficient basis.

The ease with which this can be done and the beauty of it when it was done, would make the work of endowing all our other colleges infinitely easier as the years go by.

Wallace Tharp,

Endow Old Bethany.

There are two strong reasons why Bethany College should receive an endowment of $500,000:

1. She is the "mother of us all." The man who would neglect his mother would deserve and receive the condemnation of all good men. He would be failing to provide for her the most sacred of his own home, and would show himself as denying the faith and becoming worse than an infidel.

2. She is doing a great work. The years coming to her do not bring decrepitude, which usually accompanies age, but rather increases vigor and larger usefulness. She seems blissfully ignorant of the dreaded "dead line," and concerned only with the noble ambition that her glorious past shall be eclipsed by a more glorious future. Her symbol is a rising and not a setting sun.

M. M. Davis.

"Please Accept this as—"

Bethany College ought to receive an endowment of a half million dollars on account of its good work in the years that are gone. In this matter "The Centennial" does not figure. The work that Bethany College has done is the reason for her adequate endowment. The disciples ought to say, "Thank you, dear old Bethany, thank you, for what you have done for us, and for the world. Please accept this half million as a slight token of our appreciation of your service."

With such a gift as this the future of Bethany College will be equal to the glory of the past. It will be put in the way of serving the present and future generations as it has rendered invaluable service in the years that have been.

Let there be a united and an enthusiastic determination to raise at least an endowment of $500,000 for Bethany College.

B. B. Tyler.

As an Investment.

1. Bethany College as an investment. No one, who has ever stopped to reflect upon the roll of men Bethany has given to the world, has ever regretted any gift made to that institution. Some of these have been more than men, so to speak,—they have been institutions in their influence.

2. The student's investment. There is something in the layout of the College curriculum that gets at the best in any man that applies himself to it. Then it is like Oxford and Cambridge Universities. The Colleges of these Universities

A CALIFORNIAN'S
Successful Experiment with Food.

A man in Calif., took up the question of food, to see if he could recover from an old case of dyspepsia from which nux vomica, pepsin, and other remedies gave him no relief.

He started in with Grape-Nuts food and his dyspepsia quickly disappeared. He also left off the use of coffee and took Postum Food Coffee in its place. He writes that he has been put right, perfectly well, and going to remain so by continuing the use of the Grape-Nuts and Postum.

It is worth trial by anyone who desires to be well, to change the diet, and particularly to leave off coffee. Grape-Nuts food contains elements that rebuilds the grey matter in the nerve centres and brain and give one a feeling of reserve strength and vigor. This food is perfectly cooked at the factory, and can be served instantly with cream. Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

have their pyramids of men that look down upon the young gownsman from the niches of a nation's history. Bethany College has its pyramidal men.

3. Are you looking for a lasting investment? In some of Pittsburg's cemeteries there are mausoleums that cost $30,000. That money would have endowed a chair, or the interest thereon would have kept ten students a year, forever. Within some of those mausoleums decay is eating the pampered Dives' bodies and the moth of forgetfulness is destroying all the purple robes of their self-centered fame, whilst the kin are made giddy with their cast-off millions.

"Cornelius, thy prayers and thine alms are gone up for a memorial before God." This is heaven's mausoleum.

C. L. Thurgood.

Bethany, Mother of Us All.

Endow her adequately and immediately! First, because it is her turn. We have not a single properly endowed college. Bethany is our first college. It is proper that we enrich with money this school which has so enriched the religion of millions of persons. Second, because it will be to our lasting shame if the Centennial finds us without some well-endowed schools. In our colleges lies the real hope of the movement in which we are engaged. To make permanent these institutions and increase all their facilities for doing good is to insure the more speedy success of our plea. Therefore endow our colleges,—Bethany first! Third, because she deserves it. She is a good tree, and has brought forth good fruits. She has held fast the form of sound words; she has trained men to think, speak and write, and has given them both vision and determination. She is not and has not been under suspicion. Her record is ever good. Endow her for her works' sake. Fourth, because her sons and friends are able to put her beyond all need. Some of her sons can send her a hundred thousand dollars each,—and they be all the richer for what they gave. A great host can give smaller sums,—and will do it. All together, for once in our history! Let us endow old Bethany.

Wm. J. Wright,

Caring for the Grandmother.

Bethany is the mother of us all. She is the grandmother of many of us. She is the great-grandmother of not a few. Before this large and increasing family she casts only benedictions. Over them all she exercises a loving watchcare. Unlike most grandmothers, she is untouched by the decrepitude of years and drinks at the fabled fountain of perpetual youth. To-day she is appealing to her large and growing family to provide for her increasing needs. Her enlarging family calls for larger building for their accommodations. Her increasing children ask for a larger table to satisfy their hunger. What nobler service could these offspring render this grand old mother than to bestow upon her such bounties as to place her entirely beyond possible need of any kind. What honor we should render our common interests if, by 1909, we could put in the hands of the trustees of Bethany College one-half a million dollars. What a splendid recognition this would be of the great services she has rendered us all. The golden slope would rejoice with the populous Atlantic over such an achievement. Here are my hand and heart to join in such an enterprise.

A. C. Smither.

Whence Sprang the Prevailing Idea.

Drake University is my alma mater. I believe I am as loyal to Drake as any graduate of Bethany can be to that honored and historic school. I want to see Drake continue her great success until she indeed becomes "the Harvard of the West." Yet my love for Drake and my hopes for Drake do not prevent me from recognizing the debt we all owe to Bethany College.

The distinctive ideals of the Disciples of Christ were fostered, if not born, at Bethany College. Those ideals have been taken up and to a greater or less extent are being preached in all leading Protestant pulpits. Bethany College has not only shaped our own thought and life, but has directly and indirectly affected all Christendom. Hence in our efforts to do something really worthy in the Centennial celebration, it seems to me that no one thing could be more fitting than to raise a half million dollar endowment for Bethany College. The time will come when Bethany will be looked upon not only as the place where our own movement found its first concrete expression in a college, but as one of the first places from which sprang the prevailing idea of twentieth century Christianity. Instead of allowing things to drift until some day Bethany shall be visited as the Mount Vernon of our brotherhood, let us build an enduring monument in a growing school that may be visited by coming generations in search of knowledge and the equipment for a successful life.

Wm. J. Lockhart,

From a Former President.

Bethany will be the focal point of chiefest interest for our people in the Centennial year. Tens of thousands will go to Pittsburg to celebrate the hundredth anniversary of the publication of "The Declaration and Address," and to rejoice over all that has been accomplished in the intervening years. From Pittsburg most of the pilgrims will want to go to Bethany. "The Declaration and Address" was written in Brush Run and was published at Washington, but it was in Bethany that the principles embodied in that immortal document were advocated and made effective. In Bethany "The Christian Baptist" and "The Millennial Harbinger" were published. In Bethany Thomas Campbell spent the last years of his life. In Bethany Alexander Campbell spent his entire public life. To Bethany the leaders of the Restoration Movement resorted for conference and for inspiration. In Bethany Thomas and Alexander Campbell are buried. In Bethany there are many points of interest, but the main thing is the College. It is stated on Alexander Campbell's monument that he was the founder of that institution. Without the College and the men that were trained in it there would not be much to celebrate or many to celebrate it. The College is Alexander Campbell's best monument. Those who go to Bethany in the Centennial year should find the College property in first-class condition. The burnt halls should be rebuilt before that time. The great building should be in thorough repair. It should be known that the endowment is ample for all the needs of the institution. The proposal to secure half a million dollars for Bethany before the Centennial is one that should be put through with enthusiasm. For a million and a quarter of people this should be the easiest thing imaginable. The doing of this for Bethany will aid every other school among us. What is proposed can be done. We can do it if we will. The Lord help us to say, "We can do it and we will."

SOAKED IN COFFEE
Until too Stiff to Bend Over.

"When I drank coffee I often had sick headaches, nervousness and biliousness much of the time but when I went to visit a friend I got in the habit of drinking Postum.

"I gave up coffee entirely and the result has been that I have been entirely relieved of all my stomach and nervous trouble.

"My mother was just the same way. We all drink Postum now and, without coffee in the house for 2 years, we are all well.

"A neighbor of mine, a great coffee drinker, was troubled with pains in her side for years and was an invalid. She was not able to do her work and could not even mend her clothes or do anything at all where she would have to bend forward. If she tried to do a little hard work she would get such pains that she would have to lie down for the rest of the day.

"At last I persuaded her to stop drinking coffee and try Postum Food Coffee and she did so and has used Postum ever since; the result has been that she can now do her work, can sit for a whole day and mend and can sew on the machine and she never feels the least bit of pain in her side in fact she has got well and it shows coffee was the cause of the whole trouble.

"I could also tell you about several other neighbors who have been cured by quitting coffee and using Postum in its place." "There's a Reason." Look in pkg. for the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

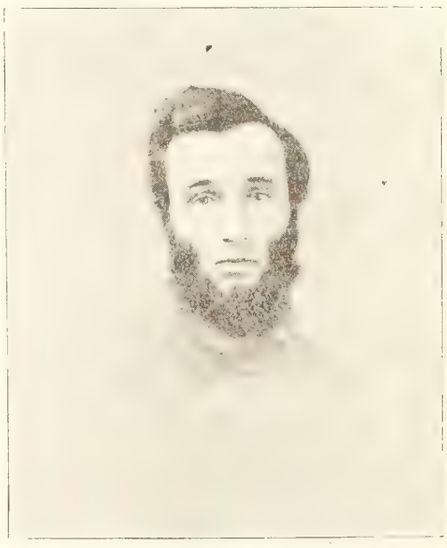
The Early Days of Bethany College

By Charles Louis Loos

The founding of Bethany College was a very important epoch in our history. That A. Campbell should become the dominant leader in the reformatory effort inaugurated by his father and carried on by himself and other men of like noble inspirations, was inevitable.

One fact was of great decisive moment in the character of these reformers which we can not note and appreciate too much. They were not only gifted with large intellectual powers, but they were also eminently educated men. Good natural endowments alone were not sufficient to fit them for the great task for which God had chosen them. As in the case of Paul, the prince of the apostles and the greatest expounder to the world of the religion of Jesus, they were armed with the power with which a high intellectual culture endows men.

A. Campbell stood pre-eminent among our fathers in this regard. At a very early date in the history of our Reformation he saw, he felt, he declared that an educated ministry was an absolute condition of true success in the great reformatory enterprise that had been undertaken. This conviction grew stronger and stronger in his mind by his experience as years advanced. "We must have a well educated ministry," he constantly repeated. This conviction was the motive of his founding Bethany College. This purpose ripened and was fixed in his mind before any movement in that direction was made among us elsewhere, before Bacon College was founded in Kentucky.



What was Bethany College and what gave it its power? The Bible should be the supreme element in its instruction, he said. But A. Campbell's large mind and wide and deep intelligence entirely forbade the notion of eschewing, in ministerial education, literary, scientific and classical culture. It was so with Luther and Calvin, those great reformers. The young men educated for the gospel ministry, he held, should be armed with the largest possible educational culture. This, indeed, is the only correct conception of a ministerial education.

Where lay the power in Bethany College in its first years? This is a very interesting and instructive question.

When its first session opened in November, 1841, Bethany College had no endowment. Its financial resources were exceedingly small, its educational equipments very limited, and its faculty numbered but six men. This condition of things continued for years. We know, however, that it did admirable work. Among its early graduates were students who became men of power in the Church. A. Campbell's purposes in creating the college were at once realized. An educated ministry arose, the beginning of a new day of life, of strength, of hope, of large and ever enlarging development that has made us a great and mighty people in the land and on the earth.

I repeat the question, Wherein lay the strength of Bethany College in its early days? The answer to this question deserves very especial attention. It was not in the number of its professors, for this was small. It was not in its endowment, for this was also exceedingly limited. It was not in its educational equipments, for in this the institution was then in the day of its weakness.

But Bethany was nevertheless strong in those early days. The number of professors, the financial endowments, the educational equipments, are all things of moment that colleges need to do their work well. But there is something greater than all these, the lack of which is the greatest want an institution of learning can suffer. It is the men that colleges and universities need, that alone give them real power to be what they ought to be and to do what they ought to do.

The great educational formative power that Bethany in its early life had was A. Campbell himself. The presence of this mighty Hercules in the college gave it a power over the minds and souls of its students that lifted many of them into a largeness and dignity of manhood of soul and life that proceed only from such a source of strength. Only the students that were under the instruction and inspiration of A. Campbell can understand and appreciate what I am saying. This extraordinary man opened the college exercises every class-day with an hour's lecture on the Bible. The man, as he stood before us, was an inspiration. To be thus in the presence of a man like A. Campbell, and to be in the presence of a mere person, are two very different things!

The eagle eye of this "master of assemblies" was enough to arrest attention and to awaken thought. Then his language, the language of an imperial spirit, in his opening prayers and in his lectures—a spirit cultured in the noblest fields of the English language, profane and sacred,—poured an influence into the minds and hearts of the students that could only proceed from such a high source. The language of President Campbell was the strongest in its Anglo-Saxon forms that the English language could impart. What a formative power this was with students!

Then the thoughts that came forth to us from such a man in his masterly expositions of the Bible!—not only in the lectures, that at times rose to wonderful heights of eloquence, of faith, of inspiration, of feeling, but in his sermons, to which we listened on Sundays! How those captured the souls of the students, and were with them a permanent force for life! This was an education in the highest sense. And as this great man was in his morning lectures, so he was also in his class-room. Here I sat under his instruction as professor of logic and rhetoric. He was, by force of his lofty nature, ever the same. President Campbell, let me not fail to observe, was a man of faith in the highest sense. This made him mighty as a religious teacher. The whole Bible was to him a book of truth. He was not, thank God, one of these demi-semi believers in the Bible, some of whom we know in our day, such as some of our universities boast of, who know not what they believe; who know nothing of strength; who are ever in perpetual uncertainty, fog and doubt. A. Campbell's students were not of this sort.

Dr. R. Richardson, one of the earliest professors of Bethany, who is not known as well as he ought to be, was also no ordinary man. He was of fine literary, scholarly habits of mind, well versed in the best literature. As a professor, students looked up to him. In his private intercourse with students he was most communicative and amiable. He was an admirable expounder of the Bible. Few men among us had a richer, more accurate and valuable conception of our Reformation than Dr. Richardson. He was very clear and positive in his religious teaching. Thank God for such men!

Professor Pendleton was a young man, who exercised an admirable influence on the students, and a diligent student of the Bible. He was a wise counsellor in matters connected with the college. We had no doubtful and doubting believers among the teachers at Bethany.

In conclusion, let me say: What we want in colleges and universities as teachers is men, "masters of assemblies"; not mere persons to take the students through the courses; but men whose very presence and intercourse with the students exercise an inspiring influence over them.

Above all things, in the name of all you value in the college, do not select cheap teachers because of their cheapness.

than two near the door. Sometime afterward an addition was built at the back part and a fireplace put in there. The shelves held several hundred volumes, but not many of these are now in the building, many of his books having been donated to the college library. In the building to-day will be found a chair that he used for some fifteen or twenty years. Under the seat is a drawer in which he put his manuscripts as he wrote.

Two of the buildings of special interest will be found not far from Mr. Campbell's home. Passing this, just before coming to the bridge of the Buffalo and under the brow of the hill on which stands the cemetery, one comes to an old wooden structure which was either the very building or one identical with the one where was printed the "Christian Baptist." One can hardly imagine this backwoods-like building was a place where a printing-press sent forth the thoughts of Alexander Campbell. Just below the building is the place where Judge Black was immersed by Mr. Campbell in the Buffalo. Coming back toward the town, some 150 yards through the fields from the road and close to the stream, stands another farm-like building, which from the road looks like a dilapidated barn. This, I was informed, was at one time the residence of Moses E. Lard, one of the strong men of our movement in the early days. How he overcame his difficulties and strove after knowledge may never be known to the present generation, but he makes brief acknowledgement of the gratitude he feels to Mr. Campbell and others of his benefactors: "Four years and four months ago, strange, homeless, penniless and untaught, I landed a stranger at Bethany College. It was my fixed purpose, though encumbered with the responsibilities of a family, to qualify myself for a more extended and enlightened usefulness. This object, the first and nearest to my heart, I wanted the means to accomplish." Then he goes on to tell of Mr. Campbell's letters which brought him to Bethany, and the disinterested and cordial manner in which he was so often aided by the President, Mr. Pendleton and others.

Coming back to the town, one turns to the left of the church and sees facing the short street the building known as Bleak House, wherein was the printing-press which turned out the "Millennial Harbinger." It is used as a dwelling now, and there are no signs of a printing establishment.

That which to many is the center of interest at Bethany is the College, standing on some seventy-five acres of land high above the town and overlooking the beautiful Buffalo Creek. Its charter was procured from the Legislature of Virginia in 1840. For many years Mr. Campbell had cherished the purpose and desire of establishing the institution, and its first session began in 1841. He superintended the construction of the first building, and when this burned down he set out on a tour, accompanied by Mr. Pendleton, to solicit subscriptions and make collections for the new edifice, the corner stone of which was laid in 1858. Mr. Campbell used to walk from his home, three-quarters of a mile away, before daylight every morning to lecture on Sacred History. It may be of interest in these later days to recall that "College Hall shall be open every Lord's day morning for religious worship and instruction, to be performed by respectable ministers of various denominations. Pious young men preparing for the ministry in any of the religious denominations shall be permitted to attend the college without charge of tuition." Among the earliest graduates was Charles Louis Loos, who writes in this number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The present building is a collegiate Gothic of irregular outline. It is built of brick, has a large tower, and is finished in free stone. On one side there are cloisters, which give a very pleasing effect to the building. Prof. A. E. Dolbear, who was at one time of the faculty and a very distinguished scientist, delivering his inaugural address, said: "There is not such a college building as that in the United States." But to-day repairs are needed as well as new equipment. To the south of the main building stands Phillips Hall, where the young ladies board. Facing these is the new library, almost finished, for which Andrew Carnegie is largely responsible. It is constructed of brown pressed brick, with stone trimmings. This will be a great acquisition, and it will be very conveniently located. Beyond the college to the north is Pendleton Heights, the home of the president. This was built in the days of Brother Pendleton, and was left by him to the college as the residence for his successors. Quite a number of young men, however, find a home here. Nearby is the little home of "Miss Cammie," beloved member of the present faculty and daughter of President Pendleton.

One other building I must mention—Bethpage, the home for some years of Dr. Richardson. It is now occupied by some one farming the land, and the study is kept locked with its contents, perhaps, as he left them. It is a little room, reached by a narrow, straight stairway, and lighted by a small window. His plain desk and a chair are about the only pieces of furniture save the shelves filled with books and papers. His violin case leans against the desk, and on some improvised cross-rafters is the manuscript of his life of Alexander Campbell. But the cobwebs are in evidence. It is a beautiful drive back to the town, and from one point on the road one gets the best possible view of the college.

I could fill a page with an account of the college to-day and of this commencement. Whether in intercourse with president, professors, students and visitors, attending the exercises or "rooting" at that great ball game when Bethany, in the fifteenth inning, defeated Franklin College, or studying "biz," or lunching with the alumni—it was all profitable and enjoyable. But Brother Power has written of some of these things. Suffice it for me to say that Bethany, under President Cramblet and his corps of teachers, is taking on new life after a period of hard struggle. It is nearly sixty years since Mr. Pendleton said: "To God and his saints we commend the care and keeping of Bethany College now, henceforth and forever." We must end these struggles. Bethany College must have an ample endowment.

My First Impressions of Bethany By W. T. Moore

I had dreamed about what Bethany would be to me. When I decided to enter the college I had very little experience of travel. As I now remember the matter, I do not think I had ever been out of my native state. I was innocence personified, so far as the ways of the world are concerned; but I had a longing to know things, and this was the main reason that influenced me to go to college. Well do I remember the day I crossed the Ohio River, and in order to make my trip as cheap as possible, I engaged passage on a steamboat. When I stepped on this boat, I felt that I was stepping on to a new manhood, new opportunities and new responsibilities. I had imagined a thousand things as to what the college would look like, and what it would all mean to me. And consequently, when I arrived at the little village I began at once to compare what my eyes beheld with the dreams I had before coming.

I need not now stop to say much about how this comparison affected me. Some way or other the matter of my coming, with two or three other young men, had become known to the students, who had already arrived on the spot, and immediately I was confronted with representatives of the two literary societies, seeking to obtain a promise from me with respect to my society association. I knew at least enough not to commit myself fully until I looked the field over.

In a few hours I was settled on the second floor at the western end of what was then called the Inn, and as soon as my trunk had been placed I walked to my window and looked out upon the beautiful scenery of the Buffalo; and while looking there I saw that some young fellows over the front doorway were paying their respects to a "new comer" by emptying a bucket of water on him just as he ascended the steps. He evidently must have concluded that he had a cool reception, for it was rather a cold day and the water must have been anything but grateful. I wondered if that was a part of the initiatory services into the college. I did not have to wait long until I found that these services varied with any new conditions, but that every new arrival had to go through something of the sort before he was thought worthy to take his position among the students. Snipe hunting was then a favorite exercise. Some "green un" was usually selected as the victim, and by the time he got through the whole process he was very much initiated.

Those were great old days at Bethany. "The boys" had a lot of innocent fun, but rarely ever did anything that was seriously objectionable. To me one of the most amusing things that ever took place at Bethany while I was there was a description of an imaginary meeting on the campus wherein the threatened visit of a comet was considered. At the time there was a great deal of talk about a certain comet which was approaching the earth and which would probably knock the earth into "smithereenes." The story was published in the "Stylus," the college magazine, the substance of which was to the effect that a meeting of the students was held on the campus to determine what to do to avert the comet's threatened destruction. At this meeting it was decided to equip a balloon and send two of our students, who were known to be the ugliest men in the college, whose nom de plumes were Eradicus and Tornator, with the hope that they might meet the comet and persuade him not to come on his visit of destruction. The account goes on to say that these two students, equipped with this authority, met the comet and after a parley with him, he asked the question if they fairly represented the people on earth, and when they declared they did, the comet at once told them that they could go back and feel secure, for he would not visit a people who were as ugly as these two representatives.

There were giant young men in Bethany at that time. I recall the names of a number who have since made their mark in various departments of work. Many, however, have already passed away from the scenes of the present life, but I can not feel that they have lost interest in either the old college or the great cause for which it stands. Bethany has a history which does not belong to any other college among us. It has claims which ought in some degree to be met by the great brotherhood which it has served so long and so faithfully. The call which is made in this issue is absolutely vital, so far as its future usefulness is concerned. Will the entire brotherhood rise up as one man and answer this call with the money that is needed? We believe that this will be the magnificent result.

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

Some matters in the annual commencement of Bethany College need emphasizing. There were 280 students in the institution, the largest number ever enrolled; there were 90 in the Bible department, and its young men preparing for the ministry have during the year added 1,000 persons to the churches. Here is a college which, purely as a home missionary organization, justifies every dollar given to its work. It cost us $16.000 to run the school in this sixty-sixth session, and this is just one of the fruits. What an argument for the endowment of this ancient and honorable institution, with half a million by 1909! There can be no question that Bethany has a mission still, and that the spirit of its founder and of its earlier sons is yet the spirit of the college.

The traditions and atmosphere of Bethany are both evangelical and evangelistic. It is a great privilege for our young men and women to come in touch with the spirits that still live here and mould life and character. Animi fortunati et illuminati et beati! They wrought well. They were men of one idea, and that idea the conversion of the world to the Lord Jesus Christ. They sowed the seed of a mighty harvest. They were not disobedient to the heavenly vision. They are among the blessed dead, whose works do follow them. Campbell and Richardson and Pendleton are names that can not die. Bethany is a memorial to their teaching and work, and so long as it abides and so far as it reaches their influence lives and moves.

We have never had a better year. The trustees present were Anderson, McMillan, Vodrey, Curtis, Cochran, Main, Irvin, Mulholland, Graham, Marshall, Jobes, Power and White. Dr. I. M. Ridge and Col. A. Campbell have fallen in the harness the past year. Earl M. Oglebay, Russell Errett, and W. P. Lipscomb were selected as members of the board. All the old faculty were continued. There were thirty-eight graduates, and the graduating exercises were of unusually high order. It is easy to prophesy for this class honorable distinction among the honorable ranks of the college alumni. Students who in their maiden efforts have added a thousand souls to the saved in a single year in addition to the prosecution of their studies, are not likely to fall below the high standard Bethany has maintained in the past.

There are many improvements in sight at the old place. The new library is a thing of beauty. While not ready for commencement, it is plainly a great addition to the college plant, and will be a treasure for all time to come. Bethany has been greatly lacking in library facilities and now a donation of $25,000 for the purchase of books from one of its well-to-do alumni, will be an imperial benefaction. The trolley from Wellsburg is another twentieth century improvement. This is more than two-thirds on the way, and will no doubt be ready by another June festival. The old boys are delighted to come back and see, with the old, never-failing attractions of the perpetual hills, and the gleaming, winding Buffalo, with its meadows, the trees and birds and historic monuments, these new things that tell of progress.

The show of the old boys was worthy at this closing. The alumni lunch brought a feast of reason and flow of soul. Think of such themes as "Bethany During the —Bethany!

Our Budget

—"Mother of us all."

—The College of Alexander Campbell.

—The first Bible College in America.

—A popular subscription to thoroughly equip Bethany should be taken in every church.

—A historical sermon would bring new knowledge to thousands of our church-goers.

—Half-a-dollar from every church member would raise the amount needed.

—The Christian-Evangelist freely gives large space this week to Bethany, because of what she has been and may be to us as a religious people.

—The illustrations in this issue are nearly all from photographs made by the Assistant Editor on his recent visit to Bethany. Many of these views have never before appeared in any publication.

—We deeply regret to announce the deaths of M. E. Harlan and Joseph H. Stone, of which we shall print particulars in our next issue.

—Plan now for your autumn work, including a trip to the convention at Norfolk. The Christian-Evangelist will have its special train to Jamestown.

—The Lawrence County Convention will be held at Stotts City, Mo., October 2-4.

—In our columns of this week will be found news reports of results from two union meetings.

—G. F. Crites paid a visit to Culloden, West Virginia, that had an important bearing on the church building now under construction.

—S. D. Dutcher, of Omaha, is, we notice, giving one of the addresses in the Belleview Summer Assembly, a Presbyterian gathering at Belleview, Neb.

—B. S. Ferrall and family are taking a vacation at Lake James, near Angola, Ind. M. M. Eaton, of Ord, Neb., fills his pulpit at Buffalo, N. Y., during his absence.

—We regret to learn that Harold E. Monser was called back to his home from a meeting at Syracuse, N. Y., by the death of his little child, a baby girl of some eight months.

—J. E. Teany, the liquor dealer who was converted at the revival meeting in the Christian Church at Litchfield, Ill., and who poured his liquor into the street, has a thrilling story to tell.

—Since becoming minister of the church at Greenfield, Ind., Verle W. Blair is able to report 87 accessions to the church, with a net gain of 63. The total membership at the present time is about 520.

—V. E. Ridenour, singing evangelist, has assisted in five meetings since the first of January, which have resulted in over 400 conversions to the churches. Brother Ridenour's permanent address is Topeka, Kan.

—Dr. S. D. Mercer, of Omaha, Neb., is giving a new pipe-organ, that is soon to be placed in our new First Church in that city. It will be a beautiful tribute in memory of his mother, who was a life-long member of the Mount Myra Christian Church.

—H. S. Wilhite passed through St. Louis last week, after concluding an excellent meeting at Thayer, Kan. Brother Wilhite has been the instrument in over 1,000 conversions this year, and the testimony everywhere is that he is one of our best evangelists.

—It is good news that the C. W. B. M. officers expect that ground will be broken the last of this month for the Centennial Missionary Training School and Missionary headquarters building at Irvington, Ind.

—Edward B. Bagby, now pastor of the Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, Ohio, had the pleasure of again occupying his pulpit in the Ninth Street Church, Washington, D. C., of which he was pastor for more than fifteen years. He was warmly welcomed, and there were two confessions.

—J. W. Weddle, of Burkesville, Ky., had a narrow escape from being burned to death in a fire which destroyed the hotel where he was living, by being absent at the time of the explosion. The cause of the fire occurred in the room next to his own, and everything he possessed was burned.

—Herbert Yeuell and Arthur Wake will begin their meeting at Mount Pleasant, Ia., where L. A. Chapman ministers, on September 15. The church has secured a large Chautauqua tent, under which 1,200 people can be comfortably seated. This will be located three blocks from the public square.

TO BETHANY.

THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

Benignant "Mother of us all,"
Enshrined in fondest memory,
Thou hast the love of every heart;
May we in deed be true to thee!

May ever richer days be thine
As over thee the years shall roll;
Be thou a beacon light to us
Till we shall gain that longed-for goal:

When all God's people shall be one,
Beneath one standard of one Lord;
When all who hunger for His truth
Shall seek it in His written Word.

Proclaim thou still that creeds of men
But darken God's transparent light;
Turn every heart again to Him
Who only teacheth us aright.

Fair be the skies and glad the days
The coming years shall bring to thee;
May we, thy children, ever guard
Thy name and fame, fair Bethany!

Saint Louis.

—William L. E. Shane, box 102, Enid, Okla., will be very glad to have the names of churches in the state that are without pastors, and places where congregations can be built up to support ministers. It is hoped that supply work may be in this way provided for the students of the new Oklahoma University.

—It will be remembered that C. C. Chapman, of Fullerton, Cal., recently gave $5,000 to enable Dr. A. E. Layton, of the Foreign Society, to build a hospital in Nantungchow, China. It is found that an additional $1,000 is needed for this special purpose, and Brother Chapman cheerfully provides the required amount.

—W. S. Priest, of Columbus, O., writes us from Ellake, Mich., over on the other side of the state, where he says he has joined the "Ancient and Acceptable Order of Resters." Brother Priest should have joined this order several years ago. He has been a hard worker and has not taken sufficient care to guard his vital forces. He is planning to make his summer home at Pentwater after the present season.

—The meeting at Americus, Ga., held by Bernard P. Smith, secretary of the Georgia Christian Missionary Society, was a very good one, considering all the facts. The church was organized with people prominently connected with the business life of the city. Brother Smith writes us that the members did all that could be done in the way of advertising and other work, and that the success is largely due to them. But Brother Smith's preaching was a large factor.

Hot Springs Plans

Church building to cost $20,000. Hot Springs congregation will raise $5,000, borrow $5,000 from the Board of Church Extension, and appeal to the brotherhood for the remaining $10,000. Brother Z. A. Harris agrees to be one of fifty to give $100 each toward this latter $10,000 and nine others have joined. Surely there are forty more brethren or churches who appreciate the struggle and realize the need. Address Mrs. S. M. Howard, 311 Ouachita ave.

—The "Christian Courier," of Dallas, Tex., making note of the fact that George L. Bush's articles on "How to Have a Working Church" were appearing in The Christian-Evangelist, takes the opportunity to say: "Every subscriber to the 'Courier' should, if possible, take The Christian-Evangelist also. We regard that paper as an ally, and not a rival." We appreciate this kindly feeling, and trust that the "Christian Courier" may continue to grow in its service to the churches of Texas and the southwest.

—An official notice of the resignation of T. P. Haley, of the Linwood Avenue Church, at Kansas City, Mo., has reached us. Since Dr. Haley took charge of the First Church, about the year 1880, he has seen a dozen congregations of the Disciples of Christ well-established in Kansas City. The last nine years have been with the South Side Church, Linwood Boulevard, which for a number of years was a mission, started by young people from the First Church. One of these young people is now the newly elected pastor, Burris A. Jenkins, late President of Kentucky University. The congregation numbers nearly 600, and has an excellent basement, where services are held. Before many years, no doubt, a beautiful superstructure will be erected for the use of the people in the south central part of the city. Brother Jenkins will take up his new work some time this autumn.

SKIN PURIFICATION

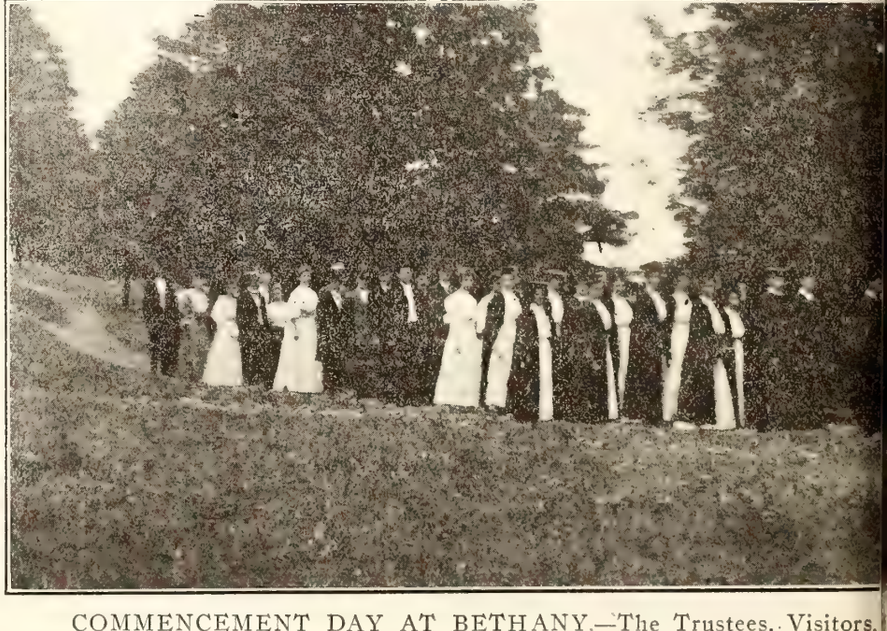
Effected by Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills when all Else Fails.

The agonizing itching and burning of the skin, as in eczema; the frightful scaling, as in psoriasis; the loss of hair and crusting of scalp, as in scalled head; the facial disfigurement, as in acne and ringworm; the awful suffering of infants, and anxiety of worn-out parents, as in tetter, or salt rheum—all demand a remedy of extraordinary virtues to successfully cope with them. That Cuticura Soap, Ointment, and Pills are such stands proven by unquestioned testimonials.

—F. E. Meigs, President of Union College, Nanking, China, is now in this country for a brief period, in the interest of a school in China for the children of missionaries and other foreigners. Brother Meigs is not expecting to canvass among the churches, but to bring before them this important matter with the hope of eliciting sympathy and support. His address will be care of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, Cincinnati, Ohio. He has just visited Christian College, Columbia, Mo., where his daughter, together with the daughter of Brother Ware, also of the China mission field, will remain to be educated.

—A banquet was held at Beatrice, Neb., recently in observance of the formal opening of the fine new church building of the Christian Church, which has just been erected at the corner of Seventh and Ella streets. About 400 tickets were sold, and there were 350 people present. Pastor J. E. Davis, as toast-master, extended a hearty welcome, and the mayor of the city congratulated the members upon the completion of their church home, and the city upon having such energetic citizens. Among other speakers on the program was C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, Mo., whose theme was "The Church's Mission to the Community." The words of one of the most prominent business men present—"It was one of the most enjoyable occasions I ever attended"—seemed to express the sentiment of all who were favored to attend.

—A note from Dr. J. M. Phillputt, on a personal matter, indicates that he and his wife are having a restful summer and already feeling the benefit of their visit to the coast of Maine. "We have," writes Brother Philputt, "a devotional service in our cottage every Sunday afternoon, and the place is crowded with cottagers and hotel guests. I have been invited to preach next Sunday at the Walpole Church, 135 years old, with square pews and a quaint gallery for 'Indians and slaves', and a Jonathan Edwards pulpit, twenty feet above the preacher. Preachers were looked up to in the old days!" Brother Philputt goes on to state that he is enjoying some hard work in the shape of grass cutting, sawing and splitting wood, and other necessary duties which have to be performed, for no sort of a laborer can be secured where he is.



—We regret to learn that Nelson G. Brown, who has for about three years been minister of our church at Galesburg, Ill., has just tendered his resignation, to take effect August 1. Brother Brown went to Galesburg from Marion, Ind., and during his last pastorate there have been added to the rolls of the church 277 names. His resignation has caused deep regret, and is due simply to the fact that for some months he has been in ill health, confined to his bed for the greater part of the time. It was thought possible that he might sufficiently recover to perform the active duties of the pastorate, but evidently he feels that there is no immediate prospect of his doing this at Galesburg. The local paper says that under his guidance the church has been prospering and all of the departments are in a flourishing condition. A committee was appointed by the Church Board to present resolutions to the congregation, Lord's day, when the matter was to be voted upon.

—We are permitted to make some extracts from a letter from the living link missionary of the Union Avenue Christian Church, W. J. Burner, who writes from Buenos Ayres in the Argentine Republic, under date of June 18, to Mrs. L. G. Bantz, of St. Louis. Brother Burner is impressed with the greatness of that field and has succeeded in mastering the language (Spanish) so he can preach in it. He says: "Our little work moves on smoothly. We have two sermons a week, Wednesday and Sunday nights. I teach a little class of children on Sunday afternoon, and sometimes on Friday night we have a little meeting to read the Bible. I have distributed 2,000 tracts and will put out 500 more in a few weeks. These are printed by our good Brother Wyle, over in the center of the city. He is a member of one of our churches in England, and it is quite a comfort to have a brother to talk to. I have made everything subservient to a knowledge of the language and now have no more trouble in preparing a sermon in Spanish than in English. For five days in the week I teach my little English school. I have about fifteen pupils and they certainly need such teaching as I am giving them." Sister Burner adds a postscript, several days later, in which she says: "Now we have some glorious news. A week ago Senor Andrada and his Senora told Mr. Burner they wanted to be baptized, as they were fully convinced that this religion was of God and that they should live according to it. Last night they made public confession and a Senor Lopez, who had been an active Christian for ten years or more, also asked for baptism. The three are native Argentines of the higher class workmen grade of life. Mr. Burner thinks there can be no doubt of their sincerity, so we are preparing for the baptism as soon as we can have a baptistry built. Senor Andrada has not missed a service since February 10. Before that he had never seen a Bible." It is now winter in that country and Sister Burner writes that the cold weather is refreshing.

Foreign Society Receipts.

The receipts from the Foreign Society during the month of July amounted to $30,148, a gain over the corresponding month last year of $5,121. The total receipts of the society for ten months of the current missionary year amounted to $223,380, a gain of $21,181. The churches, as churches, have given $98,090; a gain of $11,672. The Sunday-schools have given $68,227; a gain of $8,998. If the $300,000 is reached by September 30 the Foreign Society must receive $76,620 during August and September. This involves a gain over the corresponding months last year of a little more than $10,000. Victory is in sight.

Our First Converts in Argentine.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Three natives of the Argentine Republic have made the good confession and will be baptized before this reaches you. It is not much, perhaps, in the way of news, when compared with the great meetings with hundreds gathered in, but as the first message of the kind that ever came to you from this republic, or this continent, it is well worth the sending. I hope to report the organization of a church before long. Our Brother Edwin Wyle and wife, of London, England, have come here recently, so that the Disciples in this great city now number seven. Brother Wyle has started the first Christian Endeavor Society in Argentina, in the Scotch Presbyterian Church. W. J. Burner.

Church Extension Offering

WHICH ARE YOU GOING TO HAVE?

A lonely slab of stone telling that you are dead—OR

Will YOU help to build a monument filled with life and have it speak in your place?

IS DUE IN SEPTEMBER

ARE YOU READY
to enlist your congregation for Church Extension? Use the best Sunday in September for the offering according to your local conditions.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-EIGHT WORTHY MISSIONS
have asked for aid in erecting buildings since January 1st. Nothing less than ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS will answer these appeals. Inspiration enough, you say, to enlist any Church of Christ in the Annual Offering.

WRITE AT ONCE
Ordering literature and collection envelopes and tell the Board that you will take the Offering. Many other churches would apply for aid if a large collection gave them hope.

ANNUITY MONEY
The annuity feature of Church Extension is profitable to you and the Board. You receive 6 per cent and the Board builds churches with your money. Write for information to G. W. Muckley, Kansas City, Mo., and order supplies by postal card. They will be sent free.

A Great Centennial Offering.

to his residence. It may, therefore, save time for those who wish to make inquiry to correspond with that member of this committee living in the territory where the donor resides. However, with respect to all general matters, correspondence may be held with the chairman of this committee, whose address is Columbia, Mo.

7. It is desirable that each donor shall not only send a subscription at once, but shall become an active agent to induce others to send their subscriptions also. It is earnestly urged that every minister of the gospel shall put this matter before his congregation, so as to obtain, if possible, a subscription from every member of the church or churches where he ministers. It is believed that if the preachers will become active agents in this matter, they alone will be able to secure the whole amount within the appointed time.

We make this address to the brethren with the hope that every Disciple of Christ, who is made acquainted with its contents, will at once begin active work in behalf of the enterprise. Do not wait for a favorable opportunity. Make the opportunity, send your own subscription without delay, and at the same time induce as many others as you possibly can to send at least $1 for this great offering. We can not doubt that many will send $5, $10, $25, $50 and $100, while not a few will give larger sums. We are especially anxious to secure the $1 subscriptions, for the larger sums will take care of themselves. Besides, it is very desirable to make this offering practically universal among the Disciples of Christ. We would like to urge that all subscriptions shall be made as early as possible, for it often happens that even those who intend to give put the matter off until it is either forgotten or else for some reason, it is finally neglected entirely. We trust that no one will wait a single day after seeing this appeal. Send at once at least $1, and if possible a larger sum. One dollar given in time will be worth more than $2 if the matter is delayed, for every dollar given will stimulate others to give, as reports will be made from time to time concerning the progress of this great enterprise.

Trusting that this appeal, which is for a great and noble cause, will not be in vain, we anxiously await the decision of those to whom the appeal is made.

Campbell Period," "Bethany in Pendleton's Time," "Bethany and the Small "College," "Bethany and Biz," "Bethany and Missions," "Bethany and Patriotism," "Bethany and the Centennial," "Bethany and Crams," "Bethany and Biscuits," "Bethany's Daughters," "Bethany Today," "Bethany and the Future," and just "Bethany"—all handled by such orators as get together at a Bethany banquet, with the college songs and yells, and you have some idea of such a seance of three hours' duration. The lion of the day was W. T. Moore, who came back after thirty-seven years and shook his mane. We gave him LL. D., and he had it before, but said he was prouder of the honor from his alma mater than from any other source. So the toastmaster said: "We gave him his third degree because somebody else gave him the second, and he received the second because some school gave him the first, and some kind folks gave him the first because he didn't have any! You have heard the epitaph of Billy Jones:

"Here lie the bones of Billy Jones
Who's done with earthly woe.
He left the earth because from birth,
He never had no show.

"We will write this of Billy Moore:

"Here lies the core of Billy Moore,
A man of high degree—
He ran his race at a splendid pace,
For he was trained at Bethanie."

One action of the alumni was moved by Dr. Moore, and carried amid enthusiasm, and that to raise half a million endowment for the college by 1909. Such a venture is assured at once if the old graduates and students everywhere will seriously consider and take it up. By combining their gifts, we have a score of old Bethany boys whose success has been due to Bethany training, who could alone give that sum. Twenty shares of ten thousand each, and as many more of five thousand, and fifty more of one thousand, and the rest in hundreds and fifties and tens, ought not to be a heroic undertaking for Bethany's many sons and lovers. Yale and Harvard, and other great schools have received such aid from those they have blessed. Why not Bethany? It would be the crowning of our Centennial. Make our colleges mighty, and all our great interests will be powerful. It is time we removed the shame of our educational work. The greatest memorial that can be raised to the men who made this movement is the building up of our institutions of learning. Bethany has a world-wide claim. Let it be recognized.

"Seattle, 1907."

A Wonderful Christian Endeavor Convention. By Amos R. Wells, Editorial Secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

Another great Christian Endeavor convention is over, and it has been fully equal to its great predecessors.

To be sure, the numbers have sometimes been larger, as when in Boston 56,425 delegates were registered; but when we consider the remoteness of Seattle from Eastern centers of population, and that multitudes of the delegates had to travel 3,000 miles to reach the convention, the attendance was truly remarkable, and, in the mileage covered by the delegates, it has seldom been surpassed. The auditorium accommodated 12,000 and every evening thousands were turned away.

"Seattle, 1907," will be remembered for three things pre-eminently. It struck over and over again the notes of Brotherhood, of Good Citizenship, of Evangelism.

More and more every year Endeavorers are coming to feel the throb of the international and interdenominational fellowship that pulses through all their veins. Every year the bounds of the society are widened, not only in this country but in all the world. In India, China, Japan, the South Seas, in Turkey and Persia, in every European nation, and remotest mission fields, the society is growing strong.

During the last six months Dr. Clark has visited most of the republics of South America, and they have been annexed to the Christian Endeavor hosts.

In this country, too, the tide of growth and progress has not ebbed, but seems to be flowing more vigorously than ever.

Since the last report was made there has been a net gain of more than two thousand new societies. For several weeks past, more than one hundred new societies of Christian Endeavor have been recorded every week, at the central office in Boston. The local unions, too, are growing stronger and stronger in most parts of the country, and are settling to better work every year.

Dr. Clark proposed at the convention that the World's Union should be made increasingly a great bond of international and interdenominational brotherhood, binding together all races and evangelical creeds in one world-wide fellowship, while of course all remain loyal to their own churches. Immediate and vigorous steps will be taken to bring this about.

Christian citizenship, too, occupied the front of the platform in this great gathering. Addresses of great eloquence and power were given by scores of such men as Dr. Ira Landreth, Hon. O. W. Stewart, Dr. W. T. Wilson, Dr. Frank G. Smith, Dr. Edwin H. Delk and many others.

Vice President Fairbanks spent two days with the Endeavorers, and contributed much to the interest of the meeting. Before an audience of ten thousand people, crowding the great tent, he uttered ringing words for righteousness and purity in political life, and in favor of peace and good will among the nations.

His words were applauded to the echo, and his warm, genial, and democratic ways made him a great favorite among the Endeavorers.

On the day given up to the excursions, the vice president went with a large party of Endeavorers to the navy yard, and, in a brief address to the admiral in command and the officers of several great battleships, he emphasized again his hopes for universal peace, and that the navy of the United States might have only duties of courtesy to perform in the future.

Among the important new steps commenced was the formation of the Christian Endeavor Patriots' League, which was explained as a subsidiary organization within the ranks of Christian Endeavor, to study the problems of American citizenship, and to promote in every way the spirit of genuine patriotism in municipal, state and national life.

Mr. George W. Coleman, of Boston, will be the leader in this new field of Endeavor, and no one is better fitted for this task, because of his intense and intelligent interest in all sociological and national problems.

President Theodore Roosevelt is the first honorary member of this Christian Endeavor Patriots' League, and sent a message to the convention full of hearty approval of the plan.

One of the practical results of the convention along these lines was the sending of a cable message to the conference at The Hague, which read as follows: "North American Christian Endeavorers assembled in international convention, representing three millions of Americans, assure you of sympathy and prayer for your deliberations. Urge acceptance of Interparliamentary Union program."

Besides the vice president, the convention was honored by other distinguished men, Secretary Garfield, Governor Mead, United States Senator Piles, Congressmen Jones and Humphries, and two judges of the supreme court of Washington, all of whom had more or less part in the convention.

The vice president was made an honorary member of the society, and was presented by the local committee with a beautiful and valuable Christian Endeavor pin made of Klondike nuggets.

The evangelistic features of the convention were among the most important and impressive. Great evangelistic meetings filled the opera house every noon, under the guidance of Mr. William Phillips Hall, the noted "Business Man Evangelist," who, at this convention, was elected a member of the board of trustees of the United Society, representing the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Hall was ably assisted by Dr. James A. Francis, the national evangelist of the Baptist churches, who held the great audiences spellbound by his eloquence and graphic presentation of Scripture truth.

The convention Sunday was signalized by three great evangelistic meetings. Five thousand men flocked to the big tent, two thousand women crowded the First Presbyterian Church. More than a thousand boys and girls filled the Plymouth Church.

A hundred and twenty-five men professed conversion at this men's meeting alone, and many others at other evangelistic sessions.

Never before was such an evangelistic meeting as the one in the tent seen in Seattle, or indeed on the Pacific coast.

Not only were the United States and Canada largely represented at this convention, but Great Britain, Mexico, Alaska, Hawaii, Japan, China, India, Siam and a dozen other countries sent their delegates. Though this was really but a North American convention, it had many of the features of a world's convention.

The president of the European Christian Endeavor Union, Rev. John Pollock, representing half a million Endeavorers, came 6,000 miles to attend the convention, and one of the most noted speakers was Alexander Francis, of St. Petersburg, who believes that Christian Endeavor may have a large part to play in the regeneration of Russia.

Among the significant features of the convention was the inauguration of Mr. William Shaw as general treasurer, and Mr. Amos R. Wells as editorial secretary. These men have long been identified with the Christian Endeavor movement in various capacities. They were introduced to the vast audience by President Clark, and a tender and beautiful prayer of installation was offered by Dr. Floyd Tomkins, of the Holy Trinity Church of Philadelphia, a trustee of the United Society.

Mr. Shaw commended himself to the Endeavorers in his new capacity, as he often has before, in other ways, by his wise, witty and forceful speeches, and by his alert management of the business end of the convention.

Mr. Lathrop, a Baptist layman of Boston, genial and loved by all who know him, made his bow as treasurer, though he has long been the chief excursion manager of the society.

The intellectual plane of the convention was as high as the spiritual plane. Several college presidents, like President Faunce of Brown, President Straughn of West Lafayette College, President Penrose of Whitman College, and Professor Willett of Chicago, gave admirable address, and the general level of a convention was never higher. Almost all the denominational rallies crowded to the doors the many churches where they were held.

One hundred and eighty-three different meetings were scheduled in the program, and more than a hundred different speakers.

A choir of 800 voices led the singing and filled to overflowing the big tent at two renderings of the "Messiah."

The total aggregate attendance must have mounted into the hundred thousands before the meetings were over, and the solemn, yet joyful "Purpose Meetings," with which the convention closed its six-day sessions, showed in the earnestness of the resolutions made by young men and women from all the states of the Union that "Seattle, 1907," was not only big, but great.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Following Up a Sunday Meeting.

The church at Gibson City, Ill., has been through a union meeting under W. A. Sunday, the evangelist. There were 1,069 cards signed during the meeting. From these the M. E. church received the largest number; the Christian church stood second, with the United Brethren and the Presbyterian in order named. A large number expressed no preference.

Following that meeting we had J. H. Gilliland, of Bloomington, Ill., for one week, and more than 100 of those whose cards I had came into the church. And under the splendid teaching of Brother Gilliland 34 who had expressed no preference or had not come out in the union meeting, came to obey the Lord. We could not have found a better man to have followed up the work of Mr. Sunday than Brother Gilliland.

I am well pleased with the work of Mr. Sunday and could see but little that could be objected to either in methods or preaching.

J. R. Golden, minister.

Idaho.

At Middleton, a small town six miles from Caldwell and on the Boise valley electric line, a few brethren are determined to build a church house. There are but twelve and they are not organized and yet the architect has the plans about complete. Middleton enjoys a strong growth in the temporal affairs, town property is building rapidly and Bro. J. S. Clark thinks now is the time to build.——At Star the church prospers. Eight candidates there at present waiting to be baptized. Audiences keep up through the summer months. Boise valley, in region of Star, is the finest of soil and a very fine home climate. Old things are passing away. With the advent of electric car operation that will commence in a few weeks from Star, either Boise or Caldwell may be reached in a few minutes. Church influence is being felt and the cause is forging ahead.——Caldwell begins a big meeting the middle of August, when Sellers, of Terre Haute, Ind., comes for a month. He will be accompanied by St. John, the singer. The church is making arrangements for a great meeting. Pastor Shaw thinks we are going to beat the record. Caldwell has about 250 persons on its church book.——At Wilson the mission continues with about 25 workers. Preaching once in two weeks on Tuesday evenings.——Emmett church "got the blues" in the latter part of June. About a thousand dollars was the cause of it. They had to raise that much money and there were but a few brethren to raise it. The clouds cleared away greatly during the past few days and all feel better. Emmett needs help, otherwise they must quit. ——State Secretary Jones is going over the entire field during the summer months. He visits the churches, preaches a time or two and gets at conditions. Later he will hold meetings for churches and at places where churches may be organized. The state board counts on doing great things for South Idaho this time.——Weiser awaits the arrival of a leader. They are putting in their nickels right along and getting square with the world. Later they will commence a fall and winter campaign. At Meridian the work goes well. Brother Child has written a book that bids fair to go the rounds. He has resigned. Meridian soon is to become an "all time" church with a resident pastor.——Nampa is holding the field with thirty members, with preaching two Sundays each month. Nampa and Emmett will try to get a man between them for the coming year. If some good young man wants that place he ought to write now. Emmett is twenty-five miles from Nampa on a railroad, and both are good towns. The two places ought to pay $600 and a man can do good work.——Mountain home, with about twenty people, cries for a church. Glenn's Ferry is not much in evidence any more. Twin Falls is getting quiet again. A little later they ought to be able to make good reports. Rupert continues on the map with her church improving right along. Here they count on making a big growth.

The Meeting at Thayer, Kan.

The Wilhite-Tuckerman meeting closed here with the largest crowd of people ever assembled in this place for religious purposes. The meeting was a great success, but closed too soon to reap all the harvest of the seed that was sown. For a year the church had been planning for a great meeting, everything was done that would in any way minister to its success. The evangelists, too, did their part in the great work. Brother Wilhite has demonstrated that the people want the gospel in its purity to-day as never before; that they are ready to listen now as they always have to the man with a message, if his message is with authority and from on high. Brother Wilhite delivers such a message. Brother Tuckerman is a faithful second to him; not only is he a master at leading a chorus and a sweet solo singer, but is also a great personal worker and genial companion. Mrs. Wilhite's Bible drill was also an important part of the success of the meeting; her work was greatly appreciated by the church.

Besides the 103 who took their stand during the meeting, the way was opened for the building of a new house of worship which was greatly needed at this time. God has wonderfully blessed us.

Duncan Mac Farlane, minister.

Yeuell at McKinney, Texas.

Our meeting reached the expectation of every member of this large church. We had scarcely a week in which to prepare. The advertising was rushed and the meeting was really in progress before many knew that the evangelists were on the ground. The work was begun and carried through with a heroic and determined spirit. The church, which had not had a meeting for some time, was aroused as never before. It is agreed that it was the best meeting ever held in the city. A union meeting was in progress among the other churches at the start and the agitation of prohibition ran rampant at the close. The audience voted to consider no other evangelist than Brother Yeuell when they contemplate another meeting. Nearly $1,500 was raised during the meeting.

Starting a Church in Americus, Ga.

On June 24 a series of meetings was begun in Americus with Bernard P. Smith, of the West End Church, Atlanta, as leader. For three weeks each evening he preached. Excessive heat, rain and an unknown plea gave us little hope of large congregations, yet close attention and the kindest attitude of the various denominations characterized these services.

During the first week doctrinal sermons were preached, for our plea was never before presented in Americus. Following these Brother Smith gave a series of evangelistic sermons. With four additions and a reconsecration on the part of the few members, we count it a decided success. Our increase per cent is as large as was recently made in Athens in the great Harlow meeting. Rejoice with us.

After the service on July 12 we had a meeting to elect officers. Brother Smith gave us a heart-to-heart talk about our taking the work on, even in the absence of a preacher, and each man, though most of them had never before prayed in public, had a part.

Through the courtesy of the Universalists their church was used for these services.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. A Union Meeting in the South.

The great Baptist evangelist, George Cates, who confines himself strictly to union work, has recently held a meeting of eighteen days at Jackson, Miss. The meeting was heartily entered into by all Protestant bodies except the Episcopalians. The rector and arch-deacon of this body took part in at least two of the services. The evangelist did the preaching, then sent the personal workers out after "seekers," who were turned over to the preachers at the "altar." What they were taught there depended altogether upon the preacher who taught. I was sorry to see the "altar" method used, for I was sure it would encourage the too prevalent idea that salvation depends upon persuading God to save the sinner, rather than persuading the sinner to accept God's way of salvation. But the evangelist made it plain to me that there was to be none of the old "praying them through" method, but that each inquirer was to be taught to accept Christ in his appointed way. I could not see my way clear to let that plank (altar) keep me away from an anxious soul, and I saw no reason why I should not teach upon my knees the way of life, so I went earnestly to work.

One day the preacher demanded that no preacher let a candidate up from his knees till he was born again. I dropped out and after the service told the minister I could not testify that a man was born again until he was born of water and the Spirit, and that there was no water on that dry bench. He said, "I meant that a new life is begotten in him; do you accept that?" I knew that what he meant by being "born again" was true, but it was contrary to Scripture statement, and so readily accepted the other way of starting it. After that everything worked harmoniously, though on a few occasions the evangelist himself required the seekers to say that God for Christ's sake had pardoned their sins. The meeting aroused the whole city. The great department stores closed for the daylight and evening services, and little else was talked about on the streets. At the evening and Sunday services there were usually from 2,500 to 3,500 present, and sometimes many were turned away.

All the churches were aroused to more consecrated work, and all were brought closer together in the bonds of love. Of course this was not "unity," but I believe we can not have unity until we get to understand and love one another better. This meeting helped in that. Since the meeting closed we are going from church to church having a union soul-saving service every Friday night. I feel that these meetings have opened a wider door than ever to reach the people with that plea that comes from God that all his should be one.

As I look back I do not regret having got down on my knees at an anxious seat to teach sinners the way of life. I was not responsible for what others taught, but I hesitated not to teach that our prayers and their faith would amount to naught unless their surrender to God was made complete by obedience to his will. Did I do what God would have had me do?

Since last report we have had 41 additions at the First Church, Jackson, and 9 at a meeting of a few days at Lake, Miss., making even 50 since reporting. The record for five Sundays is as follows—9, 5, 9, 12, 10. Perhaps half a dozen of these were reached at the Cates union meetings. The rest have come at regular services through great work and prayer on the part of the church. God gave the increase, but we have planted and tilled the best we could. Many more will follow, and our Sunday services have been like a continuous "protracted" meeting for months. Thirty-four of these not previously reported have been by confession and baptism, the others by letter and statement. In all we have had 68 since March. We are getting ready for a meeting to be held by E. E. Violett next April.

The Awakening at Salem, Mo.

The total number of additions in our meeting was 136—by confession and baptism 96, by letter and statement and from other religious societies, 40. A great work has been done here by J. V. Coombs and Miss Lucile May Park. Brother Coombs believes that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation and goes forth asking men and women to come to Christ on its terms; hence his success. Miss Park puts her soul in the work and sings the gospel in such a way that it leaves lasting impressions upon the hearers. One great thing was the number of young men and fathers that came to Christ. Never in the history of Salem has there been such an awakening as this. A great harvest will be reaped in future years as a result of the seed sown. One man living twenty miles south of Salem came to town, was invited by a friend to come to church; he came, obeyed the gospel and returned home rejoicing.

W. T. Walker, pastor.

By Charles Blanchard.

Two Great Questions.

Topic August 14, Acts 22:3-10.

This story of the conversion of the man called Saul of Tarsus, known to-day around the world as Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles, has a fascination about it. Three times in the Acts it is told and its effect upon the history has been beyond the imagination of historians to record. Apart from the personal influence of Paul during his life, which was very wonderful, and the far greater influence of his writings since his death, the effects of the story of his conversion have contributed no little to the spread of the Gospel. Doubtless the once current theory of conversion as a miracle, to be attested by signs and wonders, similar to those that accompanied the conversion and call of Paul, has wrought confusion in the religious world. Still this wonderful story has been a mighty factor in moving and moulding men and movements. The conversion of Saul of Tarsus is the greatest fact in history, next to the crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus Christ. No other fact has so marvelously changed and directed the whole course of human history. It has been urged, and with much force, that the conversion of Saul of Tarsus is the most convincing proof of the divine origin of the religion of Jesus of Nazareth. The appearance of the Lord unto Saul by the way, as he himself repeatedly affirms, is the only rational way of accounting for the remarkable conversion and radical change that took place in this man's life. "Last of all he appeared unto me also," is a part of Paul's sublime argument for the resurrection of the dead, in the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians. And really there is no way of accounting for the conversion and the career of the great apostle to the Gentiles on any other ground than that he had seen the Lord, as he affirms, with such flaming zeal and such devotion as could have been begotten only by such heavenly visions as flashed upon him on the way to Damascus and again and again as the Lord stood by him.

There are three questions in this story of the Lord's appearance unto Saul by the way which deserve consideration. "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" It was this that startled him out of his self-seeking and shot conviction through his conceit. He must have instantly anticipated the answer to his own question, "Who art thou, Lord?" It was this sudden awakening of realization, flashing into his very soul with the announcement, "I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest." that moved him to ask that other question, which meant the revolution of his whole life, "What shall I do, Lord?"

In these two questions, "Who atr thou?" and "What wilt thou have me to do?" we have the process of every genuine conversion. Every soul must somehow be brought face to face with Jesus of Nazareth. With Saul it was a dramatic realization. Beyond all explanation it was a personal manifestation of the Master to one who was become his servant and an apostle. Indeed it was for this very purpose that Christ appeared unto him, as Ananias declared: "The God of our fathers hath chosen thee that thou shouldst know his will and see that Just One, and shouldst hear the voice of his mouth; for thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard."

The recognition of Jesus as Christ and Lord is the beginning of every true conversion. And out of this conviction of the power of Christ to save and the right of Christ to reign in us and over us, must flow the stream of spiritual influences which quickens and transforms and directs all the faculties and forces of life. It is natural for the soul which has been startled out of sin and self-assurance and self-seeking, as Saul was, to cry out from the depths and the darkness, "Who art thou, Lord?" And with the overwhelming that comes from the conviction that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God and our Saviour, follows naturally the inquiry, "What shall I do, Lord?" And there will be no hesitation in the doing of what the Lord commands. To quibble is to reveal the smallness of our faith and the sad lack of deep sincerity of soul, which can result only in a half-hearted surrender of the life to his service. The secret of Paul's life was complete surrender to Christ as Lord.

The Bible School at Work

Conducted by J. H. HARDIN,
State Bible School Superintendent of Missouri, 311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

How to Hold the Boys.—In the institutes this is the question of all others. Teachers ask it, ministers ask it, mothers ask it—yes, with anxious faces and tearful eyes, and often bearing indications of breaking hearts the mothers plead to know how to hold the boys under the good influences of the home the Bible and the Bible school. And now I ask the question and request the readers of The Christian-Evangelist to answer out of their best judgment and experience. There must be some solution of this burning question. The large number of people who read this paper can, without question, say something helpful on the subject. Such communications as seem to promise help will be published. Let us reason together. Let us face the trouble. Let us find remedies and apply them. Send answers to the address above. How can we hold the boys in the Bible school? Speak up. Boys are worth holding. How did you hold yours or some body's else? Or how did you lose them? What held you or prevented you from being held?

Adult Bible Classes.—Letters have been recently sent to all the county officers in Missouri calling attention to this new department. Replies to these show much interest on the subject. Nearly all of those who write to this office call for leaflets for circulation. Sow the state knee deep in literature, was Neal Dow's answer as to how to dry up the liquor traffic. It is the method of preparation we must use in the new methods of Bible school work. The man who goes into a community has but one tongue, however, well he may use it; but place in his hands plenty of good literature for wise distribution and he goes with many tongues and continues to use them when many miles away or even after he is dead.

The adult Bible class movement has come to stay, and it is destined to revolutionize our work in a reasonable time. Mark this statement and govern yourself accordingly.

A Message from Afar.—At the Odessa district convention we had the pleasur of meeting once more and of hearing Bro. C. S. Weaver, recently home on furlough from Osaka, Japan, where for seven years he has been in the employ of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. My delight will be understood when I state that Brother Weaver was one of our students in Eureka college during my presidency there. I feel a peculiar interest in the "boys" and the "girls" wherever I meet them, but an added tenderness fills my heart for those who have gone to the far away countries for Christ's sake and the gospel's. Brother Weaver and Sister "Gussie," his wife, came back with a rich experience and the churches will keep them busy during their furlough imparting the riches to them which the Lord has stored up in these two hearts and lives. At Odessa the people listened to Brother Weaver with rapt attention, and were ready to hear three or four times as long. He is making his home at Pontiac, Ill., during his stay in America.

The Bible School and Your Winter Revival.—Is your congregation expecting to hold a meeting the coming winter. If so, you have by this time secured your evangelist and your singer, and perhaps arranged for the erection of a tabernacle, etc. But how about material for conversions? Where are these to come from? Well, an average of 83 per cent of the conversions are coming from the Bible schools. If you are going to convert a large number of people, the main thing for you to do is to double or quadruple the attendance on your Bible school before the meeting starts. See?

The Day of Atonement.—Lev. 16:5-22.

Memory verse, 2.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Wherefore he is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him.—Heb. 7:25.

Several chapters of the book of Leviticus immediately preceding that in which the lesson is found are devoted to the laws and regulations concerning ceremonial cleanness and uncleanness. This distinction between things clean and things unclean played a very large part in Hebrew life and thought. While in later times its abuse and overemphasis led to a substitution of the idea of ceremonial purity for moral purity, the distinction between clean and unclean had two great values. In the first place many of the regulations in the law of ceremonial cleanness were in the interest of health and hygiene. Only in recent years, with the advance of sanitary science, have we learned to appreciate the worldly wisdom (even if it were no more) of many of these laws. Doubtless the observance of these laws was one reason for that tremendous physical vitality which has always characterized the Jewish race and their comparative freedom from serious epidemics. During some of the great plagues in the Middle Ages, the Jews suffered so much less than the Christians that the latter believed that the Jews had caused the plagues by witchcraft.

An even more significant value, and doubtless the prime purpose of the laws of ceremonial purity, was that they symbolized the moral purity and separateness which were required of the people of God. In order that the moral and religious life might be brought under complete regulation, it was deemed necessary that laws should be enacted which, governing many of the details of life which we would consider morally indifferent, would serve as a constant and daily reminder to the people that they were a peculiar people, set apart from their heathen neighbors and under special obligations to purity.

The religion of Israel differed fundamentally from the religions of their neighbors and contemporaries in the emphasis which it placed upon the moral character of God and the moral requirements of man. Ceremonial cleanness was not intended to be a substitute for this, but a symbol of it.

While there were provisions for removing the ban of ceremonial uncleanness at any time when it might, through accident or otherwise be incurred, there was a special provision for a great purification once a year. This had reference in part to this ceremonial and technical uncleanness, but still more to the uncleanness produced by actual sin. There is no possibility of moral or spiritual growth without a lively sense of sin. An exaggerated statement of this is contained in the saying that "we are saved by our sins" as much as from them. The sin which is repented of and put away, and which, by showing the sinner his own weakness and dependence upon divine grace, becomes in some sense a means of grace. The Day of Atonement and the elaborate ritual which the high priest was to perform on that day served to quicken and keep alive the national consciousness of sin, and this in turn served as a reminder of the essential character of God as a righteous God and one who demanded righteousness of his people, and also of that human weakness and frailty which should keep the best of men humble and send them constantly to the throne of grace for new supplies of strength to resist sin.

The atonement was to be made by sacrifice. In modern thought, the idea of vicarious sacrifice and blood atonement plays a much smaller part than it formerly did. Perhaps we can not say exactly how much of the idea represents eternal truth and how much of it the survival of primitive religious ideas which are found in the cults of all primitive peoples. Much of it doubtless comes under the latter head. Some of it undoubtedly belongs to the former. That man is powerless to save himself; that our sins are often greater than we are; that we can be redeemed from our sins and their evil consequences only by the helping hand of one who is himself free from the curse and burden which drags us down; that the bringing of this uplift and redemption imposes suffering and sacrifice upon him who performs it—these are facts to which both Scripture and experience bring ample testimony.

The summer season finds Christian Endeavorers not only resting under the trees but also by the seaside. There were lessons from the trees last week. This week we are to learn a lesson from the sea as James teaches it to us.

We are to desire to become like a tree planted by the rivers of waters. But the sea, with waves driven by the wind and tossed, we are to strive not to become such as that.

How sensitive the sea is to every wind that blows! It stretches before you as unruffled as a mirror and your ship moves with no perceptible motion save the thrill of the great engine which drives it. Alongside is the track of the vessel that passed hours before like some one ha dleft a track in a dewy meadow on a quiet morning.

When next you turn to look ripples have ruffled its face and soon under the steady breeze tumbling billows and breaking waves dispute your way. The sea does not withstand the wind.

James would compare our temptations, or rather trials, to the wind that blows over the quiet expanse of our lives. To how many and from what quarters are we exposed. From what unexpected ways do they come. With how sudden surprise do they fall upon us. How verily do they bear our quiet lives into tempest.

Shall we be alarmed as we would be in our inexperience upon a storm-tossed sea? No, rather rejoice, James calls to us. Not for the storm, but for the opportunity it gives us to develop strengt hand virtue, which are impossible to undisturbed and placid lives.

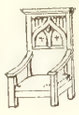
He intimates that out of such experiences alone comes the one quality which makes us "perfect and entire, wanting nothing": that perfecting quality is patience.

How apt this lesson for us young Endeavorers. Our boats are not far out of the home harbor in the direction of the great port. We are affrighted at the unaccustomed storms, and are torn from our moorings where in alarm we had attempted to anchor and are driven out of our course. Here is the calming counsel of an experienced mariner: "be not afraid," count it all joy; when you weather the storms you will have gained the one thing to be desired above all others.

What are we to do when driven by storms of trial? Give way and drift? No, but remember this, it is a trial of our faith, and strong faith will hold us true to our course in spite of every wind that blows.

How can we have strong faith? "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not: and it shall be given him." We need neither anchor nor harbor, but wisdom, and God gives that.

So when winds of trial beat upon us we are to pray. We are to cry out to him in the storm as did the disciples in the little boat on Gennesaret. He will hear us for he has promised to help us.



Where shall we expect this answer? Not in a special revelation, not in a vague spiritual impression, but in the Bible where he has spoken to us. Nor are we to expect that in answer to prayer he will make the book fall open to the right chapter or put our finger for us on the right verse. The one who has his delight in the Word and meditates upon it day and night, who has hid the word in his heart, in whom the word dwells richly—to such a one the Spirit will bring to remembrance the word that is written for the special need.

What an opportunity is offered us in the teaching of this lesson; to be "perfect and entire, wanting nothing," to have wisdom of God for the asking, to have joy in trials, to have steadfastness in our course, to arrive without loss into the haven beyond.

To Slumberland.

There are fast trains without number to the land of Happy Slumber,
And swiftly through the twilight do they fly;
But the slow accommodation, one that stops at every station,
Is the one we like the best, my dear and I.

There's a wait about a minute, for a solo by Miss Linnet,
Or a concert by the toads amid the leaves;
Or we lean far out to follow some belated homing swallow,
Speeding swiftly to its nest beneath the eaves.

Thus at last, with loving parlance, draw we near the Bridge of Silence,
And the Moonman swings his lantern round the bend.
Then we slower go and slower, and a little head drops lower,
For the bridge once crossed, we've reached our journey's end.

There are fast trains without number to the land of Happy Slumber,
And swiftly through the twilight do they fly;
But the slow accommodation, one that stops at every station,
Is the one that we like best, my dear and I.

Chapter VII. The Tables Turned.

President Brown was breathing strangely, but the doctor's experienced eye saw that it was because he was regaining consciousness, as the ether, which had been given for the operation, worked off. He also saw that the effects of the sublimate, given by the young doctor for an emetic, was not spreading, but rather receding.

He administered a cooling lotion and changed his head rests so as to make it easier for him to breathe, and relieved him from unnecessary pressure of clothing; for his temperature was above normal. Now taking a glass of water in one hand and pressing it to his lips, he lifted him partially up and requested him to drink. The patient obeyed readily, for he seemed desperately choked with thirst. Now opening his eyes with bewildered look, he said:

"O, is that you, doctor! And you, Nell! We had better get out of here; this is no place for us."

"You are not in the saloon, Edward; we are here safe in the hospital, and you shall be cared for, dear."

"O, yes, I see that young Schlitz did hit me with the glass he threw," putting his hand up to the spot.

"Yes, president, he hit you a hard blow, and that wasn't the hardest of it; but you must not do any thinking now, just let me turn you over. Now take this powder and sleep a while longer, and you will feel better," said the doctor.

"But what is the matter with my mouth and throat? They feel terribly raw."

"Take this," said the doctor, as he pressed a potion to his mouth.

"Yes, that relieves it," and soon he was asleep.

Dr. Reid wrote corrections of the articles that had appeared in the "Times," and laid particular stress upon the fact that the president had never touched a glass of liquor in his life. He also wrote a careful, consistent article to appear in the morning paper. In this he did not implicate any one in particular, but simply said that it was a mistake about the president being in a row; but that he was hit by some one in the crowd, while he was withdrawing from a conversation with the proprietor.

He also corrected the statement that Mrs. Eddy had been sent for by special train; or that the ladies, Mrs. Gordon and the trained nurse, were Christian Scientists.

He gave a brief resume of the case and his chapel talk, saying as he closed, that if he and the president were hypnotized, then that was a condition which all should seek, for it was in full accord with gospel teaching.

His article was accepted graciously by the editor, and the doctor with many others looked for it in the Sunday issue, but no trace of it or any correction, apology or palliation of the error appeared. But the paper was full of long harangues against Eddyism, Dowieism, Hypnotism and Schlatterism, with some most startling statements of the danger with which such holdings were attended.

A case was given in which a man with frozen feet had been prayed over by Dowieites, instead of being treated properly, and it was affirmed that he suffered intense agony and finally died with gangrene.

A case of hypnotism was attested, in which a doctor of divinity was put under the spell and twenty-four hours later he ran amuck of some harmless saloon men, whom he opened up on with a six-shooter, doing two of them to death and landing himself in the insane asylum.

A slight notice was found in an obscure corner of the paper, saying that Dr. Reid's article had been crowded out, owing to the pressure of important matter. Everybody bought the Sunday morning paper, as the doctor knew they would, expecting to see a correction of the previous articles; for many yet believed that there must be a mistake.

Dr. Tipler's church was crowded to the altar that morning to hear what he would have to say about the matter. He prayed long and eloquently about the president being stricken with a loving Father's chastening hand; thanked the Lord for the medical skill, in the person of the young doctor that had so speedily been sent to his relief; he praised the press and its efficient staff in the land, and ended up with some advice to the Lord about the evils of the day; strongly hinting that it might be well to discourage those who should tempt him by presumptious practices and prayers.

His sermon was along the line of mental suggestion, mind healing and hypnotism. He gave some good thoughts along the latest investigations in these things, and soon branched off into a strong contradiction of the possibility of real sickness in which there was either functional derangement or organic disease, being healed by prayer. Although he admitted in nervousness and hyperchondria, where it was simply a matter of imagination, that a contradiction of the existence of sickness might work the desired change.

Dr. Jannes was in his place that morning, and rubbed his hands graciously as the sermon closed, saying to one of the trustees, who had spent Sunday in the city, and who came in to hear the popular preacher: "That was the greatest sermon ever preached in this pulpit." But few seemed to notice Dr. Reid that morning. Judge Taylor was the only one who came across the church to greet him, and to say: "Doc, if Jesus Christ should have come to church this morning, I doubt if they'd know him either."

As they walked away the Judge expressed his cordial disapproval of the sermon, saying: "What is prayer for anyhow? What is the use of praying to the Almighty? It is either all he has given it for, or it is useless. I am bound to be consistent, Doc. I am going to be heard along this line yet."

The students had seen articles in the "Times," and many were quick to catch up the counter cry, and what seemed to them a huge joke on the president, since he had been quite severe with a certain class, who were refractory, and they were none too friendly toward him. Then only about half of the student body had felt a real change toward Gordon, but had gone with the crowd and the popular excitement, when the sudden turn in affairs came, and they were just as ready to be blown in another direction when a popular gust came from that quarter.

The editor of the "Times" was a favorite with the sporting element anyhow, and the society class all pulled in an opposite direction from the president's sentiments and the religiously disposed in the college. So it only needed a leader and a statement of an opposite view to

This is not a virulent and unintelligent attack. There have already been too many of these. The author shows where Christian Science fails as a religion.

Since it professes to stand on the Bible he shows how it antagonizes the Bible and how the Bible antagonizes it.

The concluding chapter contains an antidote for error and teaches what the Church may learn from Christian Science.

that expressed in the chapel, to get a large following in a short time.

Then a large number of the most influential, who had taken sides with the truth, had followed James off and remained away over Sunday. Also the president's fall to drunkenness and a street brawl, ending in being locked up as a common drunk, had a terrible effect upon these as they returned and heard the exaggerated reports and read the paper.

Then finding so many of their fellows positively set against the truth and the president, they either held their peace or fell in with the prevailing sentiment, without investigating. Yet there were a faithful few, who after some days found each other out and held together.

As the president was not at his post for duty, it was thought best to omit chapel on Monday; and whether by concerted action or chance, it is not known, but the chapel exercises were omitted for four days; thus there was no opportunity for an explanation of the case as it stood, and so the conditions in favor of error multiplied.

Dr. Reid stayed with the president almost all night and day, until the critical time was passed, and he was able to be moved to his own home, so he did not know of the prevailing sentiment at the college. Then, as all the professors were dependent upon the action of the trustees, for their vacation, they were reticent; much more so, since Professor Haberton had seen each one privately and warned them to be so. Then, examinations being on the last three days, all were more than busy anyhow.

The meeting of the board of trustees, came and President Brown was not able to see them, nor to take up any business matters whatever, owing to dangerous abscess in his head; also stomach and kidney affection, arising from the action of the sublimate given him on the night of the imprisonment.

The board was about all of the fixed opinion, that a new head to the institution was an imperative necessity; owing to public scandals that had not been denied, and yet had gained such wide circulation. The same was held for Dr. Reid; but the rest of the officers and professors, were continued as before, and Jannes was given Dr. Reid's position.

Doctor Reid asked the privilege of making a statement before the board, but they had so much business to perform before the train, which several wished to return on, that they could not entertain his proposition. He however, reduced his statement to writing and sent it in. In this he gave a clear, truthful vindication of the president's actions, denying the newspaper articles and explaining how he got hurt, and how they had tried to have statements published in the paper, but to no avail.

Whether the statement was read or not, it made no difference, the action was a foregone conclusion before the board met. The meeting adjourned without even a resolution of sympathy or commendation of the president's good work, during his many years of service in building up the institution.

A committee had been appointed to secure another president, and also it was made the duty of Doctors Jannes and Jambres to acquaint the president with his deposition, and to tell Doctor Reid of his fate, also.

Doctor Reid saw them coming to the Brown residence, and knowing their mission, met them at the outer hall, saying: "Mr. Brown is unable to see you. If you have succeeded in your diabolical work so far with closed doors, you can complete it thus." So saying, he shut the door in their faces and drew the bolt.

They went to the "Times" office, and with the assistance of the editor, wrote up the proceedings of the Board, and also their mission to the Brown residence, and their rebuff, at the hands of Doctor Reid.

In this they called for an investigation of the treatment which Mr. Brown was receiving from Doctor Reid, saying that he was in dangerous hands, as the doctor had shown strong tendencies to insanity, since his hypnotic spell, and that he was trying to practice mind-healing upon the patient.

The article aroused public indignation, as it was intended to do, and the Board of Health, of which that precious pair were members, met and called for a legal investigation of the matter.

The young doctor and the two sorcerers were, of course, appointed a committee to make the investigation, and they began by having Dr. Reid arrested on charges of malpractice and insanity. The case came up before a justice of the peace, who was a tool of the whisky ring, and who took his beer regularly at Schlitz' home saloon.

There is a world of hope in the newborn day
When the past is dead, and the amber way
Reaches out to the earnest glance—

Hope flings her banner our joy to enhance—

Around the Gulf to Mexico.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

AROUND THE GULF.

Crossing the Border.

By 6 p. m. we were at the other San Antonio station—the one that isn't picturesque or clean—and soon after were on the special that leaves twice a week for Mexico City. It stops at only a few points by the way, and pulls nothing but Pullmans. While you are denied the satisfaction of thinking of fore-passengers cramped in chairs or doubled up on hot plush benches, while you rest at ease between snowy sheets, still it is not without its allurement to reflect that nobody is allowed on this special who hasn't money for a berth. You are the equal of any man on this train, and superior to all who are traveling on the Limited. This is plutocratic democracy.

While the other magnates were seated in the gilded dining-car, eating quail and watermelon, we were crouching in the obscurest nook we could find, discussing our lunch of pickle, bologna and crackers. It was the first bologna we had tried for years, and we found it as disappointing as we had anticipated. When I was a boy, it used to be made differently. In these times it is always damp and soggy and seems to need cooking. You used to feel independent when starting out fishing, if you had some bologna sausage in one pocket and worms in the other. But bologna has changed as much as conductors. What are conductors for, I wonder? When you travel on the Limited (as I did returning home), it is the Train Auditor that examines and punches your ticket; and on the Pullman it is the Pullman Conductor and not The Conductor that has you in charge. Sometimes you see The Conductor flitting about, with the porters following him to see that he doesn't get lost; but he never does anything while you are looking. Perhaps he is just a tradition handed down, like the sure-enough bologna that is now no more.

To piece out our lunch and make us feel that we were eating on the Pullman as pulled-men ought to eat, Morton had purchased at San Antonio one of those glass cups filled with dried beef that defy all known methods of opening. When I saw Morton get out his knife to loosen the gilt top I knew trouble was coming, because he did it with such a calm and experienced air, as if to say, "I have traveled before." We passed through Devine county and had about traversed Frio county, when Morton put his knife in his pocket with a light in his eye; then he smashed the end of the glass against the iron leg of the bench. This act was witnessed by a kind-faced man, a philanthropist, I am sure; he watched to see what would happen next; and when Morton began to eat the beef, he came over and sought to dissuade him. "I wouldn't eat anything that has broken glass in it, for an entire county," he said. I had been reaching for some beef myself, but I drew back intimidated. "Well, I would," says Morton, grinding away at the beef. He got a piece of glass between his teeth, but he just let it crunch, while he watched his would-be benefactor out of the tail of his eye. The broad-faced traveler went to the other end of the car that he might not witness this suicidal act; but he couldn't stay there. Presently he was hovering over us again. "It is a terrible thing," says he; "sometimes you eat glass and don't know you are injured till years afterwards. I wouldn't eat that stuff for this state of Texas." Morton took some more beef and offered it to Jebly; but Jebly wasn't game. Morton picked the glass from his teeth and took a fresh start. The man who would have done good went into another car. "Old pessimist!" muttered Morton; "he'd like to have seen me keel over in a paroxysm!" It is thus philanthropists are rewarded.

We tried riding on the end of the observation car, but the dust in that part of Texas isn't to be sneezed at, so we quickly retreated. We should have reached the Rio Grande, that natural division between America and Mexico, at half past eight, but the train was so late, the porter decided to make up our beds. He said, possibly the custom house officers wouldn't drag us out of the berths, but would let the train lay over till morning. It was eleven at night when the train was held up at Laredo, or rather New Laredo, which is on the Mexican side of the river. The American Laredo waits till you come back from Mexico, and it assesses what you have left after the Mexican Laredo has drained you with duties. The Mexican officer came on board, accompanied by his American assistant. The assistant did all the talking and all the work, while the Mexican looked on and thought to himself in Spanish. The American was very kind and obliging. He made no one get up unless owning a trunk in the baggage car; and none of us carried a trunk. Morton should have carried one, but he had been so busy looking for an imaginary kind of suspender, that he had forgotten to check his baggage in Texarkana. The officer looked through our grips as we lay in bed, and cast the most fleeting glance into my bag, as if he felt a delicacy in witnessing such a scanty stock of luxuries. But it was different when the Mexicans discovered Jebly's tricycle on board. They had never seen a vehicle of that sort, and in fact it is a curiosity to most Americans. It bewildered the Mexicans. They took it off the train, turned it upside down, weighed it, tried to learn how the thing was guided, and put a duty on it of $16.75, Mex. We argued that to tax Jebly for his tricycle would be like laying duty on a man's wooden leg, or a pair of crutches. The government didn't want argument, it wanted money; and as it had no change,—I am told it doesn't keep change,—we were forced to pay over $17 for that tricycle. I imagine Jebly will always think more of it, after that. I was told that an American lady, in order to have her husband's corpse brought over the line to be buried in his native land, was compelled to pay the government officials $500 in duty and conciliation, but I do not think it could have been quite so much. The Mexican government wants energetic, live Americans to stay there, but it can have no use for dead ones.

We settled back to sleep after we had said all we could think of about having to pay on that tricycle; and it was in the dead of night when we stopped at Monterey. I knew we were at Monterey, because it is marked on the map. Jasper T. Moses has written a little book describing it. You should send for it. The city is only 300 feet higher than Bentonville, on the Ozarks. Its mean temperature for June is given at about 79 degrees, but its meanest temperature—that's the one it is generally affected with—is considerably higher than that in the shadiest corner of the plaza. The Christian church has a very successful mission there, and in its interest Mr. Westrup publishes "La Via de Paz," a weekly, partly in Spanish, partly in English. It is a valuable little paper, and all it clears goes to our mission. The work is under the C. W. B. M. I was well acquainted with Mr. Alderman, who was sent there five years ago. He and I taught in the same college at Albany, Mo., until the time of his departure for Mexico. He died there, but his family survives to carry on the missionary work. He was a man of untiring energy, gifted with the art of imparting instruction to the most unwilling pupil, and effectively illustrating the doctrines he held, with the example of his pure life.

After you cross the Rio Grande, the railroad is on the upgrade; and the steepest part is from Monterey to Saltillo. This run of about four hours rises from an elevation of 1,624 feet to 5,337 feet. I had never been higher than the Ozarks, and I didn't know we were to be so suddenly lifted, as it were, in midair. Running up nearly 4,000 feet at 1,000 feet per hour, was something like going up in a balloon. But I wasn't thinking of that or anything else, because I was asleep. But suddenly I woke up, and was surprised to find myself breathing two gasps to an ordinary swallow. I lay there a few minutes, wondering at myself, as I panted faster and faster; but there was no pain, no giddiness, and after the oppressively hot day, it even felt good. At first I didn't think about the altitude; and when I did, I wondered what would happen next. But nothing happened, for I went to sleep again, and although I kept going higher and higher after reaching Saltillo, I felt no other effects of my rise in life.

Saltillo, which you will please pronounce Salt-tee-yah, came to hand at seven a. m., March 28th, and the train waited for the early risers to get off for breakfast. Here for the first time I saw a station platform in Mexico thronged with Mexicans, and heard a confusion of voices crossing Spanish rapiers. It was utterly unlike any typical American depot scene. There were no negroes, of course, and nobody chewing tobacco, and nobody laughing, and nobody calling people loudly by their first names. The men stood where they had happened to stop, with a general air of never expecting to move from the particular spot, and the women sat upon the floor. The old women were very old, and the young women very young, but the men did not appear particularly affected by age, one way or another. There was one girl in red, dark, of course, and black-eyed, with a serious face,—but all their faces were serious,—and wondering, and full of Indian thoughts. She came near being pretty. I think, perhaps, she was pretty; if so, I saw two pretty Mexican young women during my five days' travels in Mexico. The crowd on this platform was no wise different from those at other cities, save for this young girl of about fifteen. She was apparently under the protection of a heavy ragged-whiskered man, who, like the majority of the men, was dressed in white cotton trousers,—we do not call that garment trousers in the States, but there we never wear them on the outside—and a white cotton shirt; and he had a long red-and-blue blanket wound about his waist and one shoulder, which would furnish him a bed whenever he got sleepy. He wore his shirt in the national style, just the reverse of the American manner; that is, all of it was exposed to the open, so that it formed a streamer or flag at his rear when the wind struck him. The Mexicans seem proud of the extremities of their shirts, and would no sooner think of tucking them in than of going without a beehive hat. These hats are so enormous that they quite throw the wearer in the shade. The brims project beyond the shoulder-blades like exaggerated eaves, and when four or five Mexicans stand close together the grass stops growing in that place before they move on to let in the sunlight. These hats rise to a peak about a foot above the hair, and are valuable to carry things in. I saw a Mexican take off his hat on one occasion and drag out of it the family pet dog, which his wife received with stoic calm. It has been said that happiness is the art of being surprised; if so, I fear these natives have lost the art. Nothing seems to surprise them. When you refuse the beggars alms, they seem to think you have done the proper thing, and when you give them "centavos" (which they call "centavvys") they show no emotion. The venders, too,—those men and women who rise out of the ground at the car window whenever the train stops,—they hold up their trays and cry their wares, but have an air of not expecting you to buy. About half the women are barefooted, but somehow they have missed the Maud Muller effect. The men wear sandals,—a flat sole strapped over their bare toes and instep. Of course, in all large groups, you will see men and women in shoes, and while you never see a woman with a hat or bonnet, you sometimes see a man with a hat like the hats at home. The girl in red, of whom I spoke, watched our train with absorbed gravity which seemed to discompose the burly man with the red-and-blue blanket. He took her by the arm and led her away to the dining-room door, but from there she stared through the drifting crowd at the St. Louis Special. At last he took her on the other side of the station. He must have been jealous of the interest our magnificence excited. Doubtless he was her husband; for these Mexican ladies marry at twelve. Saltillo is the capital of Coahuila, and has a population of 25,000. That reminds me that a young man told me he was in Monterey when there were 25,000 cases of yellow fever all at the same time. Some of his best friends died. Those who could afford it, sent their families to Saltillo, for though only about four hours away, yellow fever can not crawl up to its elevation.

After pulling out from Saltillo, we left our berths and dressed for the day. Our attention had already been attracted by the maguey,—a huge variety of the cactus family. Extensive fields of it lay on either side of the track. Mile after mile of maguey (call it ma-gav) stretched before us. Each of these cacti is in the form of a plantain, except that the leaves bend over more, and each would fill a small room. It is about twice as high as a man's head. The national beverage is obtained from the maguey; it is pronounced pulkie, and spelled pulque. The native hollows out the central stalk, which quickly fills with juice. He sucks this up into a long tube, then empties the tube into a goat's skin; and what he has sucked up, the people drink down. It isn't particularly intoxicating,—just sloppy and nasty and sickening. It is beer to the Mexicans. Everybody rinks it, and nobody is too poor to give a few centavos for pulque. The profits in the maguey fields is enormous, and appeals with especial force to the Mexican heart because there is little labor required. When a used-up plant begins to die, a young one is planted beside it You don't have to plow or water the ground or enrich it. Those cacti would grow whether you wanted them to or not, and weeds can't grow because this is the desert region, so it is merely a matter of sucking and exporting. Everybody would have maguey fields, but fortunately it won't grow except in certain altitudes and conditions. If Diaz would have every maguey plant dug up, the people might learn the art of agriculture and learn to drink water and wear their shirts right. As it is, such plowing as you see from the car window, is done by sharp sticks tied to oxen. It was soon after leaving Saltillo that I noticed a faint blue scallop far away against the sky, like a bit of torn blue note paper. I thought at first it was a faint dissolving cloud. But it did not dissolve, and as the train sped on it seemed motionless. At last, however, it stood nearer to view, and then behind it rose other pale shadowy forms, and I knew that the Sierra Madre and I were looking at each other for the first time.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

When you read this, we will be cleaning the dishes and straightening the chairs after Charlie's ice cream social, and carrying home the frosted silver spoons borrowed from our neighbors to piece out the necessary number; and we will be lugging down the street that old hack of a palm belonging to Mrs. Brown, which is borrowed for all the parties in the neighborhood, and for special occasions at the church. But as I write this, the social is still five days in the future, so it will not be until two weeks that you can know how it turned out.

So if there are any guests who missed the train, you might get here yet, before the full account is published. Please remember we make our dish of educational ice cream 15 cents, or two for a quarter, but we will take 10 cents for a dish if we can't get more. Although the great event is still nearly a week ahead, the people have begun to arrive. Naturally those living near at hand were among the first to get here, so you will not be surprised to find my father and mother seated at the head of the table; however, although they have called for the first saucers, they are not going to begin to eat until the rest are seated. As for me, I don't know whether I'll sit down at the table or not. I want to be all around, and I am too restless to stay in one corner. Of course, I'll buy a saucer of ice cream, maybe two; but I don't want to sit at the table to eat it; I want to see who is coming in the front gate.

There is another thing about me. There are a great many things about me, of course, but I was only going to tell one. You know at socials the boys generally all get together like a herd of cattle in a pasture fence-corner, and the girls all sit off by themselves, like a flock of birds on a tree, and the older people stay by themselves; and two or three tried and true Sunday-school workers try to get the people to play, But I don't like to talk so much. Here come the people, and I trust my tie isn't over my collar.

Mrs. Wm. Beesley, Moselle, Mo.: "I am afraid I will come so often you will think I am intruding on other people's rights." (No; you have a place here that belongs to you.) "I have gathered together a few dimes, and they ought to be at work. Bertha sends a dollar, W. D. Beesley the same, Wm. Hitchcock 10 cents, Thos. Johnson 50 cents, and the Sunday-school $2.40, total $5. Half of this is for Drusie and half to buy ice cream at Charlie's social. May God bless the good work of the Advance Society."

Ruth A. Sampsel, Warrensburg, Mo.: "Here I come with my eighteenth and nineteenth quarterly Av. S. reports. One more quarter and I will have kept the rules for five years, although it was nearly six years ago when I first started. (Reader, just reflect a moment what that means; five years of reading the Bible every day; of reading thirty lines of poetry and five pages of history for five years, keeping a neat, orderly account in a notebook of how much extra work you have done: Just suppose you had started in with this, five years ago,—wouldn't you be proud in looking back upon sixty months of continuous advancement? Then why not take it up now, and make the next five years mean more to you than any other five years in your life?) "Well, I am coming to Charlie's ice cream social, but it is so cool now, I am afraid the ice cream won't taste good." (I think it will be warm enough by August 3d.) "I think it would be good for Charlie to have a vacation every summer, but much better that he can stay in St. Louis and help those who have helped him so long. I graduated from the public school this spring, but don't know what I will do next fall, as I am too young to enter the Normal. I hope to meet all my Av. S. friends at the social. Tell Bertha Beesley Casey I send her my best wishes and hope her much joy." (One thing about being inconveniently young, it's a fault you can outgrow. I used to be dreadfully young, myself. But your saying it's too cool for ice cream rankles in my mind. I wish you could see Felix. He is on the back porch, spread out so he can touch as much of the board surface as possible, as it's cooler than the thermometer. He has thrown both his front legs out of joint so they can lie along the floor at full length. Fifteen cents in this letter.)

I met some of the social guests at church Sunday. Mrs. J. P. Burris came to me with $1.75, she had collected from those wanting educational ice cream; and Miss Nana Wood brought 25 cents for the social and as much more for missionary Drusie. So don't let anybody think that Bentonville is staying away from our festivities.

Mrs. Myrtle Jacobs, Kalona, Ia.: "My little daughter, Clarissa, age 4, and I, wish to come to Charlie's ice cream supper." (Instead of taking advantage of our wholesale rates, they inclose 30 cents). "We take great interest in the Av. S., especially since our Willie is at the head of the Honor List." (It will be remembered Willie entered the arena with his grandmother.) "Clarissa is very anxious to belong, and gets her little 'Bible Book,' and has me read to her every day. She calls it, 'Getting my potation like Willie does.' (You tell Clarissa that we think she is a mighty fine girl to get her potations, when thousands of girls older than she is, wouldn't have a potation if you gave one to them.) "The Av. S. is doing a grand work for the young people, and may the Lord bless the work for many years."

Kathryn Lammert, Clover Dale Farm, McGirk, Mo.: (Just hearing the name of that farm makes me feel like getting my old clothes,—I have plenty such,—and stopping the first big wagon I see starting from town, and getting away to the country, far from the rush and turmoil and incessant activity and bewildering nerve-destroying haste of this Bentonville.) "In order to avoid the rush, find inclosed 75 cents for five dishes of ice cream, for Sisters Edna and Eldora, Brother Morris, and two dishes for myself. We will invite a friend, and take our ice cream down by the Moreau, a pretty, limpid stream in summer time. We will sit upon its mossy banks and feast. As we watch the bass, perch and croppy play in the water and listen to an occasional croak from a frog, and the songs of pretty birds, we will eat to the health of Charlie, the greatness of the future before him, the success of his ice cream social, and the enjoyment of ourselves. I am enjoying 'Around the Gulf to Mexico.' 'Agnes' was all right, and it ended fine."

S. A. Seat, Hematite, Mo.: "Inclosed find 25 cents for two plates of ice cream on August 3, 1907. The weather is so warm, one plate would not be enough." (Now, Ruth Sampsel, what have you to say to that? You must have fallen into the lake out at Pertle Springs and caught a cold!) "I hope everybody will come to Charlie's social."

So do I; but as it is still in the future, I cannot tell. In the meantime I have received a clipping from a paper of Chattanooga, and am proud to find that our old Av. S. member, Mrs. Mae Potts, is president of the Highland Park's W. C. T. U. We were fortunate enough to hear at our Chautauqua, Rev. Anna H. Shaw, the national president of that organization.

From Moberly, Mo., comes a card entitled, "The close of a warm day." The sun has just set, but the sky is still red. There is a pond with a point of land running out into it like a thirsty tongue; I wish I was sitting on the tip-end of that point of land with a fishing-pole stuck into the mud at my feet,—it's a nuisance to have to hold a pole up,—and a raft lying at the edge of the water, and over yonder on the bank, a tent with two or three dogs scratching themselves before the entrance, and Kathryn's frog a-croaking, and that I wouldn't have to go back to town the next morning. But I suppose I'll have to stay right here till that ice cream social comes off.

Sadie Pugley, of Woodbine, Ia., sends this quotation in her sixth report, which points a good moral when one has a bad habit one is inclined to nurse and excuse as if it were a bad child: "The horse is not clear escaped that drags the halter." And so the person who has a bad temper or a fault-finding tongue, no matter how noble in other respects, is not a really free man.

In the 10th report of Grace Everest, Oklahoma City, I find this from Chaucer:

"The firste vertue, sone, if thou wilt learne
Is to restreyme and kepen wel thy tonge."

Old Chaucer didn't know how to spell cat; in fact he couldn't spell as well as I can; but there were other things he knew; and 'tonges' was one of them.

I have a note from O. G. Kitchen, who for some weeks has been sending 25 and 50 cents per week to the Av. S. He has bought him a house, or at any rate leased one in the suburbs of Louisville, and can't spare any more for us. I mention this merely that you may not imagine a spring of inexhaustible currency is ever pouring into the waste places of our orphan and missionary dry ground, and in consequence let your own springs go dry. With best wishes to Mr. Kitchen, and until I hear farther from our ice cream social, I will follow my old friend's advice and "restreyne my tonge."

On Things—And Doing Them.

There is a man down on Broadway who is a slave to Things. He toils by day and plans by night for things, lots and houses and bank account. The best thing that can happen to any man is to be free from slavery to Things. The highest joy of life comes when the heart is free to take or leave Things and, in the taking or the leaving, to make them serve high and noble ends. Does God give us good things? Let us thank him and use them for the best. Does God take things? Let us lose them with grateful, happy hearts. And does he permit us to give them back to him? Let us do that with willingness. The Broadway man is a slave, though he may know it not, and misses the joys that come from genuine freedom.

It is doing the disagreeable things that brings keenest enjoyment. That may be a paradox but it is a fact. The things that are done easily being pleasure of course, but the overcoming of life's disagreeable tasks is yet more grateful. A housekeeper said the other day: "I disliked to scour knives, and would sometimes wash them and lay them aside till a whole dozen would be frowning darkly at me. But once when I had put a few away suddenly I felt that it was wrong, and I brought them back and made them shine, and ever since I have liked that part of the work best of all, because I always feel as I did when I was little and father used to pat me on the back when he was pleased."

"Don't talk about what you want to do—do it." That was a remark by William Hunt, the painter. The half-a-chance men have made the great successes. They do not merely dream about doing things—they do things. Hiram Powers was 32 years old before he took seniorus lessons in sculpture. Yet Hiram Powers was the sculptor of the Greek Slave. Peter Cooper, when 5 years old, earned his living by pulling hair from the skins of rabbits his father shot to make hot pulp. When 17 years old he walked to New York, engaged himself as an apprentice for five years at $5 a month and his board. Peter Cooper was a half-a-chance man. Thomas Ball, the great sculptor, was 12 years old when his father died. His mother had four children younger than Thomas. He went to work in a grocery store at $1 a week to help support the family. Ball was a half-a-chance man. Horace Greeley went to New York with $10.75, his entire fortune, in his pocket. Greeley, a printer from "up state," was a half-chance man. These men dreamed—and did.—Walter Williams in "The Lost Hamlet," Columbia (Mo.) Herald

He Met His Match.

Once while Bishop Talbot, long known as the "cowboy bishop," was attending a meeting of dignitaries of the church in St. Paul, a tramp approached a group of bishops gathered on the hotel porch at noon and asked for aid.

"No," one of the churchmen replied, "I don't think we can do anything; but there is the youngest bishop of us all (pointing to Bishop Talbot), and he's a very generous man."

The tramp went to Bishop Talbot and the others watched with interest. They saw a look of surprise come over the tramp's face—they saw that the bishop was talking eagerly, earnestly—they saw the tramp look perturbed—but they finally saw something passed from hand to hand.

The tramp tried to get away without speaking to those of the group, but the former spokesman called to him: "Well, did you get something from our young brother?" The tramp grinned sheepishly. "No, I gave him a dollar for his new cathedral at Laramie!"—Bellman.

Human Beings as Links.

"I'm only a link," said one of the most useful women in the world, laughingly, the other day. She was referring to the fact that she had recently been the means of bringing together a youth who wanted to work and an employer of labor who was looking for that kind of a fellow.

That is just what she has been doing in one way and another all the sixty years of her modest and unselfish career. A wide acquaintance in the working classes, together with an entree into circles of wealth and influence, has given her the joy and privilege of acting as a go-between in almost innumerable cases. So if there is in her community a middle-aged spinster desirous of a position as housekeeper, or a lady wanting a companion for a European trip, or a weary mother eager for a helper with her children, or a young man anxious for a chance to work for his board while taking a course in architecture or engineering, or a Sunday-school superintendent seeking in despair a bright teacher for a class of restless boys, it has come to be a matter of course for those acquainted with the situation to say: "O, go to Miss Greatheart; she'll know the right party."

We all owe a great deal to the people who serve as links between ourselves and something worth having.—Selected.

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, AUGUST 15, 1907.

CLOSE TO THE HEART OF GOD.

Mrs. P. R. Gibson.

THE shell cast by the billow on the strand,
The dewdrop in the sweet heart of the rose,
The bird high up in its own leafy bower,
The wind-flower bending to the zephyr's breath,
The mountain tops catching the sun's first kiss,
Glad rivers rushing on to meet the sea,—
All these live close to Nature's loving heart,
And of herself are particle and part.

So close are we to God's great heart of love,
When Faith looks fearlessly into God's eyes,
And Trust takes tenderly His loving hand,
When Hope, inspired, lights all the path of life.
"In Him we live and move and being have,"
"Life hid with Christ in God" all our desire.
O, Christian life of peace and joy divine,
More of such life, may this be thine and mine.

—"John Sims Led Into the Light by His Friend, Robert Miller," is a new vest-pocket tract of thirty-two pages we have just printed for E. L. Shelnutt, of Acworth, Ga. The plotting is the somewhat familiar one of a good man's being separated from the truth as it is in Jesus by denominational misunderstandings of the Word and prejudices, but being helped to the light by a patient, consecrated student of the Bible. Yet the treatment is so unique and tactful as to make this booklet a valuable addition to our equipment for proselyting into the truth. Price 50 cents per dozen, $3.00 per hundred. They should be thickly sown during protracted meetings.

—The Universal Elements of the Christian Religion, by Charles Cuthbert Hall. $1.25. We have just received our first shipment of the second edition of this great book. It will illuminate all minds and strengthen every faith into which it is brought into vital touch.

—"From Behind the Veil," a beautiful, historic romance of the days of the Aztecs; plotted in the great Southwest, and told in 213 pages of thrilling interest. In it is seen the flash of the battleaxe and the tenderness of chivalric love. We have a few of these we can sell at 75 cents.

—A Typical Mission in China, by W. E. Southhill. $1.50. This is an exceptional book. A more interesting work on missions has not appeared in years. The author has a fine gift of description, but better yet a great work rewarded by nearly 20,000 converts to portray. The volume is bright, comprehensive and at times most humorous.

—The Inspiration of Our Faith. $1.25. This volume of sermons is by John Watson (Ian McLaren, author of the "Bonnie Brier Bush," etc.) Among the sermons are "The Passion of God," "Christian Character Justified by Its Trend," "The Reasonablness of Prayer," "Power of Other Worldliness." One sermon, worth the price of the book, is "Things Which Remain."

—The Silver Lining, by J. H. Jowett. $1.00. How frequently we wish for the gift of "speaking the word in season to them that are weary." The author is a large-hearted, sympathetic scholar. These pages contain brief, pointed and convincing meditations on the cheering aspects of the Christian faith. For those who are downhearted it will lighten many a gray day.

—Spiritual Power, a work by George Henry Hubbard. $1.00. This is a comprehensive yet pointed study in spiritual dynamics. A few of the general subdivisions are: "The Search After Power"; "Obtaining Spiritual Power"; "The Dynamics of Prayer"; "Dynamic Preaching"; "Social Regeneration"; "Some of the Tasks for the Twentieth Century Church," etc.

—Life that Follows Life, by John Balcom Shaw. 75 cents. This is not a volume of philosophical speculations, but the answer that Dr. Shaw as a man of saintly Christian faith gives to the plain questions of the children of men asking about the hereafter: Where is Heaven? Will we recognize our loved ones? How shall we get along with uncongenial people? etc.

—Famous Hymns of the World, by Allen Southerland. $1.35, post paid. This contains a brief history of the great hymns of Christian Psalmody. It tells the circumstances under which they were written and somewhat of the ministry of the song among men. Among them are: "Jesus, Lover of My Soul"; Luther's "A Mighty Fortress is Our God"; "My Country, 'Tis of Thee"; that glorious song, "Sunset and Evening Star," etc.

—The Witness of Jesus, by Alexander Procter. For many years preceding his death, Alexander Procter was considered the greatest living preacher among the Disciples. Many unsuccessful attempts were made to induce him to write books. This one contains the only sermons he ever committed to print. It is in every library containing all the best literature of our brotherhood.

—Islam and Christianity, by E. M. Wherry. Few realize that there are more than 60,000,000 Moslems in India, 30,000,000 in China and 30,000,000 in Malaysia and the East Indies. Dr. Wherry shows how these Moslems came, and how their religion has been modified by Hinduism, Buddhism and Confucianism. He tells what is being done in India and the far East to reach them, and what hope there is in dealing with them. $1.25. It is a valuable addition to any missionary library.

WHAT FRIENDS ARE SAYING.

We have received the Superintendent's Quarterly and are very much pleased with it.—Louis Starff, Princeton, Minn.

Our superintendent is very much pleased with the new Superintendent's Quarterly.—Daisy Brotherton, Cahokia, Mo.

I enclose 50 cents for the Superintendent's Quarterly. We are delighted with it; it is such a great help.—Edna T. Green, Tullula, Ill.

We receive so much pleasure from The Christian-Evangelist and "Our Young Folks." I do not like to miss any of the issues.—Roxey M. Reid, Pablo Beach, Fla.

We received the Superintendent's Quarterly. It is fine—all that could be expected. The papers are very satisfactory to our school. I like them very much.—J. I. McCarty, Lawrenceville, Ill.

It was with much pleasure I examined the new Superintendent's and Home Department Quarterlies. I am agreeably pleased with their superb excellence. You may feel assured of our order this fall, as the best is none too good for us. I shall endeavor to inaugurate a large Home Department. We have never had one, though it is sorely needed.—E. A. Long, New York, N. Y.

I am not surprised that it is easy for me to comment whole-heartedly on your Supplementary lessons. The difficulties you have taken out of the way, so I believe that what you have prepared will fit into the work better than anything of the kind that I have ever seen. The difficulties have been that the so-called supplementary work did not supplement the lesson, but was a matter aside and divided the attention of the class. I have tried repeatedly to link with the regular lesson some general Bible instruction, but in the brief time allotted we could not avoid having the lesson suffer if any particular point was made in other work. Your plan of dealing with that part of the Scripture in the lesson has my heartiest approval. I am pleased with your work, Brother Stevenson, as I knew I would be with anything from your discerning mind and consecrated heart. —Charles S. Medbury.

"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

The Pastor As Seen by a Layman*

By James R. McCollam, M. D.

For a number of years I have been interested in the study of why more of our converts to Christianity do not enter the ministry, and why so many of them backslide. I do not know that I have made any discoveries or arrived at any definite conclusions, but as it is said of a Scotchman that he always has an opinion and is sometimes right, so I have some opinions which have to do with the pastors of our congregations, and these are presented for your consideration.

One idea of the physiology of digestion and assimilation is that when food is taken into the mouth a message is sent to the brain, which then sends messages to the stomach, liver, pancreas and intestines and they perform their functions. This does not represent our idea as well as the theory that the food taken into the mouth stimulates the parotid glands and they secrete a chemical substance which causes the stomach glands to act, and they in turn secrete a substance which stimulates the liver and pancreas, etc., each organ being dependent, in a large measure, for its stimulation upon some other organ. This theory also fits my idea of the action of the religion of our Lord. He gave the gospel to his apostles, they gave it to others, and to-day, as by the foolishness of preaching men are to be saved, so I think we depend on the class of Christians we call pastors for the substance which shall cause us to functionate as part of that great body, "The Church of Jesus Christ."

Jesus said, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me," and if he meant the lifting at his crucifixion only, then we may doubt his word; but if he meant that to-day, if he should be lifted, he would draw men unto him, we have seen that fulfilled many times, and we have a right to think that when men are not drawn to Jesus, the reason is that he is not lifted up as he should be. This is a subject that deserves, and I think is receiving, a great amount of study from the many persons to whom the work has been intrusted, but I fear the care and training of the converts to Christianity has not been studied and is not understood as it should be. Many times I have been told by non-professors of Christianity that they believed in Jesus Christ and his religion but when they made a profession they were going to live right, and I believe that the average man accepts Christianity firmly convinced of its correctness, and with a firm determination to live strictly according to its teachings, many of them with little idea of what those teachings are except the memory of a mother's teaching and an ideal in the person of the preacher.

This being true, why do so many men give up the active Christian life in a few weeks or months?

I have been told that in an hour and a half lecture against Christianity by Ingersoll, excepting a few so-called contradictions in the Bible, almost the entire force of the address was directed at the Pope and priests of the Catholic Church, and the ministry and wire-pulling conferences of the Methodist church. And this is the practice of nearly every anti-Christian teacher. Nearly all modern skepticism is really lack of faith in professing Christians. Now, if the majority of the Christians are won from the world by the pastors of the Church of Jesus Christ, and the infidels attack the Church by assailing the pastors, how important the office must be, and what should we expect from the pastor!

Paul, in his letter to Timothy and Titus, tells these young men that they were left in charge of the churches for a certain purpose, which included the following: To set things in order, appoint elders and deacons, to pray, read and study; to charge, tell, instruct, preach, exhort, remind, command and teach; to attend to reading, exhortation and doctrine; to rebuke and reprove, to fight the good fight of faith, to continue, watch and endure; to evangelize and commit to others who would become teachers.

They were to be strong, to be examples, to be steadfast, and to show themselves approved unto God. They were to shun certain foolish discussions, flee certain lusts, let no man despise their youth, refuse profane and old wives' fables, the profane babblings and oppositions of knowledge falsely so-called, and many other things, as the love of money, which is the root of all kinds of evil, and o turn away from men having a form of godliness but who deny the power thereof.

I believe that many pastors are fulfilling Paul's list of negatives very well except the love of money, and I believe that the love of money by pastors is a very common cause of trouble among Christians.

Jesus said: "How hardly shall they that trust in riches," which means to my mind a man that is wanting a large salary whether he is getting it or not. It is hard for a man drawing $2,000 salary to be an example of sacrifice for the man who must keep his family on an income of $300 to $500, and at that many pastors show much more faith in the proverbial "rainy day" than they do in the all-sufficiency of Christ. If pastors showed the same faith and zeal in getting men to embrace the principles of Christianity as they do in desiring to prepare for the "rainy day," which often never comes, Christianity—Protestant Christianity—would go forth with leaps and bounds.

The strongest hold on the people that the Catholic Church possesses is the teaching that Christianity is the most important thing in life, and that is constantly impressed on the members of the churches, and we witness the great number who give themselves to the various sisterhoods for charity, etc.

I am one who believes that the laborer is worthy of his hire, and preachers as well as others should be paid, and I think that I can understand that in some places if the preacher does not look out for his salary he will not get it; but the man who has been pastor of a congregation for any length of time, and then is in trouble about the salary question, should study his Bible for a while and learn what the Lord asks him to do, as well as what the Lord wants him to preach. I believe if the pastor is worthy of his hire, he, usually, will get it. But the churches need a lot of instruction along this line, which must be given by pastors.

Paul left Titus to set things in order, appoint elders, etc.; not to wait for God to bring things around right, and we need hundreds of pastors to-day like that. I believe that one-half of the talk of preachers being poor business men, poor managers, is because a preacher sees things going wrong and is afraid to correct them. Paul's instruction is just as positive about reproving, rebuking and correcting as any in the Bible, but many pastors make their worst mistakes here. Educating and instructing about sin may be done from the pulpit, but individual sins are to be corrected by going to the individual as a friend. Most of us understand the teaching on how to treat our enemies, but fail to appreciate how to deal with an erring friend. Paul's idea of preaching is very definite; it is for teaching, exhorting, instructing and reminding, with the main idea of evangelization. The free-thinkers claim to study science, and it is said that after a few Prohibition in Georgia.

The legislature of Georgia has passed, and Governor Hoke Smith has signed, a bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages in that state. The movement was not a political one, but was backed by the sentiment of the best and most thoughtful people of the state. The usual arguments were made against it, namely that prohibition does not prohibit, that it would injure business, and that it would make the state appear to disadvantage in the eyes of the world. To offset these fallacious arguments, the advocates had one strong argument in addition to those which have been used elsewhere. In Georgia the negro problem is acute. There are as many negroes in the state as there are whites. Last year there were in Atlanta race riots of the most serious sort, resulting in the loss of life, the destruction of property, the interruption of business and the injury of the good name of the state. In these and nearly all other negro disturbances the trouble arises from the drunken negro. Nearly every outrage starts with some one whose passions have been inflamed by liquor. The federal government has found it wise to prohibit the sale of liquor to Indians. It is vastly more important to prohibit the sale of liquor to negroes. They are equally without ability to control themselves, they are more numerous and they are more closely mingled with the whites who must therefore suffer from the results of their wild deeds when under the influence of liquor. But the negroes are citizens, and it is therefore impossible to prohibit the sale of liquor to them without making the prohibition general. If the white men of the South wish to protect their wives and daughters from the peril of the drunken negro, they must forego the pleasure and advantage of getting drunk themselves, and even the pleasure of drinking without getting drunk. This aspect of the case makes it worth while to try the experiment, as the "Atlanta Georgian" says, "even if all experiences in other states where there is no negro population had been absolute failures." As to the injury to business no individual will suffer much heavier financial loss than Governor Hoke Smith himself, who, as part owner of the Piedmont Hotel in Atlanta, will, it is estimated, lose $60,000 by the closing of the bar. And yet the governor was an ardent advocate of the prohibition bill and signed it promptly when it reached him

The Largest Fine.

A fine of $29,000,000 has been assessed against the Standard Oil Company by Judge Landis for receiving freight rebates. Each particular shipment upon which it was shown that a rebate had been received was considered as a separate offense and the maximum fine was imposed for each offense. Whether this decision is good law or not, we do not know. It may be a piece of "judicial sensationalism," as it has been called, or it may not. It is tolerably clear, however, that the fine, although staggeringly vast to the imagination untrained in the large figures of high finance, is not unjust or ruinously excessive. It is largely through the use of freight rebates, both before and after rebating became illegal, that the Standard Oil Company has built up a business which is worth a great many times the amount of this fine. If a thief, when brought to punishment for his irregular mode of money-getting, gets off with a fine which leaves him in possession of 95 per cent of his ill-gotten gains, he would certainly consider that he had been handled very considerately. If the law against rebating is to be effective at all, the punishment for breaking it must be made commensurate with the profits. It is to be noted, however, that the Standard Oil Company has not yet stepped up to the counter to pay the money, and it will be a long time before the government hears the jingle of the coin of that $29,000,000. Mr. Rockefeller's cheerful comment on the case is that Judge Landis will be dead a long while before that fine is paid.

Business and Romance.

The Lost Bullion Spanish Mines Company is in the toils of the law. It is called upon to defend itself against the charge of using the United States mails for the transportation of fraudulent matter. The case is not yet finished, but the evidence so far looks bad for the company. The methods of this company apparently were not essentially different from those of a score or more of other companies which sell stock in a very ordinary hole in the ground after leading the innocent to believe that it is a mine. In this particular case, however, the imagination of the possible investor was inflamed by the romantic suggestion conveyed in the name of the company. Everybody knows that the Spaniards had enormously rich mines in the Southwest. Everybody knows also that there are numerous traditions of hidden treasure and lost mines, where millions of dollars in bullion or rich ore lie awaiting the fortunate and venturesome explorer who shall penetrate the mountain fastnesses, find the magic spot either by good luck or by following ancient landmarks, and brave the ghost which haunts the place to guard the hidden treasure. Every one has heard these stories, and over most people, even those who do not believe them, they have a curious fascination. Now comes a company and proposes to sell stock in the fairy tale. It is like buying shares in "Treasure Island." Perhaps the investor does not wholly fail of securing some return for his money, for he gets a vivid though short-lived sensation of being the business partner of Aladdin and a part owner of the wonderful lamp. This is worth something. As a general business proposition it is safe to avoid romantic investments when cash profits are desired. Plenty of people have invested in coffee plantations and stock in rubber companies and banana groves which were about to be planted as soon as the land could be cleared, for no other reason than that the idea of the tropics went to their heads. Being a long way off and in a strange and tropical country, there was a glamor about it which a Kansas corn field could never hope to possess. This is a tolerably safe rule for amateur investors to follow: if you want glamor and romance, buy novels which are known to contain those elements; if you want dividends payable in cash, buy something that you know something about.

Graded Tax on Marriage.

The Georgia legislature is doing several curious and interesting things besides passing a prohibition law. Last week a bill to increase the price of marriage licenses was defeated on the ground that it would encourage race suicide. This was followed by the introduction of a bill to establish a graduated scale of prices for marriage licenses to encourage early marriages. The proposed scale is as follows: For 21 years of age, free; 22 to 30 years, $1.50; 30 to 40 years, $2; 40 to 50 years, $10; 50 to 60 years, $50; over 60, no license. Since the price, under this scale, does not increase much until the age of 40, it may be assumed that, in the view of the author of this bill, any age earlier than that is fairly satisfactory for marriage. But we doubt whether even the restriction proposed would go far toward checking the rash desire for matrimony on the part of men over 40. Many a prosperous business man of, say, 45 years, when the belated but none the less vigorous matrimonial germ gets into his system, would no more be deterred by the necessity of paying $10 for a license than he would by a requirement to pay the preacher an equal sum. And it is quite within the bounds of reason to expect that a dashing young lover of 50-odd will pay the required $50 for his license without a whimper. In fact, if he has lived as a bachelor all those years he can easily afford to pay $50. We greatly fear that it will turn out to be another case of prohibition that does not prohibit, or of regulation which does not regulate.

The Dangers of Child-Idleness.

The evils of child-labor have been much exploited and have become fairly familiar to the reading public. The equally great dangers of child-idleness are set forth by Mr. Thomas Speed Mosby, pardon attorney for Missouri, in an article in the "North American Review." Mr. Mosby has studied the problem of the relation of criminality to industry and idleness. His conclusion is that the criminal "is not the product of the trades, of the workshop, or of the factory." The records of the courts and prisons show that the age of greatest criminality is between 20 and 25, and that nearly 70 per cent of the convicted felons are entirely unskilled in any trade or profession. The young man who reaches this age, therefore, without learning any useful trade, is entering upon the period of life where the probability of crime is greatest in the condition which is most favorable to criminality. He has a double chance against him. The superintendent of a large refomatory through which over 3,000 boys have passed, is quoted as saying that not one of the boys who had been brought to that institution had ever been apprenticed or had knowledge of any trade. "If they had, they would never have come here," he said. The teaching of a trade to boys in reformatories and men in prison is one of the most effective means of preventing them from falling into the class of the habitually criminal. To keep children out of the factory by legislation, and to make no provision for their attendance at school, is to invite a worse disaster than that which is avoided. The enforcement of a compulsory education law, with facilities for all the children of school age, is the necessary complement of an anti-child-labor law.

Editorial

Some First Principles.

One of our ministerial readers, expressing his appreciation of a recent editorial in The Christian-Evangelist, on the question of whether we should continue to preach first principles, requests that we should give a few editorials on this subject along the lines indicated in the editorial referred to. Some of these first principles may be assumed, such as the existence of a God who is righteous in character and requires righteousness on the part of his intelligent creation. We may also pass by, without argument, the fact that mankind has fallen short of the ideal of righteousness, which God has given us, in that all men have sinned and fallen under the condemnation of God's righteous law. These two great facts being taken for granted, there emerges a third fact with which we may begin, namely: man's reconstruction in order that he may be at one with God and realize the destiny for which he was created. This reconstruction or rehabilitation of character begins with what is called in the New Testament

I. The New Birth.

It is admitted on all hands that Jesus Christ brought into the world a new and perfect type of life, which he not only set forth in his teaching, but exemplified in his character. The whole world has been charmed with the ideal which has been set before humanity in that one perfect life. Men who study Christ's character intuitively see in it the true life that all men ought to live. At the same time every man is compelled to acknowledge his inability, in and of himself, to realize that ideal. Herein arises the necessity of what is called the new birth. "You must be born again," said Jesus, "or ye can not see the kingdom of God." This is the most fundamental fact in Christianity—the necessity of being born from above. As the first birth imparts physical life, so this birth from above imparts spiritual life. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh," said Jesus, "and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Each brings forth after its kind. The new birth is a spiritual birth. This fact underlies all spiritual growth and development. It is, therefore, of primary and immediate concern to every rational human soul.

"How can these things be?" So Nicodemus queried and so many another anxious and perplexed seeker after a higher and better life has inquired. Can the subject be cleared of all mystery? Can the process of the impartation of life be made so clear that all may see and understand just how it is accomplished? Jesus says not. All life has its mystery. No science has been able to penetrate into its secrets. "The wind bloweth where it will, and thou hearest the voice thereof, but knowest not whence it cometh and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." If we put Spirit instead of wind, still Jesus asserts that there is something about the new birth that is mysterious. "Thou knowest not whence it cometh and whither it goeth." Taking the translation as it stands in the American revised version, Jesus illustrates the mystery of the new birth by the wind. There are some things about the wind we know, and some things we do not know. We know that it blows, because we feel its breath upon our faces and see the trees bending before its pressure. We know that it has a voice, for we hear the sound in the soft sighing of the evening zephyrs, or in the roaring blast of the tornado. But we do not know "whence it cometh and whither it goeth;" the couch of its rising or the chamber where it retires. But let it be noted that we know enough about the wind to avail ourselves of its use, and we never think of refusing to use it as our servant because we do not understand all the mystery connected with its coming and going.

G. Campbell Morgan illustrates the truth in this way: "You put your boat upon the lake, and hoist your sail, and wait for the wind. Now it is blowing—that is a fact. You do not know whence it comes or whither it goes—that is a mystery. But you do not sit down in the boat and say: I decline to make any use of this thing. I do not understand it. I can not be swayed by mystery. I must have an explanation. Nonsense! You put your sail up, saying, I will take advantage of the fact in order that my boat may be driven over the lake, and postpone the solution of the mystery to further knowledge and understanding. So much for the man and the wind. 'So is every one that is born of the Spirit.' You know the fact of the Spirit; you do not know the mystery of his coming and going."

What is the import of the word "so" in this statement? It indicates that our relation to the wind expresses the relation of man to the Spirit. Just as we can avail ourselves of the benefit of the wind by obeying the law governing its operation without understanding all the mystery connected with it, so one may avail himself of the benefit of the Spirit, by hearing his voice and obeying the law of the Spirit of life, and thus be born again. Mark the fact that what man is to do in order to be born again is not a mystery. That is made plain. We are to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ through the convincing and convicting testimony of the Spirit, and surrender ourselves to him in the confessional and declarative act of baptism. "Except a man be born of the water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God." This is the law of our obedience, and it is plain enough. We may never be able to understand how faith in Jesus Christ puts us in such vital relation to him that the Holy Spirit imparts to the soul the new life. But this is no reason whatever why we should not believe and obey in order that we may have life and enter into the kingdom of God.

The disposition on the part of many to get rid of the mystery in religion and in the nature of Christ has led to superficial and rationalistic views both of regeneration and of Christ's personality. It is not a healthy sign. God is infinite. We can not come into touch with him without coming in contact with mystery. It is enough that God has made plain for us the path that leads to the new life in Christ, and to eternal blessedness. Let us be content with that and have humility enough to acknowledge with the psalmist that some things are "too high" for us, and be willing to walk by faith where we can not walk by sight. The great and fundamental necessity of all Christian life and growth, activity and fruitfulness, is that we be "born from above," by the power of the Spirit through faith in and self-surrender to Jesus Christ our Lord.

A Question in Ethics.

The following question is submitted to us, or to any of our "moral experts," by one of our well-known ministers. Our reply must be brief but we trust will cover the case:

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I have before me a problem in ethics which I respectfully submit for the consideration of moral experts on your staff, among your correspondents, in the brotherhood at large, or among the editors of your religious exchanges:

Mr. A, the owner of a parcel of ground, has an agreement with Mr. B, whereby B agrees to buy, at the market price, all wheat grown upon said land for a given term of years. But A has knowledge of the fact that B is the colossal thief of the ages, whose ability to buy any quantity of wheat at any price is founded upon fraud, upon robbery, oppression and defiant violation of the law, all of his money being in fact stolen money. Now, therefore:

1. What is the status of this transaction, from the standpoint of Christian ethics, as to A?

2. Shall A's contribution to the church or to missions be received without question by the missionary society or by the church board, assuming that the society, or the board, have knowledge of the fact that A has received the money from B, as above stated?

3. Assume that only a part of B's ability to buy wheat is represented by tainted money; assume also that only a part of A's church and missionary contribution is derived from B, the only difficulty being, in both cases, the impossibility of determining which of the dollars are tainted and which clean; how does this situation affect the moral problem and the duties of missionary and church boards, as to this gift?

Yours truly, C——.

1. As to the status of the transaction mentioned between A and B, and from the standpoint of A we should say that if A had the choice of selling his grain to an honest man or to one known to be a thief, he was at fault in not selecting the honest man with whom to do business. It must be granted, however, that we are not always at liberty to choose the kind of person we would like to deal with in our business transactions and we can not certainly say, without knowing all the facts, whether A was blameworthy in selling his wheat to B. As a matter of fact, however, none of us would like to be held accountable for having business transactions with persons whose character and methods we can not approve, for then indeed we must "needs go out of the world."

2. Certainly, if such contribution is made without any conditions attached to it. Otherwise you constitute the church or missionary board a sort of tribunal for passing upon the character of its donors, and entirely change their functions.

3. The fact mentioned in item three presents a perplexing problem to those who believe that the actual money itself is "tainted" by the wrong method in which it has been acquired, for they can never positively determine whether the money given belongs to that part of the estate that has been honestly earned, or to the part that has been acquired by wrong methods. But to those who make a distinction between the method of acquiring money and the method of distributing it, and who do not believe that any money is "tainted," but only the man's character who wrongly acquires it, the fact mentioned presents no difficulty. If the donor offers his gift for the use of Christian benevolence or Christian missions, without conditions, churches and church boards are justified in assuming that the motive which prompts the gift is a worthy one, unless they know to the contrary, and should accept it and use it as any other gift. Any other course is bound to lead to complications which would hamper and embarrass all charitable and missionary enterprises.

We are sorry to find Mr. F. B. Meyer retrograding. Some years ago when, as a Baptist minister, he entered upon the pastorate of the church built by Newman Hall, a Congregationalist, we expressed the fear that Mr. Meyer was weakening in his principles when he would accept a pastorate where his assistant sprinkled babies. We have not a full statement of his latest expression, but the "Congregationalist" quotes him as saying at Northfield a couple of weeks ago: "Dipping or sprinkling does not matter. The heart is what counts in baptism, not the formal expression." Why not join the Friends at once, Mr. Meyer? But, says Mr. Meyer, in one of his books: "Instant obedience to known duty is an indispensable condition of all intimacy with God." Mr. Meyer is one of that school of workers who decry the methods of the destructive critics. But has not Mr. Meyer joined these when he wields his little pen-knife in cutting out the passages in the New Testament that point to the immersion of believers as one of the "known duties" for the man who would fulfill God's plans?

Notes and Comments.

In commenting upon the agreement entered into by the Baptists and Disciples in Western Canada, to co-operate as far as possible in local communities, our esteemed contemporary, the "Baptist Argus" says:

> It was much easier for this agreement to be made in Canada than it would be in this section, because the Baptists are virtually open communionists and the disciples are virtually free from the taint of water-remission.

We esteem the editor of the "Baptist Argus" very highly, and the spirit in which he writes is most commendable. We are sorry, however, to see his use, in the above statement, of the phrase, "the taint of water remission." We believe that the "Baptist Argus," on mature reflection, would discard that phrase as having no proper application to the Disciples of Kentucky. So far as we know there is not a preacher in the state nor a private member who believes that water as such has the slightest relation to the remission of sins. The "Baptist Argus" recently expressed its belief that baptism is in order to the ceremonial remission of sins, but we presume it would repudiate the phrase "water-remission" as representing its own view. Baptists and Disciples agree that it is only as baptism is an expression of faith and of the spirit of obedience, that it has any relation to remission of sins, actual or ceremonial. The phrase "water-remission" implies a belief in the efficacy of the very element of water in procuring forgiveness, whereas no one, so far as we know, holds to such view. In the interest of union and of good understanding we hope, therefore, that our esteemed contemporary will refrain from the use of those misleading phrases which deepen rather than remove prejudice.

The "Word and Way," another of our Baptist exchanges, published in Kansas City, Mo., referring to the union of the Baptists and Free Baptists, and of the tendency toward a more open communion among Baptist churches, especially in the North, is moved to remark as follows:

> We are facing a condition of denominational disintegration. One of three results is inevitable: There must be a reaction from the denominational looseness and drift existing at the North; or there will by and by be such modification of the whole Baptist position and contention as to render the separate existence of Baptists without use or excuse; or we shall have within the next twenty years a division. By whatever name these divisions shall be called, they will be in fact the divisions of the liberals and of the conservatives. "How shall two walk together except they be agreed?"

We take a more hopeful view of the future of Baptists than our Kansas City contemporary. The spirit to-day is not toward disintegration but union, and this, too, in spite of, and perhaps as the result of, a growing spirit of liberality among the churches. It is not liberality or charity in our treatment of others that produces division, but narrowness and bigotry. No doubt there will continue to be among the Baptists liberals and conservatives, as among all other religious bodies, but in this age that does not mean division, but a more comprehensive spirit of unity. When the Baptists and Disciples have both divested themselves of whatever provincialism and high church views some of them may hold, they will still stand for great and important principles which will receive the greater emphasis by reason of their having put away, as causes of denominational division, their minor differences and especially the spirit of aloofness from other followers of Christ.

The "Gospel Advocate" is moved to say that "the seeming disposition to hunt up evidence and to make out a case of heresy or wrong-doing against some good man striving to obey God and to teach the truth, is greatly to be deprecated. * * Many trivial matters should be left without agitation." There are many people, it says, who are always ready to "take sides" on these trivial questions and the discussion "begets a partisan spirit and makes sectarians, and all who do not agree with the sectarians are heretics." We had to look at the title of the paper the second time to be sure that this was an editorial paragraph in our Nashville contemporary. We commend the spirit and the sentiment of these statements.

We have received a circular letter from one who advertises himself as a preacher of the gospel with the title of "Dr.," whose cable address is "Christian," whose published mottoes are "Christ our Creed" and "The Bible our Guide," and who offers to sell to his "brother" minister at twenty cents per share stock of the par value of $1.00 in the company of which he is president, with his guarantee that he will repay the principal and a profit of twelve per cent, while the shares "should jump to par within six months." Those ministers who send this man their money will deserve just what they will get. Is there more "easy fruit" among ministers than in other classes, so that it pays to advertise such stuff?

We clip the above from the editorial notes of the "Congregationalist and Christian World." We do not know for certain whether this refers to a man who claims to be a minister of the Christian church but who for some years past has been selling stock in certain companies of which he was president to ministers and members of our brotherhood. We agree, however, with our contemporary. No man of finance has to go to poor ministers for money when there are 12 per cent profits, and we doubt the Christianity of any man engaged in such schemes. We think it is well to investigate the financial antecedents of such men. We have heard, it seems to us, of some failures—for the investors.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Pentwater Musings.

The few Disciples in and about Pentwater have organized themselves into a congregation, and are meeting every Lord's day morning in the G. A. R. hall, in the second story of one of the buildings of the town. They have called Brother Shrontz to be their minister and leader, but being unable to pay him a salary, he is compelled to devote his week days to earning a living and renders what service he can for them on Sunday. The Editor of this paper has been relieving him for a few Sundays by speaking to the small audience that gathers in the upper chamber. The Baptists here have a good building and are also weak, but have recently called a new pastor. On our suggestion, the Disciples here have made a proposition to hold union services with the Baptists during the summer season, or as long as it may be mutually desirable. From present indications this will result in a union afternoon service on the beach, all the churches in town co-operating. On last Lord's day at 4 p. m. the first of these meetings was held down on the sand in front of the clubhouse. There was a good attendance from the resorters on the beach and the people from the village. This initial meeting of the season was led by the writer of these "musings," and was addressed by the local Baptist minister, a visiting retired Baptist minister, the Christian minister, Professor Troup, of the University of Chicago, and by Judge Montgomery, of the Supreme Court of Michigan. There was a good deal of singing, and all present seemed heartily to favor a continuance of these vesper services, which hereafter will probably be held at a later hour in the afternoon. There is something inspiring in this out-of-doors religion, with the vaulted skies for a roof, the clean sand for cushions and the murmuring waves for an accompaniment. It is easier, under such circumstances, to identify the God of Nature with the God of revelation, and to realize that the Creator of worlds is also the Father of our spirits, and that he is speaking to us through many voices and seeking to woo us to himself and to holier living. When there shall be a larger number of visitors here we shall doubtless prepare a rude auditorium in some sheltered ravine, where we may meet when the weather is too inclement for a beach service.

These are golden days and still, starry nights we are having here in the Park now, in which "Day unto day uttereth speech and night unto night showeth knowledge." And how rapidly they pass! The forenoon is generally wholly occupied with the correspondence and editorial writing, and sometimes this work infringes also on the afternoon. Many are still writing about cottages here on the lake front or board at the clubhouse, but there are no unoccupied cottages on the lake front and the clubhouse is full. But very satisfactory accommodations in the way of board and lodging can be had in the village of Pentwater, which is convenient to Lake Pentwater, and only a few minutes' walk from Lake Michigan. Quite a number of our friends are quartered over there. We have had a most pleasant visit during the current week from Brother and Sister Kennedy and their grandson, from Memphis, Tenn., who are stopping at "The Arbor Rest" in Pentwater. We had a delightful half day's visit with them up the lake, our families uniting in a picnic dinner in the evening on the shore of the little lake, with fishing as a side attraction. These guests from Tennessee are making a short stay, but we are expecting Brother Bates, of the same city, to visit us during August. The people from the South are charmed with the cool air and the fine scenery here, and no place in Michigan offers better natural advantages for refugees from the heat of these southern cities than Pentwater. What a blessed thing it is that we have this variety of climate under our flag, so that the people from the South can find comfort in these cool breezes during the summer months, while those from the frost-bound regions may, in the winter season, find a sunny clime in the Southland where they can avoid the rigor of winter. By avoiding the extremes of heat and cold elderly people, especially, often prolong their lives. Our Chicago friends have completed their purchase of thirty acres of ground, north of us, on the beach, and have it platted and the front lots laid off and chosen by lot, and will call it "Campbell Park," as several of the persons interested are members of the Campbell Institute. They expect to erect several cottages next season. Brethren desiring to purchase lots can now "pay their money and take their choice," according to their theological preferences! They are not so far from us but that we hope to exercise a conservative influence over them, and thus keep them, as far as possible, within the limits of orthodoxy!

One can hardly resist the conviction, in walking over these forest-crowned sand-dunes and through its winding ravines, and breathing the invigorating air that blows over the lake, that these shores were intended for the use to which they are now being so largely devoted—that of summer resorts. If this be so, it is only a part of that prevision which is seen everywhere in nature, in which the Creator has anticipated, by uncounted millenniums, the needs of man, the crowning work of his hands. No one can account for the deposits of coal and all the precious metals in the earth without seeing that an infinitely wise and good God, long before the coming of man on this earth, knew of his coming and provided in nature for his wants. This does not remove natural causes out of the field of operations, but it sees that behind these natural laws is an intelligent Mind working out through them his beneficent purposes No. doubt thoughtless men, in generations past, have looked upon these rugged shores and wondered why they were so created, and what possible use they could be to mankind. But those of us who have built cottages for summer use on these hills overlooking Lake Michigan, and have experienced the comfort and invigoration of these cool breezes, and have enjoyed a fire on the hearth through what is known as the heated term, have no difficulty in seeing the use for which these wild, wooded hills—nature's own parks—were intended to serve. These resorts, therefore, should be utilized in the spirit of grateful appreciation to the Giver, and should be made to serve the highest interests of man. It would be a sort of desecration to take such royal gifts of God and convert them into places of fashionable folly and frivolity, or of dissipation and debauchery. Rather should they be consecrated to the rest of body and brain, and to the re-invigoration of man's moral and spiritual nature. Here friends and congenial spirits, widely sundered in their respective fields of labor during most of the year, may meet and commingle in agreeable companionship and fellowship during the summer months, under the most favorable conditions for recuperating wasted energies and renewing their vital forces. So we hold that the right kind of a summer resort has an important function to fulfill in the economy of God.

What is the ideal which those who control the destiny of Garrison Park have in mind for this place? Their idea is not to make it an expensive and fashionable resort, where people gather to spend their time in the same routine of society drudgery which they have in the cities at home. Most certainly it is not to be a place for dissipation or indulgence in discredited sorts of amusement. First of all, it is to be a resting place for weary workers who wish to get away for a season from their routine labors, and, in company with congenial spirits, have opportunities for social intercourse, quiet reading and restfulness, and such exercise and amusement as will serve to promote physical and mental soundness. It is not to be a camp-meeting, where a continuous round of religious services is held, nor a Chautauqua, where the daily bill of fare is a series of lectures on the difficult problems of the day. It must be a resting place, with only enough of the intellectual and religious as will meet the normal needs of rest-seekers. As we have walked through these shady glens and over these lofty ridges, we often picture the ideal community we would like to see built up here. A hundred or more cozy and inexpensive cottages crowning these hillsides and hilltops, with their splendid views of lakes and forest, inhabited by people who come here for rest and recreation, bringing their religion with them and all their good breeding, forming a summer colony of congenial souls, each of whom will seek to promote his neighbor's welfare and happiness. We would have our religious services, our social intercourse, our pastimes, while we exchange ideas in relation to our common work and plan for larger things in the kingdom of God. What a source of health and enjoyment, of comfort and of strength for the cause of truth and righteousness, would such a summer resort be! Such is the ideal we have before us, and we invite the co-operation of both ministers and laymen whose ideas harmonize with ours in making real this ideal.

This morning the lake is a dream of quiet beauty, and over it the Chicago boat glided into port, on time, bringing a number of visitors for Pentwater, and among them the strenuous superintendent of the Christian Publishing Company, George L. Snively. Already he is in the woods making the chips fly, where he is to have a cottage erected within the next few weeks. It will be a close neighbor to "The Pioneer." He will probably tarry long enough to see his cottage under way before returning to St. Louis. He will co-operate with us in making this Park an ideal resort of the kind above described.

Church Extension Indispensable

By H. W. Elliott

Corresponding Secretary in Kentucky.

There may have been a time when we made fair progress without the work of our Board of Church Extension. That time is now past. The churches that can be relied on to do anything worth while in the way of contributing to build a house of worship in a mission field as a rule contribute to the Board of Church Extension and feel that they largely meet the demand for help of such character to points even in their own territory by such contribution. We had in Kentucky an example of how hard it is to raise money in any such way in the work of W. J. Dodge to raise funds for the house of worship at Jackson. The interest attached to this place on account of local circumstances made it easier to secure funds by visiting the churches than it would have been to secure help for some other place. With all this to help it was exceedingly difficult and the enterprise could not have been undertaken, or accomplished, without the Board of Church Extension making a loan. This is practically true of every building we have put up in late years in our Kentucky mission field, and will be just as true of the situation in the years to come. Without the help of the Board of Church Extension we would probably have lost our house at South Louisville after it was built and dedicated. The utmost infinite patience of the Board has been forcibly illustrated with some of the Kentucky mission churches. We have a case now in which the whole debt is overdue, and only a short time ago interest for nearly two years was paid, and they are still willing at Kansas City to bear with this place and give them more time. If we pay for the houses now built in our mission field and build others that ought to be built, we must have the help of church extension.

Compared with the benefit derived from this fund our contributions to church extension seem almost contemptible. We have nothing to be proud of in the record we make year by year. Kentucky gave last year for foreign missions $22,017.69 (that is during our last fiscal year), and for the same period gave to church extension $4,508.55. Half this amount was loaned to one struggling mission located in a population of 40,000 people.

Our Kentucky churches ought to make a record far beyond that of the past. The first Sunday in September ought to witness such an outpouring of gifts as we have never witnessed for this work that is of vital interest to us in our own state. We must do larger things than ever before. Did you ever try to borrow money from any source for a church? I have been trying to do this for the past few weeks, and find it nearly impossible to do so—have not, in fact, been able to do it. It is a safe loan and will be made doubly safe in the way that it is proposed to secure this. The Board of Church Extension can not lend this, for it is to be used to remodel a house. From every point of view we need to increase our support to this great work and ought September 1 to make such an advance in committing to the hands of our Board of Church Extension funds for this divine enterprise as will at least be decently creditable to a great brotherhood, such as we have in old Kentucky.

Faith—Not Feeling

By C. F. Ladd

God says: "The just shall live by faith"—not feeling. And yet many who should know better live by feeling rather than faith. If these people depended upon Christ as much as they do upon their feelings, they would be better Christians and their service for Christ would be far more effectual.

It is a grave mistake to be governed by the feelings; they mislead and can not be trusted. The Christian life is not a matter of feeling, but faith in Jesus Christ.

Nowhere in the Bible, which is our guide, are we taught to serve the Lord because we feel like it, and yet feeling seems to be the foundation of the religion of a vast multitude. Reader, are you a disciple of Christ, of feeling?

Our Lord never told his disciples, "Follow me"—if you feel like it. Neither did he say, "Watch and pray"—when you feel like it. The feeling that entered into his teaching was love and sympathy—feeling for others. This is a very helpful and practical "feeling" and is not a spasmodic experience that works by fits and starts.

To be constantly following the feelings is an evidence of unstableness. It will result in backsliding. Some do not attend church unless they happen to "feel like it." And many who do attend will take no part in the service unless they "feel like it." In fact, the one great excuse for failure in Christian service is "feeling," and it is a poor excuse. Let all such remember that they must attend the judgment, and give account of themselves to God, whether they feel like it or not.

Reader, do you not realize that to profess to be a Christian is a solemn thing? It means something—whether you feel it or not. By such a profession you assume certain responsibilities. The world is watching the professed Christian, and the eyes of God are upon him. You cannot deceive him. As he looks at you now, what does he see—a servant of feeling, and a service both unsatisfactory and ineffectual? Surely the one who professes to love and follow Christ, and yet who loves his own way and follows it, is far from being Christ-like. Such service can but result in failure, disappointment.

Dear one, what is your life? Do you serve Christ faithfully, or, as you feel like it? Are you really a Christian—according to your conviction of what a Christian should be? Remember that Christianity is a life of constant service, and not a series of spasmodic spurts.

There is something to do all the time, regardless of feelings, and God expects you to do your share, be it waiting upon him, or working with him. You can not shirk your responsibility without injury to yourself. Carelessness leads from Christ to unrighteousness. Beware of it.

"The just shall live by faith." Are you living that way?

Mendota, Ill.

RELIANCE.

Not to the swift, the race;
Not to the strong, the fight;
Not to the righteous, perfect grace;
Not to the wise, the light.

But often faltering feet
Come surest to the goal.
And they who walk in darkness meet
The sunrise of the soul.

A thousand times by night
The Syrian hosts have died;
A thousand times the vanquished right
Has risen glorified.

The truth the wise men sought
Was spoken by a child;
The alabaster box was brought
In trembling hands defiled.

Not from my torch, the gleam,
But from the stars above;
Not from our hearts, life's crystal stream,
But from the depths of Love.

Our English Conference

By William Durban

I have just returned from Liverpool to London, after attending in the former city the Annual Conference of the Christian Association. It was our twenty-seventh annual gathering of delegates and visitors representing our own Churches of Christ. I wish that I could speak more expansively than I do when I call this our English Conference. It ought to be Scottish, Welsh and Irish, as well as English. As our American brethren so nobly send us missionaries to England to promote the cause of Christian Unity, I wish, as I have said again and again, that they would extend their operations to the other three sections of these British Isles. We must be profoundly grateful for what is done for England. Still, I cannot help reiterating my aspiration.

The meetings were held in the Upper Parliament Street Tabernacle, the scene of the ministries of several brethren who are now in America. The pastorate is now held by Daniel Hughes, fervent and fiery Welshman, the possessor of three trophies in the shape of bardic chairs, formerly a worker in the coal mines. Brother Hughes, like myself, came from the Baptists, and it happens that he was one of my own successors in the Baptist pastorate at Chester. His sermons are wonderful prose poems.

A memorable feature of the Session at Liverpool was the Conference Sermon, delivered by a leading Liverpool Baptist, Rev. John Thomas, M. A. This minister of Myrtle Street Church, famous for the pastorate of the late Hugh Stowell Brown, is one of the brightest pulpit ornaments of his denomination. In asking him to be the Conference Preacher this year, we followed the custom, now so much in vogue amongst Christian people, of soliciting a sermon from some representative outsider. Thus we save ourselves from the imputation of willingly taking up the attitude of intransigent Ishmaelites in which some excellent people, such, for instance, as the Darbyite Plymouth Brethren, commonly styled Exclusives, appear to delight as much as do the Roman Catholics, the Christadelphians, and the Moslems. All these have just one thing in common—their frozen exclusiveness. It was said by a frank critic of a certain church of unsympathetic folk that they were very united because they were all frozen together. There are even churches of Christ—I say so because I know some of them very well indeed—which are also thus unified just as an iceberg is absolutely united. All its elements are congealed, but it would be death to live on even the sublimest iceberg.

I shall never forget the purely Christological and intensely Scriptural sermon which Mr. Thomas gave us from the very depths of his soul. I think it was the kind of discourse that none but a Welsh coal miner could have delivered. A man must be first a Welshman, and then secondly, a coal miner to elaborate such an address. For it went into the profoundest depth of thought on the eternal life possessed and imparted by the suffering Christ, and it set us revelling on topics related to the mountain peaks of imagination. When I have wandered about amongst the mountains and valleys of Wales, where waterfalls sing; where eagles wing their pathway above; where the Atlantic roar echoes around the coasts near by; where you hear in white villages nestling among the crags the music of the ancient Cymric tongue, that ideal language for preaching; I have understood why the inhabitants of the "prettiest country in the world," as I have heard Dr. W. T. Moore denominate it, are at once a nation of poets and of pietists. Very few English people are poets. Very few Welsh people are unpoetic. And poetry and religion are twins.

Another singular feature of our Conference can never be forgotten. It was an address on Christian Socialism by the Rev. John Wakeford, B. D., Vicar of St. Margaret's, Anfield, a suburb of Liverpool. This Anglican clergyman is a High Churchman. I suppose, therefore, that he would entertain many opinions diametrically opposite to ours in various directions. His appearance on our platform was therefore another sign that we do not cultivate the exclusiveness which produces theological ostracism. I rejoice to be connected with churches which do not refuse to give a hearing to those Christian people who disagree with our position, but display, on the contrary, a desire to enter into friendly relations with those whom we certainly cannot win by repulsion, but whom we might hope to convince by applying to them the positive, instead of the negative, pole of our spiritual magnet. We were treated to a rich feast. Mr. Wakeford is an orator who preaches every Sunday to a fascinated throng of hearers. He philosophised brilliantly against German or State Socialism, but made a fine case for Christian Socialism. A discussion followed. This was not quite as edifying as the clergyman's address, nor could we expect that it would be. Some of us rambled incoherently in our talk and none of us appeared to be able to speak with authority as experts on the topic. But the occasion was one to set us all thinking on a subject concerning which opinion at present is everywhere confused.

What about our own men at the Conference, and our own women? Those who spoke gave us a good time. Two of our missionaries from Asia are at home for the year. Miss Mary L. Clarke, Damoh, discoursed at length, and very instructively, concerning Hindu characteristics, and W. R. Hunt, of Chu Cheo, had much to say that was impressive on China. After the missionary meeting a communion service was conducted by a newly arrived minister, J. H. Coultard, late of Paw Paw, Mich., the Pastor Elect at Birkenhead, in succession to Brother Moss, who has left us to return to his former people at Bluefield, Va., greatly to his credit and theirs also. Another pastor is an old friend in a new guise. H. E. Proctor has returned from America. He was one of our Birkenhead boys who went to study in the United States, and has for a brief period held a pastoral post; and on his return has been elected to fill the vacant pulpit at Lancaster. He addressed us on the Duty of Christian Endeavorers to the local church. A notable address was that by Brother Moberly, the minister who is succeeding so admirably at Southampton, where a real revival has of late been in progress. That beautiful city, the gateway to Southern England, is booming with prosperity and is rejoicing in prospects of immensely enlarged intercourse with the outer world. Brother Mobley and his people are able to give one of the best reports ever chronicled by the Southampton Church of Christ. At our new station in Swindon the faithful congregation is urgently asking for a resident pastor. This is an encouraging proof of their great earnestness and zeal. It is a delightful experience to visit these Swindon Christians as a preacher. I have had the pleasure of doing so many times during the past year. These people have warmly welcomed any of us who have gone to evangelize or in any capacity to minister amongst them. It is expected that we shall in time see this cause grow into a flourishing Church of Christ.

The cause of Christian Unity is not going back in this country, but is distinctly advancing. Recently the Bishop of London, who is on the point of paying his first visit to America, preached a vigorous sermon to college students, in which he emphasized most fervently the need for a more sympathetic attitude on the part of Anglicans to their Free Church brethren. That is a new note in the bishop's preaching. He has never before uttered a word in this direction that has been reported. But he always shows a keen appreciation of the signs of the times. And the signs indicate that Christian Unity will ere long be recognized as the chief need of Christendom.

The Attitude of the Church to Labor—II

Congress Address

By I. J. Cahill

(Concluded from August 1.)

It is not too much to say that in the present time laboring people have had the worst of the bargain in the distribution of the products of industry. The Church of Jesus Christ can not avoid sympathizing with the oppressed. Time is lacking to enter into details, but when 20,000 little children are to-day employed in the textile mills of the South alone—"because it is necessary or we can not have our profits"—there is oppression somewhere. Children on the breakers in the mining districts of Pennsylvania, ruining their bodies before they are grown; men worked under such conditions that they are worn out and discarded at 45; such things as these cry out to heaven of oppression and the Church can not but hear and sympathize and help.

Church members are so numerous that the Church is, potentially, society, and if society does not arise to correct these crying evils something is wrong with the Church. If we dare to follow Christ as the Master of the divine art of living here and now we must be convinced that such a condition of affairs is good neither for oppressor nor oppressed.

The fundamental error of men to-day in the heat of the industrial battle, on either side, is to count everything in dollars and cents. The spirit of class selfishness is rampant—and it is fatal to highest human interests. Class selfishness has wrought harm to the world in all the ages, whether in the form of militarism, ecclesiasticism or aristocracy. It is still inimical to the best interests of humanity whether it be seen in labor union or in employers' association. Class selfishness takes hold of the wrong end of the problem. It blights wherever it touches. It never cures, but only creates the greater need for cure.

The Church of the twentieth century has a mighty problem and an opportunity for glorious service in lifting up men's eyes. Two things the world today needs that the Church can give: Changed ideals, and, resulting therefrom, a condition of mutual trust.

Men's ideals are low. The almighty dollar sways public policy and private thinking. The laborer who is oppressed is oppressed because the dollar is powerful. Yet he proceeds on the basis of the almighty dollar in seeking relief from his oppression. The capitalist, wearied with the struggle, beset on every side by the craftiness and ruthlessness of competition, harassed by the unsettled condition of labor seeks solace in himself becoming a devotee to the great bright god of gold.

Humanity stands in need of higher ideals; it is for the Church to minister here. Then in the matter of men's distrust of each other—precisely here is the Church's privilege. To hold men to such high ideals that frankness and honesty obtains in the business world. To raise up a generation of men who will swear to their own hurt and change not. To do these things is to prepare the way for the coming of a better day. It will be better for every one concerned. Selfishness defeats its own ends; this the world is coming to see as a correct theory; presently it will be ready to trust to it as a practical working basis of life.

Manifestly the Church can not settle out of hand the labor problem. Economic principles are involved that are not within the Church's province. But manifestly principles of righteousness are even more deeply involved and this is the Church's province. The Church is interested in the problem, for it is a problem that intimately concerns people. The Church is not organized to champion either side in the economic struggle. But the Church of Jesus Christ loves humanity; loving humanity she can not but seek the good of men. The Spirit of Christ in the Church demands expression, just as Jesus himself wrought works of helpfulness when here to relieve distress. They are called miracles; he called them "signs" and signs they were, for they were simply his expression of himself with his great heart of love and his power to heal. The Church can not but express herself, her real self by her attitude of interest and helpfulness in all problems that concern the welfare of men. The Church will do much in this cause. She will do much indirectly and she will do something directly. She will do less directly than she otherwise would because she is handicapped for funds.

So many of her people are working people who have not means to give largely to social betterment. The few who are wealthy have not caught the vision of possible ministry to humanity. They are not wholly to blame, for it is not certain that leaders in religious enterprises could administer wisely large sums of money for such purposes.

If a direct and vigorous campaign were to be waged for the correction of industrial ills, it would require a tremendous sum to meet the overwhelming need. For the oppression of the people is grievous. It is quite possible that this is not the best method after all. From among the people a leader shall arise that will learn and lead the way to the land of promise.

I can not dismiss this phase of the subject, without calling attention to the fact that in the great work of forming public sentiment and directing the public conscience the Church is shorn of her power by the folly of division. A united Church would be tenfold more powerful in speaking to the public conscience. In an age of industrial combination—in a day when commercial enemies cease to bite and tear one another and join hands in combined effort for a common cause it is startling to be told that brethren in Christ can not love one another and work together. When the Church gets a sufficient missionary conscience and a sufficient social conscience, the very pressure of the burdens resting on her and the joy of fellowship in service will cement the people of Christ in one compact body, and then the Church will be invincible.

The Church will approach this problem in the spirit of her Master. She will come to minister. She will perform her ministry by inspiring men to rise to their highest, to scorn that which is mean or low or selfish; she will bring in the day when to serve will be royal, when hearts will be too great to be consumed in thoughts of self.

She will direct men's thoughts to move on the higher plane of spiritual life and thought. Then men, all men, employer

A PROFESSIONAL WOMAN

Experiments Made with Food.

A professional woman in New York, connected with one of the large institutions there, has had a curious experience in using a certain kind of food. It seems she had a serious illness and was at the point of death, the brain and body in the last stages of exhaustion. She writes as follows:

"I have no objection to the public knowing of the wonderful transformation my system has undergone by the use of Grape-Nuts. I began using the food when convalescing and while in an exceedingly low condition. I used a small quantity and became so fascinated with the flavour that I gradually discontinued nearly all other food, including tea and coffee.

"I have gained 20 pounds in flesh, and am a marvel to all my friends who know of my former state of health. There are about fifty families who have adopted the use of Grape-Nuts because of my experience."

The makers of Grape-Nuts select certain parts of the grains of the field that contain delicate particles of phosphate of potash and albumen. These elements, when combined in the human body, go directly to rebuild the gray matter in the brain and nerve centers of the body.

This is a demonstrated fact and can be proven by any one who cares to make the test. When one nourishes and builds up the brain and nerve centres, that is practically the keynote to the whole health proposition, for when the nervous system is in perfect poise, all parts of the body respond. "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

and emplove, alike, will come to look upon the daily task as a form of ministry, as a medium of self-expression, of giving to the world what one has been fitted to contribute to the world's need. Occupation will be opportunity for service and life will loom large in men's minds, and dividends and profits cease to be the end and aim of existence.

The Church will teach men to think of life and of achievement, not in terms of dollars and cents, but in terms of manhood. Then an industrial system will be measured not by its profits but by the character of manhood it permits to grow up, yea by the manhood it positively develops in the world.

The business of the Church to-day as always is to make men. Precisely that. That men should be large in heart, true in purpose, well balanced because taking God into account, wise because godfearing, patient because believing,—this is the aim of the Church in her ministry to manhood. The industrial order needs readjusting. Not by revolution but by evolution. In this readjustment there will be need of great leaders. Heretofore the labor cause has lacked in leadership. A few men have shown the proper qualities of soberness of mind, poise, unselfishness, breadth of view, but they have been too few. A chief cause for that has been the ease with which men rose out of the class of the employed into that of the employer. Present conditions render this increasingly difficult to do. It requires ever larger sums of capital to embark in business for oneself. As a result men fitted for leadership will be condemned to serve in the ranks. Out of these will come the needed leadership from the people themselves. When such a man arises he should have been trained by the Church to such self-control, to such far-sighted vision, to such love of justice that he will be well equipped for the arduous task to which he is called. Let it be hoped by friends of the Church that she will be so true to her mission as to be not found wanting, but to be able just here to render needed assistance, not to the laboring men, let us say, but to humanity. For the best world for all is the world that has in it the most widely diffused manhood and integrity. When all men are brought to a condition of trustworthiness and to the happy condition of trust it will be a better world for all—for the strong as well as for the weak.

The Church must work to produce manhood. The change must be in men as well as in environment. Character as well as institutions must be transformed. Industrial peace will be secured, not when justice obtains in the earth but when men have learned to love justice and to deserve it. The man needs preparation as well as his conditions and environment. It will not bring peace to give him just laws unless he have learned to love justice and to abide by its decisions at all cost.

So the man himself is the problem after all.

Well may the Church move forward to her God-given ministry in the world with high hope and full faith. If Jesus could believe in the men of his day, much more can we believe in the manhood of to-day. Thousands of business men to-day would gladly be freed from some of the cruelties of the present order if only they knew how—if they could see their way clear. The low standard of "success at any cost" and "business is business" is unsatisfying to an ever-increasing number of alert, enterprising business men. The leaven of the high ideals of the teaching of the Christ is not lost but is working in the hearts of men. Already men have risen to the plane of self-restraint that allows a rival a fairly won victory. Men play the game and abide by the issue. Men who can do that can be brought to scorn the taking advantage of the weak; they can be brought to refuse to make profit of the hope of youth in employing child labor; they can be brought to traffic no longer in the virtue of woman by offering employment at less than a living wage. The same simple gospel of love that has brought us thus far on our way will carry us farther if we follow the divine leading.

In a word, then, the Church should not be blind to the present conditions and the crying need for full justice among men; she must not fail to see and to make the application of her message to this urgent situation; but by all means she should not forget that her's is an eternal gospel, for all men in all conditions in all time, and that her first call is for the higher manhood. Having brought this she will thereby have set in motion forces for the righting of all wrongs and for ushering in in its fullness of the kingdom of God among men.

A Sister's Admonition to Preachers

"Begin low,
Speak slow;
Rise higher,
Strike fire."

That one of our strongest preachers in the Christian ministry took this for his motto in pulpit oratory may perhaps be the reason many others think it the "ne plus ultra" of all public speaking. To pose as a critic has no place in our ambitions, but it does seem as if common sense ought to suggest to every public speaker the absurdity of this style of delivery.

If you are a preacher and addicted to this mode, we beg of you to do the warming up process somewhere before the church services begin, then those of us who are not totally deaf, yet dislike making ourselves conspicuous by the use of an ear trumpet, may be able to hear the reading of God's word, the prayer, the announcements and the first part of the sermon. We once heard that it was said of Isaac Errett, "Oh, he doesn't preach, he only talks." The preacher making this criticism used to yell himself hoarse while no one could understand a word he said during his flights of oratory.

Some preachers adopt the style of raising the voice to the highest pitch at times, then suddenly dropping it to a whisper, inaudible save to those near by.

This may all be oratory; we cannot say, as we have not been educated along that line, but we do positively know it is not common sense, nor kindness to those with defective hearing, of whom there are likely to be a few in every large congregation.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

One of the Afflicted.

How shall we guess the whole, who can only guess a part?
How can we read the life, when we can not spell the heart?
How shall we measure another, we who can never know,
From the juttings above the surface, the depth of the vein below?

—F. R. Havergal.

NEW USE FOR BUTTER

Prevents Boiling Over.

Coffee frequently produces biliousness and all of the accompanying distress, such as loss of appetite, dyspepsia, bowel troubles, etc. A lady from Ill., says: "I had used coffee many years, and though I took great care in making it, felt its ill effects very seriously. It made me bilious and robbed me of my appetite for breakfast.

"I always had trouble with dyspepsia while I used it. I was told by physicians that I had catarrh of the stomach, and came to believe there was no help for me. Two years ago I quit the use of coffee and began to use Postum Food Coffee. At first I missed the stimulant, although the taste of the food coffee was delicious.

"In a few days I forgot all about my coffee, in the satisfaction I derived from Postum, and soon found that my appetite returned, the bilious condition and dyspepsia disappeared, so that now I am proud to say that at the age of seventy-five years I enjoy my food as well as when young and all my dyspeptic symptoms and stomach trouble have gone.

"These troubles had been with me for most of my life and it is really remarkable that I am now so perfectly well. To say that I am grateful does not express it. Once in a while I find a person who does not like Postum, but I always find it is because it has not been properly prepared. There is but one way to make good Postum, and that is to make it exactly according to directions, allowing it to boil full fifteen minutes, not after it is placed on the stove, but after the real boiling begins. Use a small piece of butter, about the size of a pea, to prevent boiling over." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

We have just received this note from Z. T. Sweeney, who is on a vacation, we presume, at Windemere, Ontario: "I am in hearty sympathy with the proposition to endow Bethany College with $500,000, and if it can be done I will contribute $500 to secure it."

A great opportunity to put money into a permanent investment in aid of missions and in the care and education of worthy children.

Individuals, churches, Sunday-schools and societies are asked to help. Address Wharton Memorial Home, Hiram, O.

—We have everything to encourage us in our church extension work. The plan is an admirable one to loan money to a mission at a low rate, to be returned, and go out to help other churches. The plan is working. Last year eighty congregations paid their loans in full and more than $670,000 has been returned on loans since the beginning of this work in 1888. Churches to the number of 1,089 have been aided by the board in forty-four states and Canada and only $563 have been lost on bad loans.

—J. S. Homan, who has been giving much of his time to rescue mission work, is, according to Claire L. Waite, now carrying on a remarkable religious work among the old soldiers at the National Soldiers' Home, Milwaukee, Wis. A few months ago he held an afternoon service on the Lord's day, which was attended by few at first, but that service has become established and is now one of the most valuable features of the religious work of the city. Brother Homan is assisted by the singers of the church in Milwaukee. He is preaching during each Lord's day morning during August for Brother Waite, who is on a vacation, and the Christian Endeavor Society is carrying on the evening service.

—We are always glad to hear of good work that is being done, though we can not always make mention of the fact in our columns just when it is called to our attention. Especially is this true of prominent representative brethren like our secretaries, who are constantly on the move. From time to time, we get such a notice as the following: "We have recently had the pleasure of a visit from our State Superintendent of Bible Schools, J. H. Hardin. He held for us a most helpful institute. Brother Hardin's work in this line is excellent and a school is fortunate to have his presence, even for a few days. He will follow the institute with a teachers' training class of twenty-four members." This note is from B. F. Creason, pastor at Lathrop, Mo.

DISFIGURED FOR LIFE

Is the Despairing Cry of Thousands Afflicted with Unsightly Skin Humors.

Do you realize what this disfiguration means to sensitive people? It means isolation, seclusion. It is a bar to social and business success. Do you wonder that despair seizes upon these sufferers? Blood and skin humors are most obstinate to cure or even relieve. It is an easy matter to claim to cure them, but quite another to do so. The Cuticura Remedies (consisting of Cuticura Soap to cleanse the skin, Cuticura Ointment to heal the skin, and Cuticura Resolvent Pills to purify the blood) have earned the right to be called Skin Cures, because for years they have met with most remarkable success.

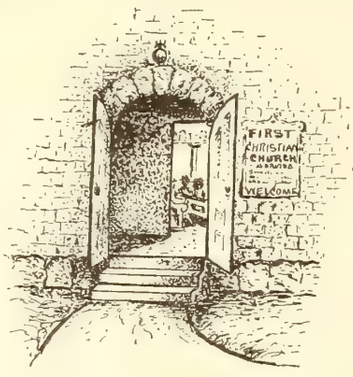
—We regret to learn that S. M. Bernard has resigned at Boulder, Cal. This is due to the fact of his recent bereavement. The church made special inducements to keep Brother Bernard and offered to give him a long vacation for traveling, but he feels that he must get back to Kentucky, where he left his boy after his wife's death. There has been a net increase of 200 in the Boulder church and its debt has been paid off during the five years of Brother Bernard's pastoral relations with it.

—F. E. Meigs, one of our oldest missionaries in China and president of our school at Nanking, arrived in this country a few weeks ago, bringing his daughter with him to place her in school in Christian College, and to look after another mission the nature of which he will explain to our readers. He is at present in New York city working on the Kuling school for the children of missionaries. Brother Meigs will receive a hearty welcome from the brethren and we hope they will help him to carry out his special mission.

—C. A. Freer enters upon the pastorate at Bedford, Ohio, at once. Bedford is a suburb of Cleveland, and the church there is a historical one and one of the best in the state. Brother Freer received a hearty and unanimous call, and our information is that the work gives every promise of success under his leadership. During the greater part of the past year he has been engaged in evangelistic work, and was chosen by the A. C. M. S. to represent it in Oklahoma and the Indian Territory. We shall be glad to have "our Ohio man" settled down once more.

—H. A. Denton, Centennial secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, spent a morning at the Christian Publishing Company's plant when passing through the city. Brother Denton has been making a round of the conventions and has fitted into the work admirably, as we knew he would. As yet he has not given special attention to the Centennial side of the campaign, as there has been found work enough for Brother Wright, Brother Ranshaw and Brother Denton in the regular routine of the field and office duties. But Brother Denton will soon give his attention especially to the Centennial propaganda. His family is still at Maryville, Mo.

—L. S. Cupp is taking a vacation and will not occupy his pulpit at the Hyde Park Church, Kansas City, Mo., until September 1. Until then James Sharratt, one of our general evangelists, is supplying and we understand the work is kept going on in good condition. Brother Sharratt will begin a meeting at Ashdown, Ark., September 1. There is no church of Christ there and only about seven Disciples, yet this is the county-seat with a population of about some 1,500. Brother Sharratt wants a large tent and other things that are necessary for such a meeting. He expects F. O. McCauley, the singing evangelist of Washington, to assist him. He is ready to make engagements for the winter's work. Address 813 West 21st st., Kansas City, Mo.



—We very much regret to record the death of Flournoy Payne, pastor of our church at Rifle, Colo. We have already announced that he was seriously ill with typhoid fever. He battled with this disease for almost five weeks, and while he was very sick from the beginning the end came peacefully. Brother Payne was one of our energetic young preachers and was born at Lexington, Ky., in 1871. He graduated from the Bible College in 1896, and worked his way through college, preaching for the church at Washington, Ky. After pastorates at Greenville, Miss., and Athens, Ga., he was induced to go to Colorado and take up the work of the East Side Church, Denver, from which Leonard G. Thompson had resigned in order to devote himself to the state corresponding secretaryship. In the latter part of 1899 Brother Payne removed to Colorado City in order to have the advantage of further college work. For two years he served the Twenty-fifth Street Church, Baltimore, Md., later coming to Kentucky and then back to Colorado, serving the Berkeley Church, after which he entered upon a temporary charge of the work at Rifle, and finally yielded to the importunate requests to locate definitely there. On the day of his death his body was carried by fourteen citizens in relay all the way to the station, and every business house in the town, including the saloons, was closed. The funeral services were held at the Highland Church, Denver, in charge of its minister, J. E. Pickett, and several of our ministers took part, the principal address being given by Brother Thompson. Memorial services were held at the Rifle church also. The interment was in Fairmount cemetery.

Planning for Fall and Winter.

This is the season when large numbers of ministers and superintendents begin to plan their Bible school work for the coming year. We wish to indicate some of the lines to be undertaken and some of the ways in which we are ready to help.

It is understood that the primary purpose of the Bible school is to teach the Word of God so that believers may be edified and all others of right age may be brought to faith. It is the first duty of the superintendent and minister to see that the Word is fully taught by proper and competent teachers. Unless this is accomplished you have failed to conduct a Bible school.

The whole Word of God can not be taught from the International lessons alone, that is, by using only the portions of Scriptures which make up the regular lessons. You can teach the whole Bible, and because of such teaching can teach the International lesson better, if you will use in your school the system of supplemental lessons given in our teachers' quarterlies and in the Superintendent's Quarterly. If the teacher prepares this lesson properly, it can be taught the class in five or seven minutes. The superintendent also, with proper preparation, can review the whole school in it in five or six minutes from the blackboard in a way that will forever fix it upon the minds of the pupils.

The superintendent should be supplied with the proper teachers' quarterly for his grade. This will insure the teaching of the whole Bible to the whole school. And at the same time a broader foundation is laid for the teaching of the special lesson. If any of our schools have not seen our new Teachers' Quarterly, they should.

The superintendent and the minister should insist upon the teachers so qualifying themselves that they "have no need to be ashamed." Our public school teachers are carefully trained. How long shall the church neglect to qualify its teachers? How long shall the church suffer unqualified teachers to teach?

Beginning the first week of September, the superintendent will find in his quarterly a program for a teachers' meeting which will bring the teaching force up to a high standard. It will take hard work, but the result will more than justify the pains. Not to undertake it because it is difficult is to justly bear a reproach.

First of all, the teacher's meeting will qualify the teacher to teach next Lord's Day's lesson properly. The next section of the hour will acquaint the teacher with the scientific principles of his fine art. The next section of the meeting will acquaint him with the working of the organization which we call the Bible school. Is such knowledge worth the trouble?

The wise and careful minister and superintendent will determine that it is and that it must be acquired. In addition to the Bible the superintendent will need two books. Adams' Primer on Teaching, 25 cents, and Lawrance, How to Conduct the Sunday-school, $1.25. Order these from the Christian Publishing Company, out of the school funds, as you order other supplies.

This regular course of study will continue from September until the following June.

Another matter must be attended to. Young people who give evidence of future usefulness in the church must be trained. For this end, beginning October first, there will be given each week in "Our Young Folks," suggestions for carrying on a Normal Training Class. The subject, the lesson, the manner of conducting the class, will be carefully given. Are you planning ahead?

Colchester's Church Burned.

The Christian church here was totally destroyed by fire on the night of August 6. The seats and furniture were all saved. The fire was first discovered at about 10 o'clock and the entire building had burned to the ground in less than an hour. The building was frame and valued at about $4,000. No insurance on the property., R. P. Crow.

Colchester, Ill.

A card from the pastor, N. E. Corey, indicates that the fire was caused by electric wires. The brethren will meet in a hall and rebuild as soon as possible.

For Kansas Disciples.

At the May meeting of the Kansas State Board of Missions I was requested to go out into the state and secure three thousand dollars in personal gifts to put our work upon its feet for the jubilee year.

Will not the friends who read these lines, whom I have not been able to see, consider it a matter of special service to send to my address a substantial personal offering. Of course gifts outside of the state will not be rejected. I have sought to find five persons who will give $100, ten who will give $50, forty who will give $25, and one hundred who will give $10. Send all offerings to me at 701 Jackson, Topeka, Kan.

J. M. Lowe.

M. E. Harlan.

The grim reaper whose name is death, has his harvest at all seasons. We announced briefly in our last issue the departure from these mortal shores of our beloved Brother M. E. Harlan, late pastor of the Sterling Place Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. He had been compelled to resign his work there on account of failing health, more than a year ago, and a letter from his wife, received recently, had warned us of the gravity of his condition. We knew enough of him personally and of his work to highly esteem him as an able and consecrated minister of the Word. Our last association with him was in the great inter-church conference in New York city, in whose deliberations he took the deepest interest. His work in that field, painstaking and conscientious as it was, made severe drafts upon him, which ultimately compelled his resignation. We can not do better than to quote from a letter of Sister Moses, who has had opportunities for knowing and estimating Brother Harlan, which few of us have had. In her letter of August 4 to the Editor, she says:

"Our Brother M. E. Harlan was released from his suffering yesterday afternoon at 3:15 o'clock. He died at the Oxford Sanitarium, Oxford, O. No members of his family were with him as they had not been warned of the nearness of death. We suppose from this it came suddenly. Mrs. Harlan and Paul, the 10-year-old son, have gone to Oxford. Earl, the grown son, will join her there. Brother Harlan's body will be taken to South Haven, Kan., Mrs. Harlan's family home, for burial. We dare have no feeling but gratitude and resignation. God is good to release him from his great suffering. He was long a friend in our family and was for a time our pastor in Topeka. He was a tireless worker, a faithful friend and a true-hearted Christian. He knew how to meet men and commanded their respect. He was one of the best and most helpful friends to young people I have ever known. His friendship was personal and practical. In all his work his wife was by his side, faithful, appreciative and discriminating. Theirs was a true marriage. When he saw health slipping from him he was earnestly desirous that Mrs. Harlan should serve the interests of the church he loved so well, and when she was chosen as corresponding secretary of our work his thought, his interest and his prayers were given her steadily. Pray for her in her sorrow. Mrs. Helen E. Moses."

We can only tender our sincerest and most heartfelt sympathy for our beloved Sister Harlan and her two sons in their great bereavement, and pray that God's grace may be sufficient for them in this hour of need.

Marion E. Harlan passed to the higher life on Saturday afternoon, August 3, at Oxford, Ohio. More than a year ago he was compelled to give up his pastorate at Brooklyn, N. Y., on account of complete nervous prostration. Since then his health has declined steadily and the end was not unexpected.

Dr. Harlan was born in Kokomo, Indiana, in 1859. He spent seven years in Drake University, graduating in 1891. In 1903 his alma mater conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws. In his college days he was married to Jennie Greeslin, and she has always been a worthy and able helper in all his varied activities. They have two sons, Earl, aged 22, and Paul, 10. Mrs. Harlan is now national corresponding secretary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

Brother Harlan's pastorates have been at Wellington, Atchison and Topeka, Kansas and at Brooklyn, N. Y. He did much for the upbuilding of our state work in Kansas. He was for a year president of the state Christian Endeavor Union. His seven years pastorate at Sterling Place church, Brooklyn, revealed him at his best and highest usefulness. The work in this difficult metropolitan field called out all of his force and resourcefulness. He literally laid down his life for the cause of Christ in Brooklyn. Brother Harlan was in great demand as a convention speaker and in interdenominational work. He was active in all the interests of the Disciples, being a life director of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and a life member in both our other missionary societies. His body will be laid to rest in the family lot in the cemetery at South Haven, Kan.

And Still the Offerings Come.

The First Church of Braddock, Pa., sends a liberal offering for the San Francisco work.

The Central Church, Austin, Texas, is not unmindful of the needs of the San Francisco churches and sends in a willing offering.

The Keota, Ia., church stands on the list of those willing to aid the weaker brother and sends an offering for the San Franscisco reconstruction work.

The First Church of Disciples of Christ, New York city, sends in a contribution of $67.18 for the aid of their brethren in San Francisco.

From Fulton, Mo., comes a generous offering for the aid of the California work.

The Sunday-school of the New Philadelphia (O.) Christian Church sends a most generous offering for the reconstruction work in San Francisco.

Springfield, Mo., August 12.—R. Clyde Harlow, son of and singer with our evangelist, W. E. Harlow, passed away at 7:45 Monday morning, August 12. He made a hard struggle for this life, but God wanted him in the life beyond.—F. F. Walters.

[We regret deeply to get this message. Just a few days ago we were talking of this young man of so great promise, and wondering about the condition of his health. It will be remembered that he contracted a heavy cold while singing in one of his father's meetings and was compelled to go to the Southwest, where a hemorrhage from the lungs made it known that he was down with the white plague.—Ed.]

Eastern Pennsylvania Convention.

The seventy-fourth annual convention of the Christian Missionary Society, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and the third annual meeting of the Ministerial Association of Eastern Pennsylvania conjointly held at Berwick, Pa., July 22-25, 1907, inclusive, has passed into history as the best and most notable convening of the Churches of Christ in Eastern Pennsylvania.

The convention was held in the new and beautiful, thoroughly equipped building of the First Church of Christ. Through the untiring activities of its pastor, George C. Zeigler, assisted by his people as a unit, nothing in any department of entertainment in the way of comfort, convenience, or facilities for work was left undone, not a hitch occurred in any part of the whole working machinery of the convention. It was a love feast of brethren sitting in fellowship in heavenly places from start to finish.

The personnel, the high standard of work and the magnificent addresses were freely commented upon and complimented by visiting clergy and aliens heretofore unacquainted with our people and their work.

It would be impossible for me to select the best address made; they were all meritorious in their own field of thought.

There were two addresses of which I must speak. The first, by J. O. Arnold, M. D., of Philadelphia, was unique. The subject was "The Preacher as Seen by the Layman: A Diagnosis of the Disease of the Pulpiteer." It stirred up the boys, young and old, who freely discussed it from every viewpoint, much to the merriment of the whole convention, in a fine spirit of truth-seeking.

The other address constituted part of that superb session of the C. W. B. M. It was given by the Nestor of the society, Mrs. Helen E. Moses. In fact she gave an address on her visit to Jamaica not scheduled. The address of the evening session is the titleless one on the program of which I speak. Were I to give it a title I would call it "The Triumph of Faith's Activities." It was of such high order spiritually and mentally that those unacquainted with the speaker and her history marvelled as those who first heard the Master speak. To us who know her it was what we expected—the dew of heaven falling on Hermon.

The officers of the C. W. B. M. for this year are: President, Mrs. C. A. Brady, Canton; vice-president, Mrs. H. F. Lutz, Harrisburg; secretary, Miss Rebecca Morrison, and treasurer, Mrs. J. B. Martin, both of Philadelphia; state organizer, Miss Elsie Taylor, Bradock.

The officers of Ministerium are: President, C. A. Frick, Westmoor; vice-president, E. E. Manly, Scranton; secretary, L. O. Knipp, Plymouth; treasurer, E. E. Cowperthwaite, Wilkesbarre.

The officers of the Eastern Pennsylvania C. M. S. are: President, L. G. Batman, Philadelphia; vice-president, M. S. Blair, Alba; recording secretary, H. F. Keltch, Sayre; corresponding secretary, C. A. Brady, Canton; treasurer, N. J. Bitner, Beach Creek.

The next convention—the seventy-fifth—will be held in Harrisburg August, 1908, and be entertained by the First Church, of which that prince among men, H. F. Lutz, is pastor.

E. E. Cowperthwaite.

Dano-Norwegian Conference.

Among the thousands of scattered and independently standing Dano-Norwegian Christians, who have separated themselves from denominationalism and are seeking for the old paths of the old original New Testament church, we are now working hard to effect a more united and systematic work for God and humanity; also by holding frequent larger general conventions and conferences of as many representatives from the various states and districts and groups as we are able to arouse and interest. Of such we have now held five general conventions since January, 1905.

I shall this time just briefly outline the work of the two conferences of this year. The first at Irving, Minn., was held May 30 to June 2, inclusive. For colloquial discussions during the day sessions of this meeting, Eph. 4:11-16 was taken up, and the most profitable study and consideration of the truths and facts there set forth was indulged in in a most loving way by the convention, which was not a very small one, either.

We also there preached quite extensively, especially on Saturday afternoon, on the text in Acts 2:37-42, with such plainness that the old Christians, who had been believers for over seventeen years and had an assembly there for all these years, said they had not heard so much plain gospel truth during all that time. And the baptized believers in the place rejoiced exceedingly to hear the truths of God expounded to them in a way they had felt it ought to be expounded, but which they seldom had the privilege to hear so preached.

During the Lord's day of this convention, the assembly church could not hold the people. So we had to go and get a larger building, and the new, large Norwegian Lutheran church near by was kindly loaned us for the Lord's Day meetings, and the building was nearly filled. On Lord's Day afternoon we held the profitable and joyful baptismal services out by a large and beautiful lake near by. The baptized believers of the place are now earnestly considering the reorganization of their church on a more definite New Testament plan, for all which we praise the Lord. There were quite a few Christians from abroad present at this convention, and several preachers.

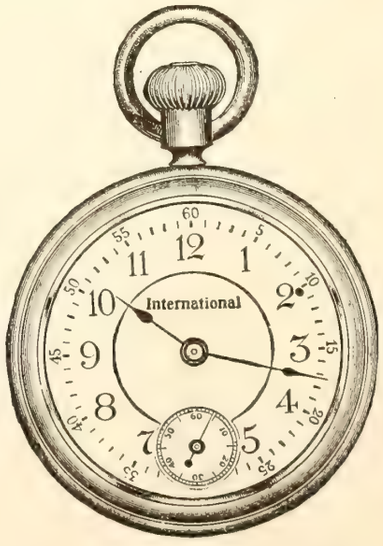
Our next and largest convention was held one month later at Dallas, Wis., June 27-30. About seventy brethren and sisters from abroad, representing a good many groups and congregations from our people, arrived and partook in this meeting. The day sessions here were used for colloquial discussion of the problem, "How shall we obtain (or attain unto) Christian unity among God's children in the practical life and work?" And many blessed truths, bearing upon this question, were brought forth during this colloquium. The evenings and Lord's day were used for evangelistic meetings. The spirit of God rested heavily upon this meeting, and with great power. Sinners sought their Saviour. Sorrowing, sick and oppressed, backsliders and others, asked the prayers of God's people, five obeyed their Lord in baptism on the Lord's Day afternoon, and the gospel of Christ was preached with force and power.

The discussion of the problem of how to obtain practical unity among Christians of our people, brought forth as a result two resolutions, which in this connection may be of considerable importance and effect upon the future work among our people. They read as follows:

"1. Resolved, That we all recognize and support Brother Osterhus and 'Bible-Vennen' in the work for the unity of the children of God, and for the building up of churches of God and his Christ among us, in every locality, according to the precepts and ordinances of the Bible, and that we all do our best each in our district, for the furtherance and promotion of this cause among our people, by also aiding the brother in the work, with prayers and means, as well as in helping to scatter and introduce the paper all we can.

"2. Resolved, That the converted believers and baptized Christians in each locality, recognize one another as brethren, and that they together constitute the church of God or the church of Christ, at each place, and that they accordingly endeavor to build and arrange everything in the church as near to the Bible precepts as possible, with their duly qualified and Biblical officers and servants in each place, and that they preach and practice 'the whole counsel of God' (Acts 20, 27), unto salvation and the saving of souls.

"Resolved furthermore, That these independent local churches of God and his Christ recognize one another, as congregations considered, as sister congregations, and that they all accordingly seek and arrange for joint work for such general undertakings as one congregation alone cannot do, such as mission work both at home and abroad, and that they to this end endeavor to hold larger general conventions for all the churches as often as it may be deemed necessary, where they then may become better and better acquainted with one another, and thus understand one another better, and hence be united in work for God and humanity, strengthened and established more and more for the glory of God and the saving of the people."



The first, as you see, bears upon the recognition of the good publication, "Bibel-Vennen" (The Bible Friend), which the Lord gave us New Year's, as a means by which to teach, instruct, edify, and lead our people into the old primitive paths of the New Testament Church.

As some of the sectic papers have tried to prejudice the people against us and our paper and its motto, this resolution, passed with a rising unanimous and most hearty vote of this whole convention, means more to us than we apparently see on the surface of it. To know that after only six months' publication, it should receive such a hearty endorsement and approval of so large a representation of our people, means a good deal. And we cannot express our gratefulness to God for setting such a stamp of approval upon it, so early in its life. This makes us want to "thank God and take courage." We are truly thankful for this blessing.

The second resolution, as you see, bears directly upon the real issue of all gospel work on earth, namely, the building up of the body of Christ in each locality in the form of genuine apostolic and true churches of God and his Christ, and to there arrange everything according to the New Testament pattern and to worship God exactly as did the first Christians of old. And that all these independent local churches then recognize one another as sister congregations truly and arrange for joint work for all such general undertakings as one congregation alone cannot do, etc. This all completes the Christian unity as set forth in the New Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ.

This resolution also means a great deal to our scattered, unorganized and non-co-operating groups of Christians among our people who have hitherto largely labored in a sort of "every-man-for-himself" manner.

As to the expenses incurred in running this paper—there is a deficit of about $280, or thereabouts, up to July 1, of this year. But considering the large amount of work done and the number of copies scattered, and the amount of seed sown for a future work, this deficit must be considered small, after all, for so large a paper. Of course, this sum is now upon our hearts and in our prayers to meet in some way, and we are hoping and praying that God will put it into the hearts of somebody who may be able and willing to spare a mite, even for this work, to assist us with a little lift just now at this time, so that we can tide it over the summer months and reach next winter, when we hope that the income will be a little increased. Quite a few of our own people have made special donations to the printing fund beside the subscription. But in spite of this, we have a deficit as named, and we therefore need the assistance of any one anywhere, who has a heart to help in this glorious and prosperous mission right in our midst and by our very doors. The International Christian Endeavor Convention

By B. B. TYLER

The convention which met in Seattle, Wash., July 10-15, was the twenty-third assembly of this character, and it was one of the best.

The attendance was small, compared with some former conventions. Probably there were 10,000 enrolled delegates and visitors; but the value of a convention is not to be measured alone, nor chiefly by the numbers; much depends on character, more on spirit and purpose. From this point of view the Seattle convention deserves to be called great. Its character was high, its spirit was earnest, its purpose was worthy.

The enthusiasm—the noisy, the explosive enthusiasm—of the Christian Endeavor movement has passed, never to return. The Seattle convention, by the side of the Minneapolis convention in 1891, for instance, was tame. But this convention in Seattle was superior to the convention in Minneapolis sixteen years ago. It was marked by sanity, steadiness, purpose, fullness, depth, strength, beyond probably any former convention. There was but little demonstration in the way of singing and shouting. Even in the great tent the singing seemed to me to be below par.

One of the questions incidentally discussed was this: "Has Christian Endeavor had Its Day?" The speaker replied to his questioner with a prompt and emphatic affirmative. Christian Endeavor has had its day. It has done a good work. As evidence of the value of its service in the days that are gone, trained and efficient men and women in the churches were referred to. But these pastors, pastoral helpers, Bible women, colporteurs, elders, evangelists, deacons, treasurers, stewards, Sunday-school teachers and superintendents received their original impulse, in many cases, their inspiration and training, in a large number, in the societies of Christian Endeavor. Yes, Christian Endeavor has had its day, and a glorious day it has been. Its day marked the inauguration, or beginning, of a new and better experience in the life and work of the church.

The thought was prominent, in this convention, that the Christian Endeavor Society is the training school of the church. In it workers for Christ and his church are developed. Herein is the permanent value of the movement. This being true, the Endeavor Society deserves the best thought and the heartiest sympathy of the pastor and the official board. It is, practically, our only training school.

But Christian Endeavor has not completed its work, far from it. Apparently it is but beginning. There are now young people in the churches to be trained for service. There will be young people to-morrow and the day after, as there were young persons yesterday and the day before. And as time passes, Christian Endeavor ought to become more efficient as a place of discipline. The best part of this remarkable movement is in the future—not in the past.

The Seattle program was practical and up-to-date. Conferences were held every day on such topics as, "Methods of Bible Study," "Missionary Methods," "Prison Work," "Work Among Seamen," "Evangelistic Work," "Temperance," the "Tenth Legion," "Good Citizenship," etc. The vice-president of the United States, Mr. Fairbanks, delivered an address on, "Our Country." Prof. Herbert L. Willett's address on "Methods of Bible Study," deserves special mention. It was unusually suggestive and helpful.

Each day, at noon, an evangelistic service was held in the Grand Opera House, addressed, chiefly, by Evangelist J. A. Francis, D. D., of New York, formerly pastor of the Riverside Baptist church. Mr. William Phillips Hall, president of "The American Bible League," presided. Higher critics, lower critics, and many who are absolutely ignorant of criticism, wrought side by side in this great convention for the moral and spiritual betterment of the church and of humankind. And this is what should be always and everywhere. This convention furnished a good working mode for the church, local, denominational, and catholic.

The rally of the Disciples was largely attended and was thoroughly enjoyable. I have never attended a more satisfactory rally. As was fitting, our national superintendent of Christian Endeavor, Claude E. Hill, of Mobile, Ala., occupied the chair.

Some of the well-known brethren present were, Colby D. Hall, of Texas; O. L. Smith, of Oklahoma; W. R. Warren, of Pennsylvania; J. T. Eshelman, of Washington; A. W. Kokendoffer, of Missouri; H. L. Willett, and Oliver W. Stewart, of Illinois; J. B. Hunley and D. W. Moore, of Colorado; and Eugene Sanderson and G. K. Berry, of Oregon. This list is, of course, imperfect, but they are the names that come to me as I write. Some who have lived long enough to be counted veterans, such as F. Walden, John Shackleford and W. F. Cowden, were present. Oliver W. Stewart gave one of the notable addresses of the convention, on, "Our Country; Its Problems and Possibilities." A. L. Chapman, of the First Christian church, won all hearts by his choice words of welcome. Of course J. H. Mohorter, of our National Benevolent Association,, was in evidence, in a quiet way.

Since I was in Seattle eight years ago, the disciples have made encouraging progress. Then they numbered seventy-five or one hundred; now they number 1,000. Then there was one congregation; now there are five. Then they met in a small house belonging to the Protestant Methodists; now they own their own houses. The First Christian church building is a credit to Seattle and is well located. Best of all, it is a living link church. We are incalculably indebted to such men as F. Walden, R. E. Dunlap, B. H. Lingenfelter, and J. T. Shuey, for our position in Seattle.

It would be unpardonable to close this letter without a mention of the conspicuity given, in the official program, of this convention, to Christian Endeavor in our missions in Mexico and Africa.

I feel good over this recognition. Don't you? B. B. TYLER,

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Meeting at Amory, Miss.

We closed with forty-two additions. Big meetings are few in Mississippi, but had other towns the kind of people at the head of the church as are J. R. Bryan and Sam Grizzal, they could have successful meetings. It is not because the south is not a ripe field, but she needs consecrated young men like these to hustle early and late, men who have faith in the plea and are not afraid to tell it. The Sunday-school has jumped from 37 to 150 in sixty days. Two hundred is the mark. M. H. Armor is the pastor, one of Mississippi's faithfuls, and a benediction to any community. J. Ross Miller led the singing, and will continue with me as song leader. We begin at Abilene, Tex., August 4. Thos. L. Cooksey.

A Fine Meeting at Lawton, Okla.

One of the greatest meetings ever held in Oklahoma was that at Lawton. It continued twenty-nine days with unabated interest. A "union" meeting was started, but in spite of opposition the revival at the Christian church grew until the house was not half large enough to accommodate the people. One hundred and eighty-three persons united with the church, a majority by baptism. The most remarkable feature, perhaps, is the fact that 160 were adults. Among these were fourteen heads of families. For six months the church had been praying for a great revival. The town was canvassed and personal workers placed over each district to look after the prospects of winning souls to Christ, who should unite with the church, and a personal call by them often had the desired effect. I have no desire to unduly praise Evangelist Fife, but cannot express myself too strongly of his sterling worth as a fearless expounder of the gospel. Clyde Fife is especially gifted as a leader of song. The chorus of fifty to seventy-five voices, accompanied by the orchestra, was one of the winning features of the revival. The success of the meeting was largely due to the effectual personal work. I believe that if all evangelists would devote more time in personal work more souls would be brought to Christ. Fife and Son are the best personal workers it has been my lot to meet.

W. A. Curtis, Minister.

Idaho.

Boise is discussing plans for building a $50,000 Institutional church house in the near future. The official board has the proposition about in shape to present to the church. E. A. Child, who is the present minister for the Boise church, thinks this will be a successful move.——At Meridian the lumber is partially on the ground for a suitable church house for the eighty brethren who worship there. Meridian is one of the Idaho towns that has come to stay.——At Emmett the brethren have arranged to hold their house, and this fall and winter will put it in the right location for their use.——At Star the church has been repainted on the inside and is now to be shingled anew and then repainted outside. This church also is beautifully situated for room and ground.——At Middleton, J. S. Clark has now the completed plans for a nice $2,000 brick church house, and the contract is to be let during the first days of September.——At Payette they are going to have to build before long, another winter being the very last day's limit in their present building.——At Caldwell they are talking of moving the Sunday-school room back away from the main auditorium forty feet and building in that much addition to their worship room. They have just now installed overhead electric lights throughout the church. A new coal house has been added, and talk of a parsonage is heard on every side.——At Mountainhome, twenty brethren are going to catch the building fever before many months slip away.——If you will put your finger on the map, you will see that all these places are in close proximity. When all this building shall have been completed, these churches working into each other's hands, will be the fort from which we are bound to do some good work.

Caldwell, Idaho. B. W. Rice,

Campaigning in North Carolina.

At Belhaven, N. C., we are in a tabernacle with a seating capacity of eight hundred or a thousand. The audiences have been large, notwithstanding the incessant rains. There have been ten additions, and the prospects are bright for many others, though the field has been well worked, as this is the third series of meetings within a year. There were 222 in the Bible school yesterday, and $11.56 collection. A. B. Wade is the esteemed minister, and is rounding out a faithful ministry among us in this pioneer field. Sister Wade is a help-meet, indeed, and is active in every department of the church. In addition to my regular work, I am preaching the gospel by mail to a brother in another communion, and I hope to teach him the word of the Lord more perfectly. Campaigning in North Carolina in summer time is a strenuous work, but the brethren enjoy meetings at this torrid season, and feel that no other time will do. If any section of our country needs a supply of mosquitoes, I can furnish, in car-load lots, the most blood-thirsty villains that ever went unhung—the kind that dig Panama canals in you while you sleep. E. B. Barnes.

Georgia.

Beginning the second Sunday in July, I preached a few sermons at Antioch, Cherokee county. One confession. The third Sunday found me at Pleasant Hill, Pickens county. Preached six sermons with four confessions. Brothers David Anderson and C. C. Goodson, Ludville, and C. G. Pressley were with us and did much good. Preached fourth Sunday morning and evening at Acworth. We are glad to tell the brotherhood that the Acworth church is now out of debt for the first time since the present building was erected, about eight years ago, on the ashes of the old building. The congregation has a right to be happy.——Sunday, July 28, in the presence of 2,000 people, the magnificent new building of the First Christian church, Atlanta, was dedicated. It is a great victory for the church in Atlanta, as well as for the churches in Georgia.——W. B. Shaw, secretary of the Southeastern Orphanage, assisted the writer in an eight days' meeting at Hampton. There were fourteen baptisms and the church much encouraged. Brothers David Arnold and Lou Hadaway, who are preaching in Iowa and Illinois, respectively, are spending a few weeks at Hampton, their old home. These are noble young men and good preachers, and Georgia needs them and hopes to have them for good in the near future.——Brother and Sister Howard T. Cree, of Augusta, have gone to Jamestown, Washington and New York. They are resting.——At the State Board meeting the outlook is good for a successful campaign.——W. B. McDonald has just closed a meeting at Hebron, Oconee county, with twenty-eight additions, and twenty baptisms.——W. B. Shaw began a meeting at Austell, August 9. He will preach for the church at Acworth the third Sunday in this month.——L. A. Winn, of Indiana, assisted D. R. Piper, the pastor, in a meeting at High Shoals. Brother Winn is one of our Georgia boys, and we are always glad to have him visit us.——J. H. Hughes and the pastor, J. F. Lambert, have just closed a great meeting at Corinth, Walton county.——D. R. Piper is holding his own meeting this week at Antioch, our mother church in Georgia.——P. H. Mears, of Augusta, will assist D. R. Piper in a meeting at Maxeys, beginning the second Tuesday.——The writer goes this week to Milton county to hold a tabernacle meeting on new soil. "Mr. Hearsay" has told the people all they know about us, and he has taught them to call us "Campbellites," and that we preach dangerous doctrine. Brother Martin Hale, a music teacher of Pickens county, will have charge of the music during the meeting, and we hope to bring things to pass.——Orders for my new tract, entitled, "John Sims Led Into the Light, by His Friend, Robert Miller," are being sent in right along. The price is, twenty copies, postpaid, $1; 100 copies, postpaid, $4. Order direct from the Christian Publishing Co.——The readers will please notice that "merse" on page 13, the eleventh line from the bottom, should be "merge"; that "fifty years," on page 22, in thirteenth line, from bottom, should be "fifty days"; that the second line above "cause of divisions," on page 30, should be omitted; that "and" in second line of page 31, should be "to."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. Los Angeles Letter.

I recently returned with my wife and son from a six months trip abroad. During our absence we visited Egypt, Palestine, Syria, Asia Minor, Turkey, Greece, Italy, Austria-Hungary and Germany. Wm. Ross Lloyd, of Lexington, Ky., supplied my pulpit. He rendered the church splendid service. Our missionary offerings during that period were greater than ever before. Our prayer meetings were never so large. The same was true of the Sunday-school. All departments of the church were very prosperous. There were sixty additions to the church during his five months' service. There were thirty-six added during the three Lord's days in January before I left and seventeen persons in July since my return. It may be seen that the old First Church is still prosperous. Our summer congregations were never so great as at present. The work has been prosperous in other churches in Los Angeles since my departure. A new church, with more than fifty members, has been organized at the Budlong Mission. The Figuerod St. Church has had a beginning during that period. The colored church, under Brother Henderson, has been organized and has erected a new house in the Furlong Track. At this writing a new church on West Jefferson street is being organized and will soon knock for admission into our church family. It may thus be seen that the disciples in Los Angeles are active in the great work of evangelizing this rapidly growing city.

A number of our churches are planning a great evangelistic campaign during October and November. Several of the strongest men of the brotherhood will serve them in revival meetings. We are expecting great results.

Los Angeles, Cal. A. C. Smither,

DEDICATIONS.

Atlanta, Ga.

The new church at Atlanta was dedicated on July 28. A great crowd attended the services, F. M. Rains being the special speaker of the day. The property cost $65,000; the building alone cost $55,000. This is by far the best building we have in Georgia, and ranks among the best buildings in the brotherhood. H. K. Pendleton is the minister. On dedication day $26,500 was raised, and in this amount there were sixty-three $100 gifts. At the close of the day only about $5,000 was needed to wipe out all indebtedness, and it was stated that this sum would be raised without any difficulty. Four made the good confession during the services of the day. The Georgia State Christian Missionary convention will be held in this splendid new building in November next. We are glad to note the Christian fraternity of the ministers in the city on this occasion. Dr. J. W. Lee, a distinguished Methodist, said: "All men should praise and help each other, and if we as preachers and Christians did more of it, we would lift Atlanta higher, spiritually, than any city of its size in the world. We are all brothers and sisters. Let us love and help and work for each other." For many years the brethren of Atlanta have been working for better things. Their new church will have 600 sittings, and has combined the features for carrying on Sunday-school and institutional church work.

A. C. Bruce, Elder.

Brookfield, Mo.

The local papers gave extended space to the new Christian Church just dedicated at Brookfield, Linn county, Mo. One of them has the following editorial comment: "The finished basement of the new Christian church was opened to the public last night, and those who attended viewed with admiration the beginnings of the completion of the spacious and magnificent edifice. People whose generous contributions have made the undertaking possible, were congratulated, and the worthy pastor, who has carried a heavy burden in the responsibility of management, won deserved encomiums. The splendid new church may not only justly arouse the pride of its membership and pastor, but of the entire city, to which it is a great credit."

Another one says: "It has been said that 'By their works ye shall know them.' If there is a man in all Brookfield who is known by his works, that man is Elder Prunty. By his untiring energy another beautiful edifice has been made possible to Brookfield. It hardly seems possible what has been accomplished in Brookfield by the Christian Church under this man's leadership. When he came here the church was a struggling one. Look at it to-day. 'By their works ye shall know them.' The Christian denomination is certainly to be congratulated upon the fruition of their ambition—the realization of such a beautiful new church. All Brookfield tenders congratulations. Here's to Elder Prunty and his flock. Under the circumstances the consummation is remarkable. Only one man could have done it. His name is Prunty."

R. E. Prunty, the pastor, writes as follows:

L. L. Carpenter was in charge. He is still a great man of affairs, and knows how to raise money. Our debt was $7,000, and this was raised in cash and gilt-edge pledges, with a margin of about $300 to the credit side of the ledger. It was a big day. The building was crowded at each service. Our ladies here deserve great honor for their loyalty. Four years ago we had nothing but a small, old style house, situated far out of the center of the city. That house and lot would not have sold for more than $1,200 under the most favorable circumstances. To-day we have one of the most centrally located and the most beautiful house of worship in the city, and the property is worth $15,000. I am more than ever convinced that where great things are undertaken for the honor and glory of the great Head of the Church, that it will succeed in spite of all opposition.

Emporia, Kan.

On Sunday, July 14, the building at Emporia, Kan., was dedicated in tears and in triumph to the worship of Almighty God. The story of the struggle of this earnest people, which has at last culminated in victory, is a succession of sacrifices and of witness worthily borne in this community of splendid schools and churches.

The Disciples are the oldest congregation in the community. Before the village was surveyed, Elder Solomon Brown had gathered the nucleus of a congregation together, in 1857, and shortly after the erection of the first buildings the little church was reared, which served the people of that provincial time as a meeting place, court room, election booth, marrying parlor and death chamber till other congregations erected houses and the town outgrew its feebler first things. The little old house of worship yet remains, as the property of our colored brethren in the city, the monument of the past sheltering the faith of the present. A second structure was erected in 1883 under the leadership of the sainted R. L. Lotze. It was dedicated by Isaac Errett and F. M. Rains. Since that time A. M. Harvuot, George F. Hall, R. F. Swartz, J. P. Lucas and L. E. Sellers have served the church as minister. During the pastorate of the last mentioned the need of a new house became imperative, and with the beginning of the present pastorate plans were made to provide it.

The lot was purchased two blocks nearer the business center in 1902. The foundation was laid in 1904. In 1905 the basement story was completed and furnished for worship. The upper floors were finished and furnished the present season, and formally opened with the triumph to be herein described. The total cost of the structure and site is $27,000. Of this amount there remained $12,200 to be provided on the day of dedication. The day was sultry and threatening. Many were absent. Lines were in the faces of the building committee. The pastor and his associates in the pulpit were burdened, and fear came upon every soul.

The sermon and appeal were given by Harvey O. Breeden. He had been with the church three days, instructing the workers and devising the campaign. His message was simple, sweet, spiritual and strong to magnificence. The Spirit sat upon every man. All who heard were hushed, overborne, melted, recast in the mould of unselfishness. It was an epoch in the lives of the people. "It was the Lord's doing, and marvelous in our eyes." When the amounts were totaled it was found that $10,720 had been pledged, and the men of the congregation organized a brotherhood and assumed the remainder.

Associated with us in the work of the day were L. E. Sellers, of Terre Haute, and E. N. Phillips, state evangelist of Kansas. Mr. Sellers preached in the evening, to the great delight of every one. His message was especially welcome to his old hearers and friends in the city. The presence of Mr. Phillips was an uplift to all, and his services were most valuable in connection with the solicitation. His prayer at the communion table was like balm to the heart.

The building as it stands is one of the finest in the West. It is the first in the city in its appointments. On the basement floor are the dining and assembly room, seating 300, which will be used for Bible school, gymnasium and men's club rooms. A primary department adjoining has accommodations for 100 children. Two lavatories and cloak rooms have floors laid for shower baths, and a kitchen 18x22 feet has every convenience. On the main floor are the auditorium, with sittings for 800, with two spacious vestibules with parquetry floors, two stairways leading to gallery, parlor, study, two C. E. rooms, each seating 80 persons, and two club rooms for young people. The gallery is curved around seven of the twelve gables of the auditorium, bisecting the windows and providing a most artistic and comfortable place for expanding audiences. The floors are hardwood and the finishing is in oak. The pews are curved, with plain but artistic ends. The windows are the most exquisite of all the appointments, and were provided by the women of the congregation. They illustrate the parables and teachings of the Lord. The central window of the southern gables is Raphael's "Transfiguration." One of the events of the day of dedication was the presentation, on behalf of the women of the congregation, by Prof. T. M. Iden, of the two windows above the pulpit, containing "Jesus in Gethsemane" and "Jesus' Baptism," to the pastor and his wife, respectively.

It was a great and notable day. The church looks forward with larger hope.

Willis A. Parker.

Sioux Falls, S. D.

The church at Sioux Falls has had no pastor for nearly four years, and in spite of all odds the faithful have kept up the various organizations and paid a long-standing debt. No sooner was the debt paid than they began the enlargement and improvement of the church at an expense of about $3,300. The church is modern in every way. The main auditorium is seated with circular oak pews. The acoustic properties are excellent. The basement is devoted to the use of the Sunday-school, having also kitchen and dining room.

On July 14 H. A. Denton, the Centennial secretary for the American Christian Missionary Society, was present to dedicate. The debt was reduced by cash and pledges to the extent where the officers of the church felt safe to dedicate, looking to a loan of about $1,000. Mr. Denton left for himself and the American Christian Missionary Society, who made his services possible without expense to the struggling pioneer church, a warm place in the hearts of the people.

I, as corresponding secretary for the state board, was present and assisted, having charge of the communion in the afternoon, and I also remained and spoke on Monday and Tuesday evenings.

Space would fail me to mention all those who deserved a word of commendation for heroic sacrifices. The church is very grateful to Father Lachey, who superintended the construction, following his own plans, and no one was happier on the day of dedication than the good father in Israel.

The church is looking for a capable pastor, with brighter hopes for a successful future. Sioux Falls is the largest city in South Dakota, and is noted for its scenic beauty. Her future as a commercial and educational center is assured, and being the gateway at the "head" of the "fat valley" of the Sioux and Missouri Rivers, the building up of a strong church in this city will be of untold value to the cause in the ages to come.

Where and How Shall I Begin to Serve Christ?

Topic, August 21.—Mark 5:19; Luke 5:27-32; 1 Tim. 5:8.

It is a trite saying that charity should begin at home. So, also, should religion. "Go to thy house, unto thy friends, and tell them how great a thing the Lord hath done for thee, and how he had mercy on thee." It is the language of the Master to the one out of whom he had cast the legion of devils, in the country of the Gadarenes. We ought to be quite sure that the evil spirits have been cast out of our own hearts and lives, before we go to them of our own homes or to others. I shouldn't wonder much if a good many of us do not fail right here because we are not fully persuaded in our own minds. In other words we are not real sure of our own genuine conversion. Conscience makes cowards of us all. And doubts paralyze our activities and mock our sympathies. Few care to be thought hypocritical. It is to the credit of most of us that we are modest in our religious professions. Modesty, like charity, begins at home. But it is the easiest thing in the world for our modesty or our timidity to degenerate into cowardice of the most inexcusable sort. Most of us are guilty of just such shameful silence and neglect. Parents have let the children slip away from them and get tangled up in the perplexities and anxieties of the unfriendly world just because they were afraid to open their mouths about the subject of religion. It's a pitiful, pathetic, even provoking fact. The results have been heart-breaking. And the church has suffered irreparable loss from this strange silence and neglect in the home. Too late did David, the aged king, great of heart and generous and gifted, ask, with a heart-break. "Is the young man Absalom safe?" And again, with a soul that trembled in anxiety and dread, "Cushi, is it well with the young man Absalom?" And the Cushite answered, "The enemies of my Lord the King and all that rise up against thee to do thee hurt be as that young man is." And the king was much moved and went up to the chamber over the gate and wept; and as he went thus, he said, "O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! Would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!" There is nothing more pathetic in all the Bible or in all heart-breaking history of the race. There must have been something wrong in the bringing up of that young man. Added to the sin and shame in David's life was this same silence, strange and sad and tragical, which somehow led to the alienation of the wayward and beautiful boy from his kingly father. And the old tragedy has been repeated over and over and over again, even down through all the Christian centuries. O men and women, fathers and mothers, how is it with the children, the boys and girls, the young men and young women, in our own households, in our communities?

"He went forth and saw a publican." It was the Master's way. It is the way for the servant who would win men to the Master. Our failures in the ministry are often owing to our failure to see in the publicans whom we meet by chance such men as Levi, engaged in a bad business, yet not with a bad heart, at any rate, not beyond the call of the Christ to better life and service. The calling of the twelve emphasizes this fact. It was as he went about that Jesus found his chosen disciples. It is thus disciples are won to-day. The successful pastor is the one who goes about like his Master, doing good, and on the lookout for men, such as Levi and Andrew and Simon Peter and James and John and Zacchaeus and Saul of Tarsus. He took a journey from heaven to find Saul, the chief of sinners and to make of him the chief of all the apostles. And it was worth the journey! O that we might realize that it is worth the journey to seek and to save the lost! Yes, the lost! "For he came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance." I fear we have not begun to learn the meaning of that. When preachers, when the churches, when individual disciples really learn the large meaning of the Christ's rebuke and of the Christ's life, then will the world be evangelized and saved. "They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." Certainly! We all know that but we for the most part fail to do as the Master did and as he has commanded us to do.

Israel Journeying to Canaan.—Num. 10:11-13, 29-36.

Memory Verses: 35, 36.

Golden Text.—And the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire to give them light.—Exod. 13:21.

After a sojourn of eleven months at Sinai, Israel is now ready to proceed on its journey to Canaan. They had reached Sinai in the third month, after their departure from Egypt (Exod. 19:1). They took up the march from that place on the twentieth day of the second month of the second year (Num. 10:11). To get a continuous narrative of the journeyings of Israel, one may read Exod. 19:1, 2, and then skip to Num. 10:11. All that comes between—the latter half of Exodus, all of Leviticus and the first half of Numbers—describes what took place during the stay at Sinai.

Within those eleven months an immense transformation is represented as taking place. First of all, the nation's religion, as a definite and organic system, was virtually created during this period. A system of jurisprudence was established and a series of detailed enactments or legal decisions were placed on record covering a great part of the present and immediately prospective needs of the people. The tribal organization was perfected and the whole nation was so organized that it could be mobilized promptly and in a safe and orderly manner.

All of this was a good deal to happen in so short a time. It is conceivable that in the recorded history events and achievements which were extended over a considerable period are foreshortened and brought with a smaller compass. But even if one adopts the view that the religious and civil system was a development rather than a direct and oral deliverance from the Almighty, it must still be remembered that development does not always proceed at a uniform pace. There are periods in which the experience of a preceding century, or of ten centuries, suddenly comes to expression and embodiment in new institutions. Evolution proceeds by waves. There are times of rapid change and times of apparent quiescence in which future changes are being prepared. Whatever view one takes, therefore, of this part of Hebrew history, there is no reason to doubt that the brief period of the sojourn at Sinai was marked by a vast achievement in the way of both religious and civil organization.

One of the significant facts about this migration from Egypt to Canaan, was that it was considered not simply as a movement encouraged and commanded by Jehovah, but as one whose very details of starting and stopping, of making and breaking camp, finding provisions and escaping enemies, were all under the direct supervision of Jehovah. To the untrained mind, details are always more impressive and important than generalities. It is all very well to say that God takes care of his people in a general way, but the conviction that he will provide my dinner for me to-day and that I would not have any if he did not provide it, comes home with a force that the most untutored intellect can at once appreciate. So it was important, in the development of Israel's faith in God's providence, that there should be evidence of his care for them in even the small details of their lives. This evidence they had in the giving of the manna and in the guidance and control of their itinerary by the pillar of cloud and the pillar of fire. It meant much to the nation and its faith for the people to have gotten the conviction that God cared for them in such a constant and intimate fashion that he would do these things for them.

And yet, Moses evidently felt that he and the other leaders had some responsibility for the safe and proper conduct of the expedition. When his brother-in-law, Hobab, proposed to go back, Moses reminded him that they were traveling in a strange country, where it would be well to have as guide one acquainted with the topography of the region, as Hobab was. "Thou shalt be to us instead of eyes." The question as to the exact division of the responsibility between God and man is constantly recurring in a thousand forms. We need not pursue it here, further than to bring together for comparison the statement that the cloud over the tabernacle indicated the direction of the march and the location and duration of the camps, and that Hobab was to be to them instead of eyes. The two statements are mutually complementary. Every life is a synthesis of providential guidance and human wisdom and effort.

"Come with us, and we will do thee good." No one ever loses by being in good company. The blessings which God gives to his people overflow and enrich those who are their companions and associates. So a man of indifferent morals is benefitted by having a good partner. An irreligious man prefers to live in a community where there are churches and all the civilized advantages which always go with them. In a still more vital sense, association with good people is profitable, for the contagion of virtue is as strong as the contagion of evil, and every person tends to become in some degree like those with whom he associates. To associate with the people of God is a step toward becoming one of them.

S. Topic.

Mission work in Latin America is not receiving from us the attention that it ought to. Perhaps that is true of all mission work and mission fields; but it is especially true of this particular field. The Christian people of the United States are not doing what they ought to in order to bring the gospel to the knowledge of their brethren in Mexico and South America.

The close proximity of these countries to the United States imposes upon us a peculiar obligation touching their evangelization. They are our neighbors, and are a people of the same Aryan race as ourselves. Their sympathies are with us as they are not with any other people. We have here large opportunities, and our responsibilities are correspondingly great.—Lk. 12: 47, 48.

Perhaps one reason why mission work in South America has not received more general and generous consideration from us, is, because we have entertained the mistaken notion that these people are Christians, already having the gospel, and therefore not needing to be evangelized. In our textbooks they have been so classified. But this idea is wholly erroneous. The Roman Catholic church in South America is not Christianity—far from it.

What is the true moral condition of the people? A missionary gives us this picture: "South America is a priest-ridden continent, without family life, given up to domestic anarchy, to religious bacchanals, to the worship of grotesque images, and to the practice of pagan and semi-pagan rites." It is the lowest and most degraded form of Romanism which exists there; and millions of people are wholly outside of any Christian influence whatsoever.

In the whole of South America we have a territory of about 7,000,000 square miles, and a population estimated at 38,000,000. For all this great territory and vast population there are not to exceed 400 missionaries, male and female. The crying need is for more men and money to evangelize South America. The Macedonian cry comes from the South.—Acts 16:9, 10.

Mexico is perhaps the most progressive of the Latin American republics. It has an area of 767,000 square miles, and a population of approximately 14,000,000. Of this number only a little more than 40,000 are Protestants. Of the entire population of Mexico only 20 per cent can read and write. About 38 per cent are Indians. There are 227 missionaries, 491 native workers, 663 stations and out-stations, 133 schools, 10,447 pupils, 1 hospital, and 20,382 communicants.

Brazil is the largest of the South American republics,—as large as the United States before the purchase of Alaska. It has a population of from 16,000,000 to 18,000,000. Of this number only about 150,000 are Protestants. The societies at work there report 356 stations and out-stations, 130 missionaries, 112 native workers, 53 schools, and 26,318 professed Evangelical Christians, of whom 13,000 are communicants.

According to an estimate made by a missionary editor, of the 38,000,000 in South America, 34,000,000 are unevangelized; and of the 16,000,000 in Brazil, 14,000,000 are unevangelized. For this great unevangelized multitude there are only 400 missionaries. Is this a fair distribution of the church's missionary forces?

Among the Indians of South America mission work is carried on by a number of societies. The importance of the work among these people is shown from the fact that in the heart of South America the majority of the inhabitants are pure Indians, and in the extreme south there are also large numbers of unreclaimed Indians. The work is necessarily slow; but missionaries have been encouraged, and the outlook is hopeful.

Concerning encouragements a missionary says, "We have everything to encourage us, save the indifference of the North American Churches. British Christians have given to South America the name of the 'neglected continent.' The needs of these countries appeal to us. Not only the success attained, but the promises of God are our encouragement."

What ought we to do? (1) Acquaint ourselves more fully with the religious needs of Latin America. (2) Pray earnestly for the missionaries and their work, and that more laborers may be sent into the field.—Matt. 9:36-38. (3) Give more liberally. The great need is more money with which to enlarge the work.—The Young People's Lesson Quarterly.

The Pastor as Seen by a Layman.

meetings with them it is hard to get a person to think about Christianity, so direct and definite is their teaching. If the preaching and teaching to which we listen were not so effeminate, was of the class that called us to know more and do more and sacrifice more, it would be more in accord with the precepts and patterns of the Scriptures.

It seems that many churches are existing with no idea or purpose except to maintain their existence with proper dignity. Such churches usually have a pastor whose great purpose is to draw his salary and to fill the pulpit 104 times a year acceptably to his congregation, and escape the charge of saloonkeepers, gamblers, etc., of being meddlesome.

My views of a pastor are that he should be a man, in the broad sense of the term, an example, clean morally, intellectually and financially; strong and steadfast for things that are right. He should be a teacher that would feel his mission, the conversion of sinners and the education of a large number of preachers. Let me ask, if a house were afire and help needed, would any man be rejected? I think that the principle should guide that every one is needed and any one can help, instead of only allowing specially gifted persons to feel the responsibility of preaching the gospel, and this is the fault of the pastors. Every convert should be taught to grow in grace and the knowledge of the Lord; this makes Bible study and prayer necessary, and how few of the babes in Christ are taught how to pray and what to pray for. How often is prayer spoken of as something hard to do. Pastoral calling certainly is the most effective work that a pastor can do, but he must visit the Christians for the purpose of teaching and instruction, not to gossip or hear complaints. After instruction as to growth, the convert should be taught to observe all things, to give, to go, to teach, to evangelize and to commit the same to others that they may be stimulated to action in the economy of God.

A pastor should avoid every alliance with things of this world that would interfere with his perfect freedom to be an example to others. This applies to all kinds of speculation, get rich quick schemes, patent medicine endorsements, recommendations for the use of book agents and all other strictly business ventures. He should not be greedy of filthy lucre, laying not up for himself or family, truly a living epistle, living in the faith that his God reigns. I would not say that a pastor should avoid lodges, but he is to be all things to all men that he might save some, and he who joins a lodge for fraternity in that much belittles the Church. I hope I will not be understood as excusing the churches from giving the pastor a living as good as the best.

He must be content without worldly greatness, the opportunities are so few. Each pastor in our brotherhood has about one chance in 7,000 of being greatest in America, or about one chance in 500 of being greatest in Ohio; but he has one chance in one of being the ideal of the people to whom he ministers, and one chance out of one of receiving greatness in heaven. And this should be satisfactory to all when we remember the lesson for Elijah was that God was not in the whirlwind, or in the earthquake, or in the fire, but in the still small voice.

CABLE.

Died, on the 15th day of July, 1907, Mrs. Pamelia Cable, 95 years of age. She had passed an eventful life, and one rich in good works. Sister Cable was born in the year 1812, in Bullard county, Ky. She was baptized in the year 1845, by C. Kendrick. The family were well known in Arkansas. At the time of her decease she was living at Rosedale, Miss,, where her daughter, Mrs. Annie C. Wilson, and three of her grandsons, Lawrence and Marshall Wilson, and Wm. Roberts, have their home. Sister Cable was a remarkable woman. She retained her faculties to a degree unusual for her age. She was devoted to her family, to the church and to humanity. Missionary and educational interests and the care of orphans especially appealed to her. She made many garments for orphans with her own hands, after she had passed the ninetieth milestone of life. Her faith was always strong. Few lives were a greater blessing to others. The remains were brought to Camden for burial. The Methodist church was opened for the funeral, and the Methodist and Baptist ministers assisted in the service. Loving hands provided beautiful and profuse floral offerings, and the writer spoke briefly of her life work and Christian example and the hope of Eternal life.

E. C. Browning.

ELLIS.

Charles B. Ellis died at Corydon, Ind., July 6, 1907, aged 44 years, 3 months and 24 days. He was a member of the congregation of the Church of Christ, worshiping here. He was president of our Board of Deacons while in health, and was faithful and devoted in every relation of life. Almost his last message was a charge to the congregation to be faithful to the Lord in growth in spiritual life and activities. We thank God for the lives, who in the depths of suffering and though nearing death, do not forget the needs of those who remain. May she who bore so lovingly, and patiently the burden disease imposed, be kept safely through the years, and enter, too, into rest.

MOORE.

On July 4, 1907, S. T. Moore, elder of the Fulton Christian church, 65 years of age, 28 years a Christian, entered upon his inheritance and reward in the higher life. No man in the community wielded a greater influence for good and the cause of Christ. He leaves a wife and seven children, all Christians, and a host of friends in Fulton and Callaway county, where he has lived all his life except the five years spent in the civil war. His home, church and the community sustain a great loss.

Fulton, Mo. W. A. Fite,

ROBINSON.

R. Dawson Robinson has gone to his final reward. He gave his parting messages to his loved ones and passed on, July 24. He was 38 years old, and had been an active Christian from boyhood. Six years he had been superintendent of the Sunday-school, and a longer period had served as deacon in the church. He was a manly man and a courteous Christian gentleman. He leaves a wife and five children. The whole church and a host of friends mourn his untimely death.

Jeffersonville, Ind. J. M. Vawter,

STONE.

We are in receipt of a letter from Dr. W. L. Hedges, of Warrensburg, Mo., notifying us of the death of Brother Joseph H. Stone, for many years a member of that congregation, who departed this life July 7. Brother Stone was the oldest of seven children, and was born in Kentucky, December 21, 1817. His death occurred in Kansas City, Mo., but his remains were interred at Warrensburg, where he had lived so long and was so well known and loved. He was, therefore, in his ninetieth year, having outlived all his brothers and sisters. Brother Stone moved to Missouri about 1857. He was twice married. Four children by his second wife survive him: John Ellis Stone, of Parsons, Kan.; Joseph H. Stone, of Kansas City, Mo.; Lawson C. Stone, of Oklahoma City, Okla.; Mrs. W. W. Robinson, of Kansas City, Mo. Brother Stone was a man of unusual intelligence in the things of the kingdom of God, and of supreme devotion to Christ and his kingdom. In his letter, Dr. Hedges says of him, referring to the fact of his long agency for The Christian-Evangelist. "He was one of the staunchest and most loyal supporters of yourself, Isaac Errett, G. W. Longan, and Alexander Procter, as you led our people forward in a more liberal and progressive life. He was a close Bible student. What little of good I have been to this church has been through the advice of Brother Stone, and I loved him as I loved few men." The editor's earliest remembrance of Brother Stone dates from the time of his holding a meeting for Brother Longan at Warrensburg, away back in the early 70's. We were then impressed with his wide intelligence, with his spiritual insight into the meaning of the Scriptures, and with his lovely Christian character. His life was a constant benediction to the church of which he was so long a member. He was "rooted and grounded in the faith." The memory of such a life is blessed. It is a precious legacy to his children and his friends and to the church. We knew his great love for Brothers Longan and Procter, and of his intense sympathy with every movement among us that looked to the spiritual growth of the brotherhood and the enlargement of its work. In a good old age, full of years, with the esteem of his brethren, he passes on into the higher life for which he was so well fitted. To such faithful and devoted souls the church is indebted, under God, for its power and influence in the world.

Chapter VIII. Strenuous Proceedings.

The unjust judge was about to deny Dr. Reid any counsel or legal proceedings of any sort, and was in the act of committing him to the insane asylum, when Judge Taylor walked in, saying:

"Hold on there, Justice Hogg. I take precedence in this case by special writ, which has been placed in my hands for immediate action." So saying he directed the officers to clear the courtroom of any opposing features and took his seat upon the bench which the sheriff had assisted the drunken judge to vacate.

He then examined the papers and proceedings. Finding a number of errors that made it easy to dismiss the case, he annulled the proceedings and issued warrants for the doctor's persecutors, upon the complaint of the doctor and the parties who had placed the special writ in his hands.

Of course they must be allowed sufficient time to prepare and collect evidence, etc., and in the meantime the judge was approached with a bribe if he would bring about a withdrawal of the cases. But he scorned their offer and doubled his diligence to bring them to trial.

However, when he saw that they were calling every unholy practice into requisition, and that they would leave no stone unturned to bribe and corrupt the case and carry it out of his jurisdiction, he advised with Dr. Reid and they decided to let the case come to trial and then withdraw before the opposition could take them away from him, leaving him a chance to make a speech to those who were assembled, which would be as effectual as a victory.

When the day set for the trials came the usual motion was made by their attorneys for dismission upon a technicality which they tried to establish, but the judge arose (his courtroom full to overflowing) and began to say: "Upon the request of the Christian gentlemen whom these defendants have sinned against, jumping upon them in the dark and seeking to ruin their characters and destroy their reputations, and incarcerate their bodies in a worse than living tomb; upon their request and that alone I shall act presently, to dismiss these cases, but before that order is granted I have something to say."

Then turning to the two doctors, the editor and Mr. Schlitz, he administered a most scathing reproof, such as had never been heard before from his lips. His speech lasted an hour, closing with the announcement that he would speak at his own opera house on the following Lord's day at 11 o'clock.

This speech and announcement produced a profound sensation and lasting impression. Many of the friends and sympathizers of President Brown and Dr. Reid had crowded into the courtroom to hear the cases. The corrupt ring, with its friends and retainers, were there also, and they were roundly rebuked. They did not expect the sudden revelation of their characters, and dark deeds, which the judge did not spare to tell in most convincing language from instances that had come before his personal notice, many of which he turned to court records to prove.

This was more crushing than a legal defeat fought out in open court. At one time they undertook to leave the courtroom, but the judge ordered the doors to be closed and guarded by the bailiffs, and themselves to remain quiet under penalty of being imprisoned for contempt of court.

The court reporters were ordered to take every word of the proceedings and to have them published and scattered abroad in vindication of the men who had been persecuted and put down by the villainous ring.

This was indeed a strange proceeding, but it was one that could not be tampered with nor appealed from, and more satisfactory to the public than a long-continued case in which justice might be thwarted in the end, by technicalities and delays. Judge Taylor understood this thoroughly and had planned it just so.

No mention of the affair was made in the "Times," for a day or two, lest they might excite the judge's ire or lay themselves open to further ridicule and loss of public patronage.

To the public this was admission of complete defeat, and by it they lost patronage. Several hundred subscriptions were withdrawn during the spell of silence, and the directors fearing lest their continued silence would lose them more undertook a weak vindication the next day. But by this time the court report had been put into the people's hands and they saw the discrepancies and false position of the "Times," and a thousand more withdrew at once. Many valuable advertisers also followed their example.

At this the small stockholders began to place their stock upon the market not for sale at less than cost, and the judge with an eye to business, began to buy the stock through an agent. Schlitz and the two doctors and the race track men held a hurried conference and fearing that the stock would go far below par and that they could not redeem themselves, decided to throw the whole thing on the market while they could realize anything like a fair price for it. This gave the judge his opportunity, and having the funds in hand, he bought the whole thing, at cost, stock, plant and patronage, with their promised good will (which the judge naively remarked would be placed upon the market again and knocked down free to the one who would bear it with a clear conscience).

A Modern Sermon.

Sunday morning came and the opera house was crowded to the last gallery, and Dr. Tipler's church was almost deserted. Choir, organist and ushers, [illegible]en the janitor had hurried over tha[illegible] he might get a chance to hear the judge's first sermon with the rest.

President Brown was brought in his wheel chair, and sat pale and thin unable to help himself, but he wanted to be there, and Dr. Reid was by his side.

The judge called for the song, "We praise thee, O God, for the Son of thy love," which was taken up and sung by the vast audience in a most inspiring manner. He then called upon a dear old lady, one of the pioneers, whom he had known all his life, to pray. Her soul-stirring petition made all feel a strong impulse to get down upon their knees in the dust.

He then got up and read the gospel story, ending with the great commission: "All power hath been given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. And lo I am with you always even unto the end of the world."

Turning abruptly he began: "Brethren, friends, neighbors! I have lived in this city fifty years, being about 20 years old when I came to attend the college. God met me then near this very spot, and gave me this text and commission and told me to go and preach.

"I looked at the difficulties and the crosses, the unpopularity and the martyrdom that awaited the true follower of Jesus Christ. I saw neither the first part of the commission nor the last, in which the Master said, 'All power hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world,' but I simply saw the grim dark side of duty, and real[illegible]d my own weakness and inability to fulfill the requirement in my own strength.

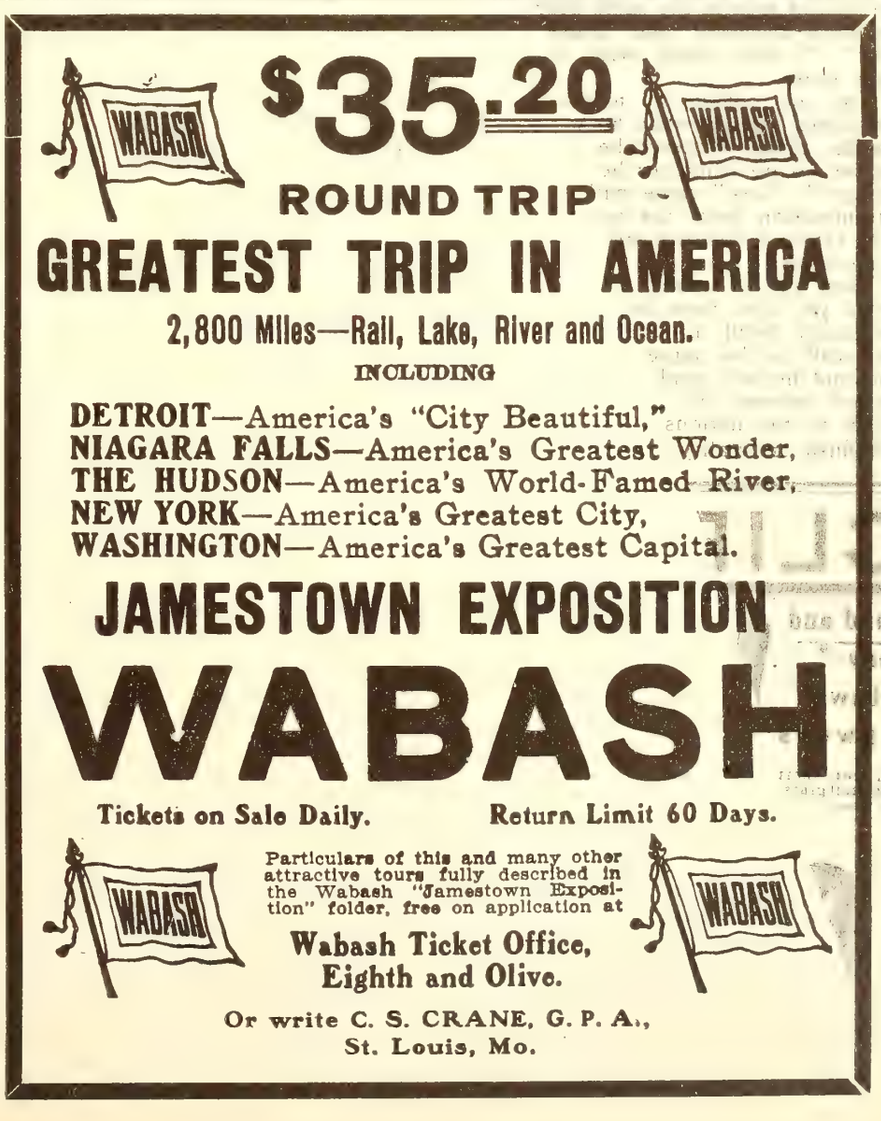
"I listened to the teachings and watched the practices of Christians who had a form of gospel religion, but who denied its power.

"I was in grave doubt and deep distress. None could help me. I longed for a religion that had the primitive power and fruits in it. I heard people pray as if they expected answers to their prayers, and then heard them talk and saw them live as if there was nothing in prayer after all. I said, if there is anything in prayer at all, there is all in it that God has promised or it is a useless mockery. My teachers and pastors tried to reason me out of the position that I had been led into, and finding me unmoved and unsatisfied, they ostracised me and put me on the list with heretics. This hardened me against Christianity, and I have lived these years without God and without hope. The recent healing, in answer to Mrs. Gordon's prayers, convinces me that there is a God and that Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day and forever, and that he is with his people as he promised. This has changed my stony heart, and I am ready to go or ser[illegible] this blessed message, as God would have me do, to the world. I regret that so many of our years have been spent, but they have not been wholly wasted after all. God has given me some silver and gold, all of which I shall now turn back to him, to help make true disciples of the nations.

"I had a son, a bright fellow, who was admitted to the legal bar of this city, and many of you know him. I had great hopes of his future, but the accursed cup taken from the hand of a society belle at one of Schlitz's gilded halls to hell, led him to a drunkard's downward course, and to-day he is a wanderer upon the face of the earth. O, brethren, I would gladly give all I possess to redeem him from the curse of rum and sin. Perhaps if I cast my bread upon the waters and thus to the nations, he will yet be among the redeemed. If only he is redeemed, my offering will be well spent. I beg of you pray for his restoration."

Thus he went on showing the value of a single soul, and what the millions must be to the heart of the heavenly Father who spared not the costliest gift of heaven to redeem all. How could we withhold from him, who had given himself, and to whom all authority in earth and heaven is delegated, from the Father to redeem the world. How could we turn from him to serve sin and self? To whom should we go for healing from sin and sickness? Has he not commanded us to observe all things of his teaching? Is he not with us to-day to show his power and his grace even in greater power than when he walked by the stormy Galilee, or over the hills of Judaea? Picture him in our midst, saying: "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ask whatsoever ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

Why do we not receive from his hand the power to do his works? O, brethren, James says: that we "receive not because we ask not." We have not asked definitely in the name of our blessed Christ. We have gone on in our own wisdom and our own ways, stumbling and blundering, when we might have had the divine wisdom, and the divine power, by simply asking in faith, through him, who is a present all powerful friend. And again we ask and do not receive because we ask amiss, to consume the coveted privileges upon our sinful and selfish desires.



Brethren, the commission is unto us for the nations. The name of Jesus is not one to conjure, but to live by and serve others with. He came to do the Father's will and to give his life a ransom for many. Anything asked in his name must be according to his purpose, if it passes as genuine before the Father's throne. He who came not to be ministered unto but to minister, who saved and healed others, but did not spare himself, intercedes for those who come asking that same mind that was found in Christ.

If we would see the power of the faith, once for all time delivered unto the saints, manifested; if we would see the signs following in these days, we must arm ourselves with the same mind, we must go forth with the same purpose to minister to needy humanity.

We have lived delicately upon the earth and taken our pleasure, in our ceiled houses and luxurious surroundings, while the millions have been going down in darkness and sin. We have nourished our hearts upon the delicacies of culture and art, listened to oratory and music, discovered by rare minds whom we have petted and paid in princely styles. We have drifted away from the simplicity of faith. Our theologians are teaching the traditions of men, rather than the simple gospel of the Son of God, and we have as a result a generation of doubters; churches unequally yoked together with the world; a ministry without power to redeem, and to bring the power of God to men to-day.

The true ministry of the gospel requires that we bring Christ to men to-day in the same capacity and power that he came to the world nineteen hundred years ago. He is the same Christ, yea, a greater Saviour than when he walked in his humility, for he has finished the great plan of redemption by the sacrifice of his humanity, and now through the power of a Resurrected Life, he comes to every one who will receive him, to dwell in the and to work through them his mighty power to the glory of God.

We have the right to expect his personal presence here to-day, for his promise is, that where two or three are gathered together, in his name, he will be in the midst of them. Nay a greater expectation can be relied upon, for he has deigned in these days to make his faithful people his dwelling place, living temples of his eternal Spirit.

At this point the judge stopped and looked for a few moments, as if with prophetic vision. Then fixing his eyes upon the president's upturned face and earnest gaze, said:

"Brother Brown, the Lord Jesus Christ has liberated you from one very great bondage of body and soul, by permitting the shackles of official life to be removed from you. You were in bondage to men, a time-server and a man-pleaser, in your capacity as president of yonder college. The Master has a larger sphere for you. He is calling you to fill it. He has permitted you to come to this very place and time and extremity of weakness and need, that he might show his power and bring you out into a wide place. Will you accept this great commission and with it go forth to preach the Word of God?"

The president looked with expectant eyes and assented to the question.

Then the judge continued: "Are you for the glory of God ready to bear the reproach of men in the same degree that you have accepted their praise in the past?" "I am," came with clear and eager tone.

"Are you willing to follow him and him alone? To do what he would have you do; to be whatever he would have you be; to go wherever he would have you go?" "Yes," came with force and determination from the president's lips as he sat up of his own strength and will in the chair.

"Then in his name, arise. He has loosed you also from this bondage, that you might fulfill his more perfect will; you shall be his representative in this land and he will send you forth to the regions beyond, to preach his saving health to the nations in darkness.

A flush of vitality came into the pale face, and in a moment he stood, and with uplifted hand began to sing:

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all."

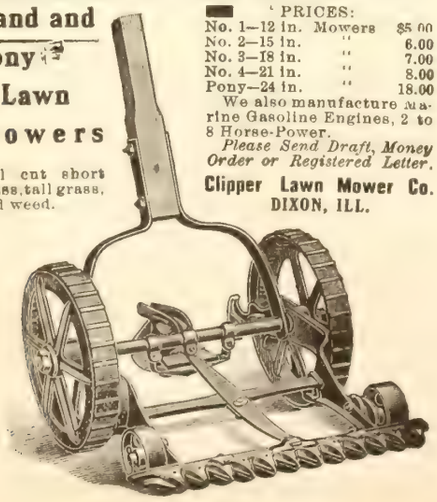
If an electric shock had passed through the audience there could not have been a greater sensation started; some wept and others sang the strain the president struck.

After some moments the judge raised his hand as if to speak and commanded silence. "Brethren," he said, "this opera house is henceforth dedicated for President Brown's ministry, while God has work for him in this place. I have had a vision for the man who stands an object of his power before you to-day. My days are numbered. God has been good to me, indeed, to use me thus at the end of my journey. I am not worthy. It is not for me that he has done it, but for his great name and the good of mankind. I praise him that he has let me see this day of power that my heart has long hoped for. O, the regret that fills my soul, that this could not have come to me fifty years ago! But I am glad that it has come to this man and that a good half century lies before him yet in which to fulfill the will of God. I will take my hands off the altar when I have made some announcements: the first is that President Brown will speak here this evening, and the second, that a collection will now be taken for him. He has been thrown out of his position while over $4,000 in debt for his home and other improvements, which he was making with reference to future service in the college. You are all aware that he has not had any income during these weeks of his sickness. Now let the boxes be passed and give as you are able.

Ten young men volunteered to pass the boxes, a number called for paper and pencils and when the boxes were emptied at the judge's feet and their contents counted it was found that $7,500 was the result in cash and subscriptions.

Loud cries to hear the president speak was heard all over the house, and in obedience to the insistent call, Mr. Brown walked up the steps, yet thin and somewhat weak, but with flushed face and keen eyes. Every one sat spellbound and silent to catch his words and to see his every motion.

"This is the happiest moment of my life," said he, as he grasped the judge's extended hand. "I am truly grateful to God for this and also for his loving care. I am truly grateful to you, Judge, and to this generous people. I had feared lest my life's opportunity might have been passed forever and it had given me great cause for sorrow. I am not sure but that it had caused my weakness and inability to recover from the shock and injury I had sustained. But as I listened to that inspired discourse, from the lips of this man, the opportunity for service began to dawn upon me, and I was just secretly asking God to spare my life and to open the way for me to serve him as I had felt called to do in earlier years, when the judge began to ask me the very questions, which I believe the Spirit caused him to ask (for they had come to me in the same manner some moments before) and upon his command to arise, with such warmth and vitality as I am unable to account for, except upon the theory of the Spirit being a living, present personality, capable of taking possession of us in that way. I feel a growing strength and joy possessing me as I contemplate this open door for service, and will, by the help of God, seek to make my ministry a blessing to this place and people. I will ask that this evening's meeting be rather one of conference and prayer for God's blessing, guidance and a full understanding of what he would have this mission be, than that I should be expected to speak at any length. I prefer to wait before God and to know his will, before proceeding in this important departure from present customs. To this end I will not say more now, but ask you who are so led to spend much of the time between this and evening in prayer and meditation upon the word.



So saying the president was about to leave the rostrum when the judge stayed him and requested that he dismiss the audience with the benediction. Thus closed the first meeting of that eventful day.

AT BETHANY

From a chapter in "The Life of W. K. Pendleton," by F. D. Power.

Scattered over the place everywhere students boarded or roomed singly or in clubs. Perhaps the most famous of the latter class was the Kit-Kat, which had rooms under the college building. No institution connected with Bethany, it is safe to say, ever achieved so distinctive a place, or lingers more fragrantly in the halls of memory. Its bill of fare was not equal to that of the Waldorf-Astoria, nor its table talk quite up to that of the great Kit-Kat of the eighteenth century when Steele and Addison, Congreve and Dryden, Walpole and Stepney sat about the board of Christopher Catt and ate his mutton pies, but it was a noble institution in its way, and the portraits of its members would have done honor to Sir Godfrey Kneller's canvas. Another club was the Virginia, whose bill of fare was printed in Latin, ab ova ad mala, and whose members lived in the back rooms of the Curtis store building; and a club by the same name that kept house in the first building on the left at the foot of the college hill as one entered the town.

Those were days of plain living and high thinking. Bethany beef was noted for its toughness of fibre, and Bethany treacle for its delicacy of flavor. Mush and milk were a famous confection; potatoes and apple sauce were regarded as a sumptuous meal. Cove oysters and sardines and crackers, apple butter, eggs and apples helped to make late hours in students' rooms endurable. Appetites were enormous. One boy thought nothing of eating a dozen hard-boiled eggs at a sitting after devouring everything in sight at the club. Another kept a frying pan on hand, and at midnight often would prepare a dish fit for Prince Henry, with a quarter of a peck of potatoes and a dash of garlic, and consume it as a sedative before retiring. The same boy on one occasion, when he got a fair show at a city restaurant, ate ninety cents' worth of farinaceous tubers of the Early Rose variety when they were selling at twenty-five cents a bushel on the street, and boasted of the achievement! Half a dozen Virginia boys, brought up on hot bread, gathered one night about a huge pan of fresh biscuits just from the oven, and entered upon a competitive eating match. One declared he could eat as many as his friend, the potato fiend, but he consumed only six, while the other Lucullus easily disposed of nine, and was still a hungered.

Bethany society at this time was very delightful. Such homes as those of Dr. Richardson, Col. A. Campbell, Albert Allen, Professor Loos and President Pendleton welcomed the students. Three of the faculty were bachelors, and could not contribute in this large way to the social life of the institution, but were exceptionally gracious and friendly in all their intercourse with the boys. Many of the village people contributed to make the student's life home-like, and Wellsburg, and even Wheeling, had some share in this ministry. "Biz" was brisk. The girls of Bethany—who can ever forget them! Some had been the girls of Bethany since the foundation of the college, and had rejoiced in the triumphs and wept over the valedictories of class after class. Some, it may be, had penned little perfumed notes and dispatched them by the Bethany small boy to more than one favorite, served as "steady company" for them at prayer-meetings and society performances, crowned them with blossoms on commencement day, even entered into tender relations with them, and then—found others more agreeable to their coy and inconstant fancy; yet many a boy came to know at Bethany the best woman that ever lived. The girls of Bethany—they are staid matrons now, but they stayed for many commencements before they became matrons!

Diversions were few. An occasional ride to Wheeling or Pittsburg to hear such men as Gough or Wendell Phillips was a red letter event, and a visit to Wellsburg was even a matter of record, but many of the students never stirred beyond the limits of the little town. Books and the societies absorbed them. Baseball was a favorite outdoor game. Winter always brought fine skating on the creek, and sledding on the hillside, and when the season of mud was not with us there were splendid walks along the pike or over the hills. The banks of the Buffalo afforded charming strolls for the reflective youth, and Three-State Hill, Logan's Hollow, the Lone Grave, the Camp Ground, the Falls and Bethany Mansion were some of the attractive spots. Now and then a peripatetic lecturer came around, but the evening amusements were mostly provided by the college talent. Holidays at Bethany were like angels' visits. President Pendleton had the University of Virginia idea, and Thanksgiving day, the week of Christmas and the twenty-second of February were the only let-ups in the college year.

Hazing was never carried to any extreme in those good days. Certain fellows of the baser sort would, at rare intervals, indulge in "snipe shooting" when the unsuspecting plebe was conducted to some recess among the hills out of sight of the college, and set to watch while his companions set out to explore the coves for the birds. Left alone to his meditations, he would come to himself after a time and have to find his way home as best he could. The process of "smoking out" was also resorted to once in a while. A handful of red pepper on a layer of ashes covering some live coals in a scuttle and placed in the hallway, soon sent the young man, struggling for breath, to a window, which, like as not, he would find securely fastened. The Kangaroo Court was an ancient fraud which sat in a barn or some other out-of-the-way temple of justice, and some smart Aleck or clownish freshman would be summoned to appear before it. Judge and jury, lawyers and witnesses were all in regular session, grave and absurd charges made, the case argued as for life or death, and sentence imposed in due solemn form.

Around the Gulf to Mexico.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

The Mexican Desert.

On entering Mexico from the Texas side, one starts up a gradual slant, and is on a table-land or plateau everywhere except when he gets off of it at or near the seacoast. Everything being lifted up in this manner, so that the ordinary ground is from 3,000 to 8,000 feet above sea level, any mountain you find in your way is so much extra effort to reach the sky. Considering that these mountains start so high, one should not be disappointed to find that they do not "tower." In fact, they do not tower, north of Mexico City, and the wildly picturesque effect of the south is gained not by the ground getting up higher than on the north, but by the steep descents from the plateau level. In other words, in the south, the ground is cut away from the mountains so you can see how high they are. It is that way with the Ozarks. Your train climbs to their summit from Missouri without your knowing, except from a study of geography, that you are getting up in the world. But after leaving Bentonville (the pearl of the Ozarks), if you go south, you find mountains, because the plateau gives out and leaves the high points to look out for themselves.

When I went to Mexico I had never seen a mountain, because it was night when I got off of the Ozarks to traverse Arkansas. And when I at last saw the Sierra Madre, I felt that mountains were not what I had been led to expect. I didn't say anything about it, though, and by repeatedly reminding myself that these elevations were started so high above sea level that one should be grateful for the merest hump above the plain, I grew reconciled. I had expected to look up vast eerie heights and maybe feel my head swim, and see dazzling snow, perhaps, melting into the blue of the sky, and admire the changed vegetation, luxuriant at the base, dwarfed at the middle, spindled near the bold peaks. But there was nothing of the sort. The mountains I saw were the same, up and down. They were sterile and harsh looking, with scrubby cactus clambering up their sides, but never enough of it to make the profile look really green. They were not particularly high, either, and there were no peaks. They lay on either side of our course in long, never-ending, wavering lines and curves. And beyond each line other lines, each a fainter blue. Sometimes you saw an abrupt precipice far away, and you imagined that if you could only reach that part of the chain you would find a lofty link; but usually the train made straight for the high places, and the closer it came the smaller it grew, till as you skirted its feet it looked about the size of a healthy Kentucky hill without the fertility. But always beyond the mountain that had disappointed you rose other mountains, white and dusty, and beyond them still others softly blue; such as they were, there were enough of them.

And at last one is impressed with their extent. Instead of being disappointed because they can't get higher, and giving it up, and sinking back into the plateau, they persevere in their mediocre existence. They never give out. All day long we travelled, but there were the mountains, ever looking into the car window. It was about half past ten when we entered the desert. It had seemed to be the desert long before that, but it wasn't. The desert came at half past ten. We bade farewell to the maguey plants and those cacti we had thought palms,—the kind that look like an Indian buried to his waist in the sand, with a spangle of eagle feathers crowning his head; and we saw our last of the cacti that look like apple trees growing cucumber pickles; and the cacti of the flat, round plates whose edges bear the prickly-pear; and the stick-like cacti, which being set close, make fences twenty feet high of living green, or rather of the boiled green of the cooked asparagus; and the scrubby cacti; and all the other cacti, such as the heniquen, from which they make hemp. When you find a place too rocky and dusty and glaring for some sort of a cactus to set up in business, that place is a desert. I think I know why our cactus at home never did anything except to raise a few weak, timid little stickers. It wasn't treated right. A cactus ought to be put in a hot place, and dust blown all over it every ten minutes, and sand banked against its feet, and gravel and sticks thrown at it, and the rain kept off of it for ten months at a stretch. Then if there is a goat to browse on its edges and a Mexican to cut half of it away to cook or wear, that old cack will feel at home, and do wonders.

When we entered the desert, the only green thing to relieve the eye was the mesquite, a dwarf tree with leaves, branches and apparently everything that goes to make a tree a tree,—but no higher than a man's knee. The dust, started by the train, became terrific and presently the mesquite gave it up, and left us to our misery. Nothing but sand, rock, naked mountain-shoulders, thrust out of the glaring earth, and as a relief, the blue lines drawn across the lower sky. Every window and door was jealously closed, but it was not long before a great revolving pillar of dust swung from one end of the car to the other. It salted our clothes, then peppered them; it mocked at collars and cuffs; it poured down our throats and smarted our eyes. The intense heat caused mountain torrents to course down our brows for the drifting sand to choke up. Every article of clothing not indispensable was discarded like burdens thrown overboard from a reeling vessel. I presume the "mean temperature" of that place is officially placed at "65," or some other cool figure; I have hardly ever visited a locality when it was at its mean temperature. Such a find must be the event of a lifetime. For instance, I have lived in a town where I have seen the "average rainfall" descend in a single night, and have enough rain-falls after that within a month to stock the next five years with "average rainfalls." But it is not for me to complain of that desert; it was mine to come and go. People live in it! At first I was surprised to see wagon roads winding through the sands toward the grassless mountains. Then we came upon villages, just like those we had been passing all morning.

The Mexican villages rarely extend to the dignity of a dozen buildings, unless you count the walls. The houses are of adobe (pronounced a-do-bie), a whitish brick of sand or mud; that is, they are of adobe when the owner is a man of means. Oftener it is built of cornstalks, or sugar cane, the same being tied together with strings, and a thatch of straw thrown aloft for a roof; and pretty often it is a hole in the ground with thatch raised two or three feet above it; and sometimes it is just a tent. The roofs of the adobe buildings at the stations give evidence that some American selling corrugated iron roofing has been along the road; but in the villages, out from the track, the adobe houses, always square, have flat, white roofs, lower by a foot or more in the middle than at the edges. I suppose it is built to catch all the rain coming. I spoke of the walls in the villages. I am sure they are built for no purpose except to get the loose stones off the ground. Sometimes they start from a village straight up a mountain-side as if with the intention of fencing half of it off; but it always stops and comes to nothing. Sometimes they surround two sides of a village, sometimes they almost surround an adobe house. But they are never finished. They are just there. They do not need so many buildings to a family as people with more complex notions of life, so perhaps half a dozen cabins may shelter fifty people, to say nothing of the stock. Men who carry their beds with them (in the shape of the blanket), wherever they go, can get into it without having a separate room built for the purpose. Why go off by yourself to go to bed, when it is right there wound about your waist? One board is as soft as another. As for the women, they are little children until twelve, and married ladies after that, so all this life is a sort of camping out among friends and relatives. On one occasion I saw the wooden door of an adobe house open and a Mexican lady came out. She looked back and invited her hog to come and take the air. The old fellow poked his head out of the door, looked sleepily at our train, and turned back to the comforts of the drawing-room. It is all very primitive and rich in simplicity. One wonders how these Aztecs make their living, and if they find life in that desolate waste a matter of satisfaction. Do their toothless dames take pipe from mouth to recount some legend of Cortez, handed down by the saved remnant of Montezuma's men? Do they grow restive under Diaz's flat command that they shall wear clothes whether they like it or no, that they shall not come to the capital dressed only in their natural skin? Or is it balm to them that they can be as dirty as they please, and work as little as nature's wants require? One cannot tell by examining their faces. The solemn passivity of the Indian looks back at you without frown or smile.

At last the mesquite shows up again; then the cactus in all its tortured varieties; then woods of rubber-tree and pepper-tree, and things begin to look pretty green once more. The thick dust clouds are past. There is a rush for the toilet rooms, and one bathes for ten miles and brushes his clothes for the next twenty-five. Here is a track that looks like an Italian road cut in rock, broad and smooth and white. It parallels the railroad, then curves away and comes again. It is the bed of a mountain stream. Finally, when it dives down into a valley as the train takes you up a mountain side, a few pools are to be seen, lost in the sandy waste, like drops of water shining on a silvery blade. The train comes down from the mountain, the stream rises from the depths. Here is a larger body of water; here is a continuous gleaming current; here is a fine swimming place, with a lady bathing in it, and you look quickly another way.

After a good supper on the train, which included turkey and cranberries, oysters, strawberries and cream, the ride on the end of the observation train was an unmixed delight. The moon was full, and the mountains were all about us. We had passed the highest point of our journey, nearly 9,000 feet, and were going down hill all the way to Mexico City. The train fairly threw up its hind wheels and flew. As night came on the winding of the track grew incessant; first around the mountain side, then around another. Looking back, there was no glancing down a level road. The sierras seemed to crowd upon one from every side. No pathway out of the jumble was to be seen. The engine was always coming into view from the rear car, as it doubled, as if the train were playing crack-the-whip. Over the desolate wastes of those lonely mountains the moonlight threw a veil of hushed mystery. Sometimes a cluster of adobe houses came into view, with no light at the wooden windows, no sign of life about the flat doorways. Suddenly we would dive into a tunnel and when we sped out upon a plain, the moon was still shining, the mountains were still waiting for us. And after we had gone to our berths the moonlight and the mountains, those century-old comrades of the Mexican valley, danced through the waste places of our dreams.

A Wonderful Experience.

Hicks, the entombed miner of Bakersfield, Cal., who had been buried in a caved-in mine for fifteen days, said to his nurse in the hospital after his release: "It's been a good many years since I said a prayer. It's a long time, so long ago that I can not remember the prayer. Religion never bothered me much, but from now on I am going to pray. During all the time I lay pinned down in that little hole there was something greater than my own physical strength that sustained me. God stayed with me down there, and now that I am up here on top of this good green earth again, I am going to stay with him. From now on I pray."

Let us hope the miner will be as good as his word. After his almost unparalleled experience, his gratitude to God for his rescue ought to lead him to serve him devotedly the rest of his life.

How to Catch Fish.

Now how are you to increase the sport of the catching? Of course you want the largest fish, and these are usually the oldest and most wary. This wariness you do not expect to change, but you hope to defeat it. Study the habits of the fish, where and when and upon what it feeds or what it seeks. Let your fishing be governed by your discoveries. And while you are offering him what he wants and where he wants it, remember these old fellows are fussy about their table-service. They do not feel hungry if a boy throws his shadow across their table, or shakes it by rushing up to it. Stalk your fish then as quietly as you are able, and if you have alarmed it in any way stay out of sight and remain as quiet as possible for a long time until your clumsiness is forgotten, and then let your lure, whether bait or fly, drift into the fish's sight, as if you had nothing to do with it. And remember that the finer your tackle the more likely this pretence will be to succeed.

You want also as good a fight as you can get. Remember that the fighting qualities of fish are, as a rule, best developed in those which live in rapid and turbulent water, and those which pursue their prey and catch it by their own nimbleness. But any fish will fight better if you make the struggle more even by using delicate tackle. You win then only by dexterity of handling, which is one of the great charms of angling and about the only one, as regards the mere catching of fish, on which the experienced angler sets much value. The secret of success with delicate tackle may be told in two words—care and coolness. Care in the preparation of the tackle, coolness in handling it.—From "Harper's Outdoor Books for Boys."

The Lilacs.

BY MARY C. BLACKBURN.

I've been thinking all day of the lilacs
That grew by the old door-stone
And tossed their cool branches in greeting
At my long gone childhood's home.

I can smell the sweet, sweet perfume
As I did in childhood's years
When my life knew naught of sadness
And my eyes no bitter tears.

Since then I've seen fairer blossoms
Known scent of rarer bloom,
But none can touch the heart-chords
As the lilac's sweet perfume.

In a Jungle Village.

By Adelaide Gail Frost.

Rolls of bedding, lunch baskets, water bottles, umbrellas, huge pith sun hats, all the paraphernalia required for even a short journey in India, is heaped upon the platform of the pretty little Indian railway station of Pendra Road. Overhead the clear stars are shining; how soft and cooling their pale light after the burning glare of India's sun in May. On one side is a bazaar from which human murmurs come, on the other side the jungle breathes soft whispers, the language of the leaves of peepul and banyan as well as of maple and oak of far away. It is very pleasant waiting here for a midnight train which is to take us out seven miles to a tiny station on the Bengal-Napur railway. The train comes steaming into this jungle station as it does into some great center of traffic and two sleepy golden heads are bundled into a compartment and Mrs. Madsen, Miss Pope and I follow with Puni and Sukhrai, two married daughters of the Mahoba Orphanage. Mr. Madsen went in a separate compartment with all our miscellaneous bundles. When we had arrived at the pretty wayside station of Kodri we were met by an elephant! A young captain of the Third Brahmins, an Englishman, is hunting in these parts and is at present in the Mission Village of Virginiapur. He brought over his elephant to take any or all of us out to the village. Miss Pope was the daring one who ascended the huge mountain of flesh and Mrs. Madsen and I and the children jogged along in a bullock cart. Brother Madsen has surely been a path finder; much of the jungle has been cleared and a good road made, as good as the ordinary country road. Here we come to the thatched and mud huts, the tiny homes of the little pioneer settlement. The rest house for the mission family is soon pretty with green boughs and the table is set for breakfast. The captain has prepared to entertain us. He sends over from his tent tea and jam and biscuits for our "little breakfast." He has no tiger trophies to exhibit but he has killed elk and the wild cow called nilgae or "blue cow." There are many tigers in the jungle about this district. Captain McTavis said he had seen eight in the hilly country all about. I wanted a tiger story but could not draw out this young Highlander; he preferred to talk of polo and Inverness. Brother Madsen has had the jungle cleared up, so there is much less danger to the villagers and their cattle than formerly. The Christians settled here are farmers and the village is first of all a Christian settlement; if heathen farmers come in it is by the permission of the missionary and Christian inhabitants. There are comparatively few such villages in India. The Christians also own their own land while to the heathen the land is rented. Usually a Christian is only allowed to settle in a village on sufferance. There are eight Christian families living here—the wives in four of these are orphanage girls. We brought one of our Mahoba brides out here with us, Sukhrai, to the neat little home her young husband had prepared for her. I went to the homes of all the girls. I was proudly shown the chickens and the stable for the bullocks and the hand mills and huge bins of rice. These bins are mostly like exaggerated hogsheads. The framework is of bamboo plastered with clay within and without and then filled usually with rice; the seed rice is carefully plastered up. Texts in Hindi and pictures are pasted on to the walls of these little homes. It seems strange to see Milapi and Champi, whom I was wont to see in the orphanage life in Mahoba, in this little jungle village, and I thank God they are able to serve their generation in just this way. The hill people near are all demon worshippers. A dab of paint on a stone, a bunch of peacock feathers, are signs of their demon worship. They thoroughly believe in witches and demon possession. Our friends in Pendra Road feel that two men who died there certainly died from some machinations of witch doctors, either horribly frightening weak people to death, or poisoning them. In one case the latter view was entertained. Any way the hill people and the inhabitants of the jungle are the prey of a thousand fears and superstitions; the fear of wild animals is nothing beside their fear of demons. Our young people have many an opportunity to speak of Jesus who is all-powerful over evil.

Captain McTavis had a fine breakfast for us served in courses right out there in the jungle. We had tongue of the nilgae and steak from the same and liver and bacon, all properly served in courses. It seems so strange yet to step from the jungle right into civilization.

There had been a shower out of season so the farmers were plowing, but they will not sow yet; they only take advantage of any softening of the earth to plow. They are usually cutting and hauling timber and building in this season. One sees much timber stretching away to the low line of blue hills on the horizon. I often wonder as I look away to those hills what life is going on there. The hill peoples are mostly aborigines and very different from the Hindus of the plains. The hill tribes here are mostly Bhumias and Gonds. They wear their hair long and wild and the men wear great wooden earrings. They use bow and arrows for weapons. The railway is, of course, a great wonder to them. A missionary brought some of his wild hill people to the railway in Pendra one time and to his surprise it was not the huge engine and swiftly flying trains that impressed them, but the abundance of iron. They treasure iron axes in their forest homes like gold. They wanted much to cut off a piece of the miles on miles of iron they saw but were told by their Sahib that they must not cut any of the iron rail off until they came to the end of the iron road. To them this was the land of iron. The evangelists from Pendra go out to these people and the hill people who come down on to the plains act as go-betweens. Should a stranger appear before a hill village, in no time it would be emptied of every human being and only chickens remain. There is always a back exit to the village and the people flee to the jungle when a stranger approaches. Mrs. Madsen says they have found a little hill village quite empty when they arrived. The Christians who have once been hill people can act as messengers to allay the fears of others so a missionary can go to them. These Christians often look most wild with their long black hair and scant clothing, but they are pioneers who are taking and shall take the light into earth's remote and inaccessible places. It is a grand work which is being done here. In the afternoon Mrs. Madsen called all the women of the village to her and talked to them of the Great Master and sang with them the "new songs."

Captain McTavis had a good dinner prepared for us; we even had plum cake and delightful chocolates there in the tiger country. In the evening we went over to the station. The tall trees rose to stately heights in the moonlight. We passed a machau (platform) high in a tree, from which a hunter can watch for tigers with safety. The elephant and bullock carts conveyed us over again. We reached home about ten o'clock. I could but think of the new little nest in the jungle.

OUR ANNUAL SUMMER SALE

OF GOOD BOOKS AT REDUCED PRICES IS NOW IN PROGRESS

That the price is reduced does not mean that the subject matter of these books is no longer of current interest, or that there ever was a large profit in the original price. But it is among the inevitables of the book business that there should be some left overs,—books as good as new, but too few to insert in our catalogue, or neglected in our advertising and needing to again be brought into merited prominence, or in the process of the suns having especially to do with these junctures of time and thought.

We find ourselves in possession of a great variety of books that ought to be distributed among church studies and home libraries instead of reposing in our storehouse.

These reduction prices are an earnest of our desire to scatter their light.

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, AUGUST 22, 1907.

MY SYMPHONY OF REST

THIS is the season of the year when many people can let go their usual tasks to give the healing forces of life a chance to restore the things that have been worn away in the strife that goes along with making a living or making a life. We seek rest in the majesty, mystery, and music of the ocean; the sublimity, stillness, and variety of the mountains; the peace, beauty, and brilliancy of the summer gloried fields; the fellowship of fun, the charm of reminiscence and the viewing of old pictures of memory amongst friends and relatives whose hearts beat next to ours in the sweet extravagant friendships of hilarious youth; and we seek it in travel with its swift kaleidoscopic changes of houses, landscapes, and people. There are many healing forces in this world and rest is divine, for Jesus is ever saying to the overworked and overworn, "Come ye apart and rest awhile." But there is a height of spiritual experience where all the jingling voices and contending forces that wear away the heart flow into rhythm and blend in the music of rest. Its secret is religious. One who was peaceful amidst stress and storm says: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." In the uplands of the spirit there is a Palestine where the Master still works miracles, shows himself in holy hours of transfiguration, changes the water of disappointment into the wine of joy, and where the soul is still caught away in rhapsodies unspeakable when in low, sweet, gentle tones he gives the great sacrament of absolution: "Thy sins which are many are forgiven thee because thou hast loved much." When my heart goes apart with Him in that Palestine he gives me my symphony of rest.

—If you are not able to "talk religion," just hand to your neighbor last week's and this week's and next week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, asking him to read the editorials on "Some First Principles."

—When you go into your new or remodeled church, you want new hymn-books. There is none better than "Gloria in Excelsis." This is the verdict of musicians, preachers and the people in the pews. It is the Twentieth Century Hymnal. Send for prices and styles.

—Are you planning for your Bible school work? September approaches. If a superintendent you will find our helps invaluable. Adams' "Primer on Teaching" (25 cents) and Lawrance's "How to Conduct the Sunday-school" ($1.25) should be studied. The Christian Publishing Company will supply them, as well as their own special helps.

—Are you studying the history of our religious movement? In 1909 we celebrate our one hundredth anniversary. Are you content to be ignorant of how we came to be reformers? "Christian Union," by J. H. Garrison ($1); "Historical Documents," by C. A. Young (75 cents), the Bethany books and other literature we can advise you about.

—The latest historical book is "The Rise of the Current Reformation," by Hiram Van Kirk, which is fresh from the press of the Christian Publishing Company. The substance of this book was delivered before the Texas Lectureship in the winter of 1905. It was very cordially received and the opinion expressed that it was a most valuable contribution to our historical literature. The point of the argument is that the "Current Reformation" antedates the Campbells. These were the voice, not the source. This does not mean that the author in any way detracts from the glory of the men who led our movement for the restoration of the essentials in primitive Christianity and the union of God's people.

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a cheap-costing paper. For his "Advocate" the Methodist pays $2 in advance. The Congregationalist pays $2 if paid when sending his name, for the "Advance," while if he waits until the end of the year the charge is $2.50. If he wants the "Congregationalist," he must pay $3 in advance. The Universalist pays $2 for his paper. If the Presbyterian pays $2.50 within ninety days of sending his name, the "Interior" will be sent to him for a year; but if he wishes to delay payment he must expend $3. The Baptist is asked for his "Standard" or "Examiner" $2 in advance, with 50 cents added if payment is delayed. And none of these papers contain more or better reading matter than is in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, for which we are charging only $1.50.

—Although it is the quietest season of the year, interest in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST does not wane on the part of many of its friends. Here is a list of clubs at $1.50 for each paper sent to us last week:

Every added subscriber means added strength to the brotherhood. It means greater knowledge of our aims, increased power to achieve them on the part of the new reader. What would not even 1,000 new readers a month mean to our cause?

—The Spiritual Side of Our Plea, by A. B. Jones. This profound book was designed to lay stress upon some phases of "our plea" that have heretofore, as a rule, received too little emphasis. It requires study, but it invites and rewards it. 396 pages, $1.50.

—Moral and Spiritual Aspects of Baptism, by N. J. Aylsworth, 471 pages, $1.50. Many of our greatest men, without the slightest reservation, pronounce this the greatest work on baptism that has ever been written. No man is best prepared to meet the deeper difficulties regarding the design of baptism till he has studied this book.

A Word About Union with Baptists

By W. T. Moore

As there has recently been much talk about the union of Baptists and Disciples, it may be well to look at some of the practical difficulties in the way. I am writing from my personal standpoint, and will try to indicate just how I feel about the matter. Perhaps my own feelings are more or less a fair representation of what many others feel on this subject. Looking back over history and considering the responsibilities involved, I am constrained to say that there ought not to have been any separation. There was never any theological reason why the two religious bodies should have a separate existence. Mr. Campbell expressed himself in very positive language on the subject; and just before he died he stated to Brother C. L. Loos his great regret that such a separation had ever taken place. He always contended that it was not his fault. In looking over the history of the past nothing is clearer than that the severance took place simply through misrepresentations and misunderstandings and could never have taken place had it not been for these misrepresentations and misunderstandings.

Looking at the whole matter from this point of view, it is not strange that I have personally done everything in my power to heal the breach. I have served on four committees to meet similar committees from different wings of the Baptist family to consider the union question, and I am on a committee at this time which has the same object in view. In all the conferences of these committees, I have been struck with the fact that, when we understand each other, there is no essential theological difference between the two bodies. There are, doubtless, differences of opinion with regard to some important matters. But these differences do not involve any essential things with respect to salvation, and this has generally been the conclusion to which the committees have arrived after a full and free conference. There has never been much difficulty in these committees coming to an irenicon with respect to the union question. They have been ready to take the final step, but the real trouble has been with respect to the rank and file of both religious bodies, and especially with respect to their half-educated ministry. With the really well-educated and thoughtful members union between the two bodies has always been thought possible and even probable. But there is another class with whom "ignorance is bliss," and therefore with them it is "folly to be wise." I have intimated that I frequently have had very earnest convictions about the importance and even possibility of union with the Baptists, and I have always cherished these convictions until I have attended a Baptist convention or read a Baptist book. Usually the convention or the book knocks all my hopes into "smithereens". The high talk and sectarian attitude of the average speaker in a Baptist convention are enough to satisfy any "Campbellite" who may be in attendance, that the union question is still very far in the distance. But if the convention does not settle his views with respect to the matter let him read a book intended to set forth Baptist views in contrast with the views of other religious bodies, and, my word for it, the last vestige of hope of union with the Baptists will quickly be dissipated.

I have just had an experience of this kind. I have been looking over a Baptist book, recently issued by the Sunday School Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, entitled, "Baptists—Why and Why Not" The book contains twenty-five papers by twenty-five writers, and a declaration of Baptist faith. It is a literary curiosity. It ought to be preserved in some literary museum and marked "right side up with care". It should be placed under glass. It is really, from a theological point of view, the most remarkable book that has appeared in the twentieth century, and I doubt whether anything equal to it will ever appear again; for I think it has exhausted the vocabulary of absurdity, and consequently nothing more is left to be said.

There is a chapter in this book on "Why Baptist and not Campbellite", by Edgar E. Folk, D. D., editor of the "Baptist and Reflector," Nashville, Tenn. I understand that Doctor Folk is a brother of the present distinguished governor of the state of Missouri, and for the sake of his worthy brother I am sorry to have to refer to this article as I must do in the interest of truth. Doctor Folk gives twelve reasons why he is a Baptist and not a "Campbellite." Now when I say I personally object to nearly all the things with which he finds fault among what he calls "Campbellites" just as much as he does, it will readily be understood that his representation of the Christian Church or Disciples of Christ is an entire perversion of their religious position. I do not think I have ever read in the same space anything half as ridiculous as his statement concerning our religious position. The only comfort I have in the matter is in the fact that he misrepresents intelligent Baptists nearly as much as he does the Disciples of Christ. I am quite sure that not one in a hundred of the Baptist preachers, outside of the Southern Baptist Associations, would agree with what he says about their own faith. But it is none of my concern at present to reconcile him with his own people. I simply want to call attention to a few of the points which he makes against the Disciples.

His first reason for not being a "Campbellite", he says, is that the latter believes that "sin is on the outside, in the word, the act". Now this is what we call a half-truth, and therefore the worst kind of an untruth. That the Disciples believe sin is an act is perfectly true, and in this respect they are supported by the teaching of both the Old and the New Testament. But when he intimates that they believe that sin is simply "on the outside," and is not a matter of the heart and inner life, he wholly misrepresents the Disciples. James tells us that "lust when it hath conceived bringeth forth sin, and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." Paul tells that "sin is the transgression of the law," and these with many other passages point clearly to the fact that sin must be regarded in some sense as an act, but certainly not an act simply on the "outside," but an act carrying with it all the depravity of the human heart.

Doctor Folk again declares the "Campbellite" says that "regeneration is simply a reformation of the outward life, expressed especially in the act of baptism." He then quotes Mr. Campbell where Mr. Campbell says "regeneration is equivalent to immersion." But he utterly fails to indicate the fact that when Mr. Campbell said this he was showing the difference between the use of the word regeneration in the New Testament and its popular use. Mr. Campbell was using the term regeneration in what he conceived to be its New Testament meaning, and in this he may have been right or he may have been wrong—that is not material. But Mr. Campbell held to a change of heart, a change of life, and a change of state, as strongly as any Baptist does, and he held furthermore that what a Baptist understands by "regeneration" is an antecedent to any value at all in the ordinance of baptism. Mr. Campbell was simply contending for a pure speech, and not for a speech which was likely to lead to misunderstanding, as is clearly shown by Doctor Folk's statements. If Doctor Folk will read my little book on the subject of "The Fundamental Error of Christendom" (Christian Publishing Company), he will find out that the Disciples hold to the notion that "baptismal regeneration" is that very fundamental error which is the parent of nearly every other error among Christians.

Further on Doctor Folk says: "The Campbellite believes that repentance is a mere change of mind, an outward reformation." We have here another statement which clearly shows that Doctor Folk is aiming to convince his readers that Disciples of Christ do not believe in any inward change at all with respect to religion. Nothing could be further from the truth than this intimation. The very confession which all penitent believers are required to make, viz., that they believe with all their heart that Jesus is the Christ the Son of the living God, shows conclusively that any faith that has not a

Are We Prosperous?

Of course we are prosperous now. But is our present much-advertised era of unparalleled prosperity about to issue in a period of depression? Many think so. The prevalence of speculation is one reason for the impression. Perhaps the pessimistic notion that prosperity never can last and that, as there is a valley just beyond every hill, so lean years must always follow fat years, has still more to do with the widespread acceptance of this view. It is true, to be sure, that prosperity tempts to reckless extravagance and that extravagance leads to poverty. But this simple philosophy does not serve as a sure guide in the prediction of financial conditions. Many signs point to a continuance of prosperity. This year's crops promise to be good, though in general, perhaps, not quite as good as the extraordinary ones of last year. But a lapse from a bumper crop to an average yield ought not to be disturbing. Railroad earnings are greater than ever before. Wages are high and strikes are few. The strike of the telegraph operators is the only one of serious proportions at the present time, and that is the climax of twenty years of friction and not specially chargeable to present conditions. Great industrial and transportation companies have been and are still issuing vast quantities of securities to raise money for the increase of equipment necessary to take care of their enlarged volume of business. This demand for money has taken up a large part of the available cash in the country. Money is busy; therefore it is, in one sense, scarce. This makes it increasingly difficult to float new bond issues. It may, therefore, be necessary for many enterprises to shorten sail somewhat, not because hard times are at hand, but because, even in the best of good times, and in the richest country in the world, there is not enough money to do everything at once.

What Mr. Rockefeller Thinks.

Nevertheless, Mr. Rockefeller has given out another interview in which he confidently predicts financial "depression, disaster and chaos." The cause of this lamentable condition, he thinks, is the unfriendly attitude of the administration toward capital. The sign of the approaching "depression, disaster and chaos" is the increasing scarcity of money and the apparent reluctance of the people who have it to invest it in the sort of enterprises which received their approval and support a year or two ago. He says that he can judge by his own experience. Formerly, when he was invited by one of the large banking and promoting houses to come into a syndicate which they were forming, he had to act quickly to get in. If he took a few days to consider the matter, he always found that the syndicate had been completed without him. Now an offer of the same sort waits until he is ready to give his decision, and there is always plenty of room in any syndicate. There is no scramble for shares on the part of the investors, but rather a scramble for investors on the part of those who have securities to dispose of. This is an interesting phenomenon, to be sure, but we do not think that it necessarily presages even depression, to say nothing of disaster and chaos. One feels a certain delicacy about differing with Mr. Rockefeller on any point touching finance, and yet his point of view may render it difficult to form a correct judgment on some kinds of financial questions. For example, we would hesitate to accept him as authority on the cause and cure of trusts, and yet he undoubtedly knows a good deal about trusts. To one in his position, it is inevitable that the policy of the administration should seem a ruinous one. It is scarcely to be expected that he would regard with equanimity and approval an administration under which his own company is fined to the amount of $29,000,000, even though he does not expect to pay the fine. As to the scarcity of capital, and its slowness in coming into syndicates and embarking in enterprises generally, that is not necessarily a bad sign. It may mean only that capital is already profitably busy. It may also mean that, as a result of recent revelations regarding some of the methods of high finance—the Harriman type of bond issues, for example—the bond-buying public has become more carefully solicitous to know what it is getting for its money before it accepts any offered investment. As a matter of fact, we think that both of these facts are operative to explain the difficulty which some of the large promoters have experienced lately in financing their enterprises. And both are wholesome signs.

Liquor and Labor.

The recent victory for prohibition in Georgia has given aid and comfort to the anti-liquor forces everywhere. In Indiana the Anti-Saloon League has undertaken to make that state dry by the year 1912. Aroused by this threat, the liquor people are endeavoring to enlist organized labor on their side in the fight. The Bartenders' League proposes to appeal to the coming convention of the State Federation of Labor, which is to meet in September. It is scarcely to be feared that the Federation will commit such a serious blunder as to throw the weight of its influence on the side of the liquor business. The laboring man is, with one exception, the greatest loser by the saloon. The exception is the laboring man's family. The rich man can get along fairly well. The money he spends for liquor is not a serious matter to him. He runs no risk of losing his job for drunkenness. He usually drinks with more or less moderation, "like a gentleman," and his drinking is not likely to carry him into any worse company than his own. To be sure, his sons are very likely to go to the devil by way of the saloon, and that is some disadvantage. But his family is not often brought to starvation or beggary, and when he gets seriously intoxicated his valet or the servant at the club can take care of him, and he does not have to expend his alcoholic energy in beating his wife. Of course, even among the rich a large proportion of the divorces are produced, directly or indirectly, by whisky. But among the laboring classes the saloon has its best opportunity to exhibit its fruits. Its effect on character is no worse, but its economic results are vastly greater and worse. The damage that the saloon can do to the working man is vastly greater than the amount of good that the most wisely-conducted union can do. An alliance between liquor and labor would be a greater calamity to labor than any outside enemy could inflict upon it.

The Speedy West.

The speedy West used to handle a certain class of criminal cases with a degree of promptness which is unknown to the legal procedure of more deliberate sections. The present practice, in most parts of even the wildest West, is to give even a horse-thief the benefit of all the formalities of court procedure. But the West has again contributed an object-lesson in obviating the law's delays, this time in a civil case. A ranchman in Wyoming committed assault and battery on a neighbor. The neighbor telephoned to Cheyenne, thirty-five miles away, for a warrant. It was issued. The accused was notified by telephone that he was wanted and replied that he would consider himself under arrest and subject to the orders of the sheriff. When the case was called, he entered a plea of guilty, by telephone, was fined fifteen dollars and costs, and sent his cheque by the first mail. This is better than getting justice while you wait. It is getting it while you go on with your work without waiting.

President Garfield.

Harry A. Garfield, son of President Garfield, has been chosen as the president of Williams College, his own and his father's alma mater. Mr. Garfield practiced law for several years, and has for some time been professor of politics at Princeton. He succeeds President Henry Hopkins, who is a son of the great president, Mark Hopkins, under whom the first Garfield was a student at Williams. Things seem to go by heredity at Williams. The son of the greatest alumnus succeeds the son of the greatest president the institution ever had. But, in reality, it is not a matter of heredity, or, if it is, it is a case of inherited fitness for the position. President Hopkins has been a worthy successor of his great father, and the new President Garfield is said to be a man of force and ability who, like his brother, the present Secretary of the Interior, has won his way on his merits. A consideration of the younger generation of prominent and successful men tends to shake one's confidence in the old theory that to be born and raised on the farm is almost an essential condition of success in life. At the time when to-day's elderly successful men were boys, the population of the country was predominately rural. The percentage of people who lived in the cities was very small. Consequently the boys who became great then were boys who came from the farm. Of course, there was scarcely any other place for them to come from. With the growth of urban population since the Civil War we find, coming of course a generation later, a marked increase in the proportion of successful men who were born and raised in the city. And with the increase in the number of well-to-do families, there is a corresponding increase in the number of successful men who did not struggle up through poverty, but had the early advantage of comfortable and cultured homes.

Some First Principles.

II. Coming to Christ.

The change in one's spiritual attitude toward God, which Jesus calls the new birth, is experienced by those only who come to know God as Christ has revealed him. Coming to Christ, then, is an essential condition of being born from above. There is probably no phrase that occurs oftener in the appeals of the evangelist to alien sinners than, "Come to Christ." But the average evangelist does not always make it very clear to honest inquirers just how they may come to Christ. It is clear that before any man is left entirely without excuse for remaining away from Christ it must be made very plain to him what course he should pursue, and what steps take in order to find Christ. The answer, too, should be applicable to all classes of people who have any desire to know Christ and to share in his life.

To men in a certain state of spiritual preparation it suffices to say, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." But others will say, "I can not believe on Christ, as the Son of God, in a unique sense, and therefore I can not come to him and be born again." This man may be perfectly honest and sincere. What answer have we for him and for all others who tell us that this or that fundamental truth of Christianity is to them incredible and impossible? How shall we direct them to come to Christ? It is clear that if we do not bring Christianity to their plane of thinking and feeling we can not reach them. We are convinced by long observation that a great deal of our evangelistic work fails just at this point. We have a suggestion to make here that we hope may prove helpful to evangelists and other soul winners.

We may be sure that Christ has left no hiatus, no chasm of separation between himself and any honest, truth-seeking soul. He comes to them where they are. Every rational human being believes some things to be right and others wrong. In other words, every man has a moral standard, or ideal, whether he lives up to it or not, and as a matter of fact, no man wholly conforms to his own moral ideals. His conduct falls short of his knowledge of right and duty. That is the beginning point with the man who says he can not believe in a supernatural Christ. Do you do all the things you believe to be right, and abstain from all things you believe to be wrong? He will confess he does not, if he be an honest man. Tell him, then, to begin right there, and make an honest effort to bring his life up to his present belief before he can expect to have a larger faith. This was Jesus' own method with the unbelievers of his day. He said to them, "Repent and believe the gospel;" that is, "Repent of the sins of which you are guilty under your present standard of belief, and then you will be prepared to accept the larger revelation of grace and truth contained in the gospel." Of course this larger faith in the gospel would bring with it a still higher standard of living and make possible and necessary a deeper repentance.

This is the simple and easy reconciliation of the difference which some good people seem to think separates the Disciples of Christ from other religious bodies, on the precedence of faith and repentance. Psychologically the Disciples are right in holding that sin can only be repented of when it is seen to be sin; but theologically they have been wrong, in so far as they have failed to see that every man has a measure of belief that condemns his course of conduct and that an honest effort to bring his life up to his present belief is essential to faith in Christ and his spiritual revelation. Hence Paul preached "repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ." Repentance toward God for sins committed under the moral law, written not only on tablets of stone, but on man's moral nature, is essential to "faith in our Lord Jesus Christ." But faith in Christ does necessarily precede the deeper repentance demanded by the perfect life which Christ reveals.

How, then, shall men come to Christ, the light of the world? By following such gleams of light as they have received from God, obediently till in their honest quest for the true way and the true life, they find themselves in the presence of Him who is the Way, the Truth and the Life."

"Useful but Inadequate."

William T. Ellis, who has been studying missions in the far East for a year, and reporting facts, as he saw them, through the daily press of the country, and whose judgment, in the main, has been very favorable to missions, sums up his impressions of the work as a whole, in a letter he has written from Rome, in the words we have quoted above. In answer to the question, "Are foreign missions worth while?" he says:

> The answer must be in the affirmative. Considered only from the standpoint of humanitarian and philanthropic service, the entire missionary enterprise justifies its existence. Add to these great works of healing, education and care for the orphaned and the needy, the beneficial influence which has been exerted upon the characters of thousands of native converts, as well as the more general, though none the less unmistakable influence wielded in behalf of civilization, and it will be seen that the missionary agencies which the churches of Christendom maintain at an annual expenditure of many millions of dollars is one of the tremendous twentieth century forces making for the world's progress.

But having said this much in favor of mission work he feels in duty bound to make some criticisms on the methods of conducting mission work. He is bold to say that he knows "of no other undertaking anywhere at all approaching this one in magnitude, which is managed in such a helter skelter, disorganized fashion, or on such an unbusiness-like basis." He goes on to explain that he does not refer "to the administration of the individual boards, but to the propaganda as a whole." He says that this inefficient way of doing things is the result of the lack of co-operation on the part of the different denominations in carrying on their mission work. On this point he says:

> Plainly, there is no sufficient reason why the mission work of the Protestant churches in heathen lands should not be done by them as one closely co-operating body. The avowed aim is the conversion of the people, and not the perpetuation and extension of denominational names, creeds and authority upon the mission field. The present arrangement is expensive, divisive and a hindrance to the end sought. What sense or reason is there, for instance, in establishing Northern and Southern Presbyterian churches in China, where the very existence of America is a nebulous matter to most of the people, and the fact of the civil war is unknown to 999 persons out of every thousand? Left to themselves, the native Christians in the field I have visited would not be long in forming one Christian church. It is not a pretty spectacle that the matured religion of Christendom should stand in the way of a union for which the founder of Christianity prayed.

This is what the Disciples of Christ have been trying to say, in their feeble way, for nearly a century, not only as to the hindrance of our work in heathen lands but in Christian lands as well. The tendency at the present time, however, is strongly toward closer co-operation and union, especially in the foreign field, and this tendency is bound to increase more and more.

Mr. Ellis criticises many of the missionaries for their demeanor in crossing the ocean. He thinks they show their provincialism and narrowness through their criticism of the action of others, and thus make themselves heartily disliked. He instances a case in hand where the missionaries united in a protest to the captain against his dropping out of a Sunday from the calendar, claiming that he might as well have omitted some other day. On the whole, he thinks that "the most serious of all the unintentional misrepresentations made by the missionaries is that the whole heathen world is on the verge of becoming Christian." He thinks that a very erroneous impression is made upon the mind of the public in this country, by the reports of missionaries who base their conclusions on faith rather than facts. Referring to the work accomplished and that which remains to be accomplished, Mr. Ellis says:

> For first-hand study of the field reveals that, with an occasional notable exception like Korea, heathendom has scarcely been budged by the missionaries' work. The great mass of the pagan world is as yet practically untouched by the Gospel. If Christians are determined to bear their religion to the whole earth, as is apparently their purpose, they must do things on a vastly larger scale than heretofore. Thus far only a mere beginning has been made. Instead of a war, it is only a reconnaissance in force—a brave, brilliant and successful reconnaissance, it is true, but nevertheless, only a reconnaissance. The real fighting can hardly be said to have begun.

This judgment is, no doubt, sincere enough, coming from one who looks upon the outside of things but who knows far less, necessarily, of the real change which has been wrought by Christianity in these pagan lands than the missionaries on the field. Whatever fact there may be in the representation which this correspondent gives should be a challenge to the faith and zeal of Christians in all lands, to push the battle more vigorously until the banner of Christ shall wave triumphantly over all the world.

Notes and Comments.

The "Religious Telescope," in making its annual statement about its circulation, says:

"One thing is certain, our lay members will not take the initiative in securing their religious reading matter. The men at the helm may do all that they can, but whether their work is well done or poorly done it will not reach the masses of our church except by the hearty co-operation of all our pastors. We wish to see the 'Telescope' made better and more helpful each year rather than the opposite. That is the intention of all connected with it as well as the desire of its readers."

This comment expresses the experiences of all who have to do with religious journals. The competition in the publishing world is keener than it ever has been, and the daily paper and the large illustrated magazine make it increasingly difficult for the religious newspaper to secure a hold unless there is more conscientious work done by the preachers and those of its readers who believe that it has a mission to fulfill that can be carried on by no other agency. We are glad to say THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has never in its history been more widely circulated or more popular with its readers than it has been during the past year.

There has, we think, been a change to some extent in the lengths to which preachers go in the choice of a subject-title of their sermons. But the sensational preacher is not yet dead. We note that some have been making Teddy bears the subjects of sermons. We could wish that the bears could come to life and use their hugging powers on such foolish men.

Never before has Christian union received as much attention, perhaps, in Canada as during the past year. Following the Federation conference there has been close approach on the part of several denominations. At nearly every church convention this year the subject has been touched upon, and there is, we believe, to be a meeting in Toronto some time in September to discuss the subject thoroughly.

We are especially interested, of course, in the efforts, isolated as yet, that are being made to form a closer organization of Baptists and Disciples. In the United States we are in a somewhat chaotic state. In parts of the country the union sentiment is strong; but, as W. T. Moore points out on another page, misunderstanding or prejudice control other parts to rigid denominational standards. Where Dr. Folk, for instance, gets his impressions of what the Disciples of Christ are we can not say. Certainly his knowledge is very limited. He can never have been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, or come in contact with our representative men. Yet many of our own brethren are ignorant of the best sentiment among Baptists. It is not usually by way of the backwoods road that the wheels of progress revolve, and we do not look for Christian union sentiment to develop quickly where there is such gross misunderstanding.

But in Canada there has been a courtesy of disposition and a freedom of investigation that is refreshing; and it has been seen under these circumstances that the kinship between Disciples and Baptists is very close. We are glad to note that Bro. Alexander McMillan has pointed this out in a lengthy interview which a representative of the "Winnipeg Tribune" has just had with him. This interview alone will accomplish much for Christian union in the Northwest. In it Brother McMillan tells some of the things we believe and teach as fundamental.

And he gives an outline of what has been accomplished in the way of practical union, as presented in his article in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of July 25, 1907. Brother McMillan properly dwells on the fact that as both peoples are congregational and democratic in their governmental ideals, there need be no waiting on any general conference. Every community can advance as it is ready and sees the need for co-operation.

The new president of the Wesleyan Conference in England spoke upon the educational problem in his inaugural sermon. "Can people be relied upon to give religious instruction in their homes?" "Can the Church undertake to impart such instruction in Sunday-schools?" These were some of the searching questions he asked. There was a time, he replied, "when an answer could have been given with confidence to these questions, but there is more hesitancy now. In some parts of England it would seem that the Church in the house is being broken up and the fellowship of family prayer is unknown. Every church needs a revival of home religion. That will be a glad day when the present burden of Christian education will be laid once more upon the mothers of the children of England."

Dr. Simon is also convinced that we have too little time in Sunday-school for thorough instruction, and many of the teachers have not the faculty and training which are necessary to enable them to make the most of the brief moments at their disposal. These deficiencies are causing great searchings of heart. So far as the religious life in the home is concerned, America is worse off than England. Our closer application to business and the freer life of the young people seem to make the opportunity for gathering the whole family together for a devotional service not an easy matter. But in the Sunday-schools we are perhaps better off than those in England, so far as Sunday-school methods are concerned. We are inclined to think, however, that the average teacher in England knows more about the Bible than the average teacher in America. There is a general conviction, at any rate, that there must be a thorough awakening on the subject of better discipline in the homes and more satisfactory religious teaching in the Sunday-schools than exists at present.

Jacob, "son of Aaron," contributes an absolutely unique article to the "Bibliotheca Sacra." He is the high priest of the Samaritans at Shechem, and writes in defense of the age-long belief of his people, now only a handful in "Mount Gerizim, the Only True Sanctuary." The high priest claims that Jerusalem could not be the true sanctuary, but that Gerizim was the place where Isaac was stretched on the altar of sacrifice, the Bethel of Jacob's vision, and a spot otherwise chosen and blessed. He adds:

"This is the creed of the Samaritans and their belief in this mountain. They offer their sacrifices upon it, perform upon it all that is necessary for their sanctification, in accordance with Deut. 33:18, 19. They argue that the great Prophet who shall lead the world will surely appear. He will bring up again the Shekinah upon the aforesaid mountain, in the second kingdom, when God shall look with favor upon his people and shall forgive them."

Who does not recall the words of the woman at Jacob's well as he reads of the contentions of the high priest: "Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet; our fathers worshiped in this mountain and ye say that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship"? This little remnant has never got beyond its timeworn creed. Shut off from the great world, it sees not that Christianity was intended to be a world religion, and that while it was to have its great start at Jerusalem, men were to go from there into all the world proclaiming the unsearchable riches.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Pentwater Musings.

The Easy Chair receives many testimonials of the pleasure and happiness it imparts to others. This is one of its chief aims. If there be bright spots and happy experiences in its life, it prefers to speak of these rather than of the shadowed hours, the perplexities, and the anxieties which come to every heart. To look upon the bright side of life, to magnify its joys and pleasures and to minimize its disappointments and sorrows we believe to be a duty which we owe both to ourselves and to others. To scatter sunshine and to cause two blades of happiness to grow in any life, where only one grew before, to cultivate a vision that sees the beauty and goodness of earth as well as its sins and sorrows, is the secret of maintaining one's own interest in life, for such an one realizes that life is worth the living. The old view of life that suspected that all joy and happiness possessed an evil quality, is wholly inconsistent with the conception of God as our Father who delights in the happiness of his children. Happily we are getting rid of the false idea that medicines and human experiences are efficacious in proportion to their bitterness. God has not built this world upon that plan, and he who seeks to be happy in some future heaven, by being miserable and making others miserable in this present life, is robbing himself both of the life that now is and of that which is to come. The law of continuity in spiritual things, indicated by the words, "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap," forbids us to believe that being miserable in this life, and thereby making others more or less miserable, is the best preparation for the life to come; and yet there is need for the caution that every one should see to it that the amusements and pastimes of life are innocent in themselves, and that there is lurking in them no seed of evil to one's self or to others. Another caution needed, perhaps, is that pleasure and earthly happiness are not the ends of our existence, but are incidental and, when innocent, helpful toward the chief end of life. Longfellow was right:

> "Not enjoyment and not sorrow
> Is our destined end or way;
> But to live that each to-morrow
> Find us farther than to-day."

We have been led into the above line of reflection by the pleasant experiences of the past week. The weather has been ideal, and each day has been filled to the brim with pleasant duties and recreation. Entering into this enjoyment as an important factor has been the association with friends whose felowship has made the days pass more swiftly. The presence of Dr. W. T. Moore and his wife as close neighbors, of George L. Snively as our guest for the past week, and a visit from Brother F. P. Arthur, Michigan's corresponding secretary, whose family is located at Pentwater for the present, and A. E. Jennings, of Detroit, have added sunshine to the Park and have made the place seem more homelike. Needless to say, these friends have all been delighted with Pentwater, and especially with Garrison Park, whose magnificent views they pronounce unequaled by anything they have seen in the state. They say that if the brethren throughout the South and West, who are seeking a summer resort in a cooler climate knew of the beauties and advantages offered by this place, our present supply of lots would not be equal to the demand. But they will find it out fast enough, and no doubt we shall soon have here a summer colony of Disciples whose fellowship will be not the least desirable feature of this ideal resort. Brother Snively goes at his amusement and recreation with the same strenuosity that marks his devotion to his business. The strings of fish which we have brought in during the past week, if we could picture them in these columns, would remove any latent skepticism in the minds of our readers as to whether there is any good fishing at this place. The hours not devoted to actual work or sleep have been mostly spent on the lake fishing, rowing, or sailing, or in climbing some of the Pisgah heights hereabouts, with their wide sweeping views of lakes, forests and farms. Brother Snively has let the contract for his cottage and is staking out the location for his house today. He returns to St. Louis at the end of a week's vacation as brown as a nut and as full of enthusiasm for Garrison Park, of which he is one of the proprietors, as he is for the Christian Publishing Company. If he is as pleasant a host as he is a guest, his cottage will be none too large to accommodate his friends.

From our position here by the lakeside, and with the aid of The Christian-Evangelist and our exchanges, it is not difficult for us to survey the wide field of operations covered by the forces of righteousness, and to note with interest the victories that are being won both at home and abroad. Let no one suppose that God is doing all his work in this world through the Church. The State is also a divine institution, and the powers that be in civil government are ordained of God. It is gratifying to see the strong hand of the National Government as well as of State Government, laid upon evil-doers. The lack of respect and reverence for law can only be remedied by strict enforcement of the law, and when such enforcement strikes great corporations and captains of industry there should be no flinching on the part of those whose duty it is to execute the laws. The wail sent up by some of our specialists in high finance, that the President's efforts to punish great corporations for their violations of law are going to plunge the country into financial depression, will not be misunderstood by the American people. Any prosperity that rests on fraud and conspiracy against the rights of the people deserves to be destroyed; but to imagine that this country is going into financial ruin because of the determination of the President and the people that capitalists and corporations must obey the law, is to assume what is not true—that the country's prosperity is based on a rotten foundation. If righteousness impoverishes a nation, then let us have impoverishment, but the laws of the universe will have to be reversed before such a proposition becomes credible. It is probably true that when the water is squeezed out of all the stock of all the corporations and companies, and business is put on an honest basis, that the fortunes of some people will shrink in value, and no doubt some innocent people will suffer, but the country as a whole will be vastly better for the change. In any event, let us be honest first, and then prosperous if we can.

We note, also, great activity among the churches along evangelistic and missionary lines of work. The various Protestant bodies are seeking to knit together in closer union the subdivisions which have divided their strength, and to perfect their organizations for more effective work. In our own Zion, in spite of a few discordant notes here and there, there is widespread activity along all the lines of advance toward our Centennial goal. The churches are manifesting increasing interest in our mission work, both at home and abroad, and the convention at Norfolk, in October, will probably register the highest point yet reached in our co-operative work in missions, education and benevolence. Just now the attention of the brotherhood should be directed toward the September offering for church extension. No department of our work has greater demands upon it than this, and none is more vitally connected with the permanent progress of our cause. Its value is so universally recognized, and the wisdom of the movement has been so fully vindicated by what has been achieved through it that no argument is needed to convince our people of its great utility. It is well for the brethren to bear in mind, however, that the church extension board, endorsed by the brotherhood, has set its mark for a million dollars by the time of our Centennial, and that this involves increased liberality on the part of our churches in their offerings for this work. With a million dollars in hand, the Board of Church Extension could respond favorably to many urgent calls to which it is now compelled to turn a deaf ear. Brother Muckley has the use of our columns to make his appeal in behalf of this fund, and we have no doubt but that the churches will respond liberally to his call.

We are dictating these lines before a sputtering fire whose warmth and radiance help to drive away the chill of what seems an autumn day. All night the wind was blowing a gale from the southwest, and the roar of the lake has kept up its ceaseless monotone all the night and forenoon. The steamer "Kansas," from Chicago, carrying, no doubt, many passengers for this place, passed us by this morning, as it has done several times recently, taking its Pentwater passengers to Ludington and sending them down on one of the little boats. The reason assigned for its failure to enter this port has been the lack of sufficient depth of water in the channel when there is a heavy sea. People here acquainted with the situation insist that there is no necessity for this precaution. Under these circumstances we feel that it is but right to advise all resorters coming from Chicago to Pentwater to come by way of the Goodrich Line of steamers to Muskegon, where they connect with the Pere Marquette Railway for Pentwater. Scores of our passengers for this port have been discommoded by this course of the "Kansas," a steamer of the Northern Michigan Transportation Company.

Yesterday we had a drive into the country to visit some of the great peach orchards for which this part of the state is famous. We were too early this season by two weeks for the main crop, but we secured a few early peaches and some ripe apples and plums, and had a most delightful ride, which afforded us a glimpse of farm life in Michigan. One of the charming features of rural life in Michigan is its trees—the beech, the chestnut, the maple, the oak, the hemlock and the pine—adding grace and beauty to the landscape and stretching out their limbs in grateful benediction over all the land.

Dedication Day in the Indian Territory

By S. R. HAWKINS, Corresponding Se cretary, Indian Territory.

A Church Aided by Church Extension.

At the last Annual Convention of the Indian Territory, held at McAlester, the Convention passed the following resolution:

"We are grateful to the Church Extension Board for aiding so many of our young churches and struggling missions to house themselves."

Church extension is an indispensable factor in the evangelizing of this territory. In new and growing towns there are no surplus buildings or halls. Almost every building has been rented, and at an almost forbidden sum, before the first shovel of dirt is thrown, or the first nail is driven. Hence, there is little chance to conduct a systematic church work without a church building. The people coming here are with rare exceptions of very limited means. They come here to seek and build homes for themselves. Things are more or less unsettled and uncertain. Brethren coming to this section have first to establish themselves in their trades and professions. This usually requires some years. In the meantime many of them are not making expenses, while others are thankful to "make ends meet" until the country is a "little more developed." In the meantime, towns are growing, property is advancing, choice corner lots are being occupied, and the various missionary and extension boards are active. Hence, were we without an Extension Board to which we could look for aid and encouragement, we would be well-nigh hopeless.

The Lord bless the Church Extension Board, and may it ever be the ready and willing friend of the homeless church in the future, as it is at present, and has been in the recent past. And that it may be possible for it to be such a friend to our missions and homeless churches, we beg of every church and every Disciple to remember church extension with a liberal offering in September.

What Church Extension Has Done for Missouri.

84 loans made, aggregating....$65,833.69; 47 loans returned, aggregating..$30,590

As the time draws near for the annual offering for church extension on the first Lord's day in September, I would gladly say any word that would, if possible, increase the interest and thus enlarge the offering for this great work. It is the desire of the corresponding secretary that the churches of Missouri shall not be one-sided or "lop-sided" in their missionary interest even though the "lop side" be the state missions side. A full-grown, all-around man, awake, alive, alert to every interest in life is the admiration of all; so of the congregation, it is grand to see one full grown, well-rounded, alert to every interest of the cause of Christ; but pitiful to see one grow narrow, selfish, prejudiced.

And yet, if only from a selfish standpoint church extension should challenge the interest of our Missouri people. In almost every county are church houses that would not have been possible but for the helping hand of this great interest. The congregation, financially weak, helpless to provide itself a home, dying for the want of shelter, has by the assistance that came from church extension found a church home in which to live, serve and worship God. This fact alone should bring a great offering from every Missouri church.

Then—another selfish incentive—we have so many that need help in this way now. One sad thing in connection with our cause in Missouri is the number of congregations that have no church home; meeting in schoolhouses, under arbors, in partnership houses and so-called union houses. This is one of our weaknesses, and the only institution that has the power to remedy this evil is church extension. As you pray for the extension of Christ's kingdom it is a good thing to join your giving with your praying that this agency for the permament extension of that kingdom may be able to do its Christlike work. Praying is one of the oars that moves the "old ship of Zion," but if we move onward and not in a circle, we must have another and that is giving.

Since the San Francisco convention I have been deeply impressed with the influence the Middle West is exerting on the religious life of the farther West. This to that is the base of supplies. Their ministers, elders, deacons, leaders of all kinds, are from Missouri and adjoining states. What the church here in this territory is, so will the church be in the region farther afield. But unhoused congregations are always a source of weakness, a weakness not only to the cause locally but, in this case, its influence extends in an emphatic way to the regions beyond.

In pleading, therefore, for a great offering for church extension I know I am asking for that which means blessing in the present, also in the future; blessing here in our own great state and still larger, greater, multiplied blessings to the "much land that is yet to be possessed."

Frail are the earthly ties that seem the strongest,
And only brief the life that lasts the longest;
And so, when Death to loss and weeping calls us,
'Tis but the common fate which then befalls us.

How many precious things there are to cheer us
Although our darlings are no longer near us!
Till we, like them, may cross the Silver River
God's promise and our trust sustain us ever.

God's promise and our trust, and memories sweeter
Than all the sweet, sweet songs of sweetest metre;
And hope, which shrinks not from the grave's grim portal,
And love, which death itself has made immortal.

And He, the Man who fell to bitter weeping
Beside the tomb where Lazarus was sleeping,
Shall bring us peace for pain and joy for crying
And teach us that, in Him, there is no dying!

OUR INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION

President Roosevelt, on Friday, April 26, 1907, formally declared open the Jamestown Exposition, which commemorates the three hundredth anniversary of the first permanent English settlement in the new world and the real birth of the great American republic.

In immediate attendance with the President for the opening ceremony were the members of the cabinet, justices of the United States Supreme Court, members of the diplomatic corps, special foreign commissioners, members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, high military and naval officers of this and other countries, governors of States, members of legislatures, mayors of cities and others prominent in public and private life.

Spread out before the visitor on one and was the broad expanse of Hampton Roads, with its mighty fleets, grim "regiments of the sea," but decked in gay colors of all nations, and gathered here in that spirit of comity, the preserving of which has become the avowed purpose of the building of navies. On the other hand, like a dreamland picture or mirage, enchanting, arose the Colonial City Beautiful, centered about the court of honor, Raleigh Square, and the lagoons, but caught in remoter view through vistas verdant in luxuriant growth of flowers and hedges, vines and trees and shrubbery, for here, as poetic fancy has aptly described it, was a beautiful wilderness that has been transformed into a wilderness of beauty.

April 26th, the date of the opening, corresponds to the date in 1607, on which Captain John Smith landed at Cape Henry, which he named in honor of the then Prince of Wales. It was not until May 13th that the settlers disembarked at Jamestown, and that is the date used by the President in his proclamation inviting the nations to participate.

On May 13, 1607, three boats anchored off a peninsula which jutted into Powhatan's River, and there set up a stockade place of defence, which they called James' Fort. One hundred and five settlers were left by the ships; among these was John Smith, a wonderful genius and adventurer, a man destined to carry the infant colony through perilous trials.

Smith and his men and those who followed them, made out of the fort a town which they called James City, and from James City grew Virginia, and from Virginia these United States.

The Exposition celebrates the 300th anniversary of the nation's beginning.

It is located on the shores overlooking the beautiful waters of Hampton Roads, Virginia, around which cluster the populous and thriving cities of Norfolk, Portsmouth and Newport News.

The site is one of unsurpassed natural beauty, the landscape treatment of which promises the most picturesque effect ever attained at any exposition held in America.

We, as a people, are weak on the Atlantic seaboard and in the South, and are, therefore, little known. For many years past the brethren of the east have thought we should have the National Convention at a centrally located place on the Atlantic seaboard, but no place was sufficiently strong to entertain it, and therefore it has not been asked to come. This year the Jamestown vicinity is in good shape to entertain any convention of 75,000 delegates.

The Disciples of Christ, in a convention in Norfolk, will have the best chance in the history of our movement to disseminate the truth as we understand it. The Exposition itself is in commemoration of the establishment of the first permanent English settlement in this country. These English settlers sought this country largely for religious freedom, and we as a people can sound the clearest notes on religious freedom on account of being freed from all denominational entanglements. This has been our plea for a century. Then, too, the navy and army of the United States and the navies of the greatest nations on earth will unite here. They can be viewed by delegates, and to a great extent the ears of the people can be secured. Here there will be persons of influence, moulders of thought and leaders of men whose hearts will be open to any message freed of religious prejudice and full of the brotherhood of man.

No other place in the East at a similar or dissimilar time could possibly present such a chance for effectual spread of truth. New York is too large and too far north. The convention would be lost sight of. Any other further south would not be sufficiently central in location. The size of Norfolk makes it so that any convention of ten thousand or more delegates will be the one attraction for the entire time it is within our gates. The newspapers will give all reports of everything, special Associated Press facilities having been arranged by the Jamestown Exposition to report all events at the convention city, and will send out our news far and wide. Norfolk being on the most splendid harbor on the Atlantic coast and centrally located, will make rates to the convention exceedingly cheap, and there will be strong competition between railroad and steamship lines.

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

Here I am again, lying on top of a sand dune, with nothing between me and the stars, and with the illimitable waters stretching away to the shores of Spain. I see but nature here and the hand that fashioned it. I have been asking myself why do the clouds float and what do the clouds say and what sort of people are the dwellers in Mars? I have been studying the scenery of the shore. We have no cliffs here at Bethany Beach, but league after league of silver sand, with fertile farm lands back of us, picturesque dunes and blue bays, and here and there fringes of woods; the quiet, impassive solid land, and the mobile sea never the same for a single moment, something always doing out there, even when the air is still and the world asleep, the hissing rollers chasing each other over the shallows, and the billows far out crested with white foam. From the shore at my feet to the long level horizon it is instinct with multitudinous all-pervading life. This is the sea's peculiar charm. All along here is delightful scenery, endless in its variety, in form and contour of the land as we pass from point to point, and the contrast of the rise and fall of the land with the never-varying level of the ocean: in the blue waters running up in little creeks and bays and inlets; in the cultivated fields that run down close to the shore line. No two days are things alike. There are constantly changing forms and colors. The dunes are forever taking on new shapes and the shore line varies year by year; the water has different shades for different hours, and robes itself in all imaginable hues. Poets talk of "the deep blue sea," or "azure main," but that is poetry. Yonder in the distance is a deep blue tint, nearer a greenish hue, and here by the shore a yellow or brown mass rolls in. We have the "Red Sea," and "Yellow Sea," "Black Sea," and "White Sea," and as the sea surface reflects the varying hues of the day, from the pearly grey of dawn to the crimson and gold of sunset, or changes its tints according to the state of the weather from cerulean blue to inky black, we find no end of colors. But how does sea water get its shade, is a question from the time of the old Phoenicians down to this hour.

One of the most remarkable contrasts is between the intensely blue seas of the tropics and the green seas of higher latitudes. There is a relation between the color of sea water and the proportion of salt, they tell us; when the change comes from deep blue to dark green the water is less salt and less heavy. Salt and specific gravity. Both the fisherman and the mariner take note of the color of the water as affording indications of the vicinity of land or the mouth of a river, the depth of the sea, or the presence of a current; and the scientist judges by it of the course of the great oceanic streams that flow up and down from equator to poles. Sometimes great masses of floating sea-weed give wide tracts of water their red, yellow or brown. So we have our "Sargasso Sea," which means the sea-weed sea. These floating meadows scared Columbus and his men. Sometimes the sea swarms with minute organisms which give it color. There are Diatoms, Medusae, Crustaceans, Naviculae, or "little ships," and the "Sea Sawdust" we read about. Often I watch at night the luminous crests of the waves here, the short, bright flashes of phosphorescence which these tiny crustaceans make for my amusement, and sometimes these waves, cut by the oar or the screw of a ship, stir like liquid masses of gold. It is a great sight to watch the sea, and study the deep things of God in the deep, and hear his voice in the great waters.

Here are subjects of endless study. The tides, the marine life, the sea anemones and sea squirts, the fishes and birds, the wanderings of a pebble or the history of a grain of sand may enlist you for a week. Here are shells; above you are clouds; off yonder the fogs gather. What do you know of shells and clouds and fogs? What are water fleas? How does a fish swim? How does the wind change? And why is the sea salt? What are the stars made of, and why does the rain fall? And what do you know of the anatomy of a crab, and sea flowers; how do they grow? And where is Atlantis? You listen to the eternal toil of the ocean, and ask, with little Paul Dombey, "What are the wild waves saying?" To some their voices are vague and indefinite, but to the patient and docile inquirer into the secrets of nature they speak in a manner which can not be mistaken. We see the water rise up on the beach to a certain height, then fall back, or recede to a certain distance, twice in twenty-four hours. This flowing and ebbing we call a tide. We notice the high water of the two tides on one day is not the same, one rises higher on the beach than another. We observe again of any tide that it varies in height, rising less and less every day for a few days, then higher and higher for a few days more, till it reaches its highest point, when the same cycle of operations is repeated. Then, noting the hour at which the highest point is reached on different days, we find it is not the same every day, but a little later. There is a period of more than twenty-four hours between high water to-day and high water yesterday. Then in fifteen days the cycle is complete, and high water comes at the same hour. Now we want to know what it means and we think of the tides as great waves following one another with twelve hours between the crest and the hollow, and two in a day suggests the revolution of the earth on its axis, but as it takes more than twenty-four hours for the two waves to pass, we suppose there must be some other influence to reckon with. We observe the cycle is fifteen days, or two in thirty days, or about "one moon," and the thought comes, may not the moon lift up the water of the ocean in the shape of a wave as it travels round its course of twenty-eight days; and we see also the highest tides in the time of new and full moon, and lowest about first and third quarters.

So, if we go on in our questioning, the wild waves will tell us many things: Of the ceaseless march of the ground under our feet; of the grander movements of the orbs of heaven; of the world's age, and its failing steps and slower movement than of old, which foretells a time when the earth shall become as the moon; and we listen with a sort of awe to the ceaseless music of the deep, and ask:

> "Is it a friendly greeting,
> Or a warning that calls away?"

Men have always heard voices in the great deep. "Neptune has raised up his turbulent plains, the sea falls and leaps upon the trembling shores. She remounts, groans, and with redoubled blows makes the abyss and the shaken mountains resound." "Neptune's white herds are lowing o'er the deep." "Let the heavens be glad, and let the earth rejoice; and let the sea roar and the fullness thereof." "And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, forever and ever."

PASTY FOOD.

Too Commonly Used.

The use of pasty cereals is not advisable. A physician says: "Pasty cereals are very indigestible and a bad thing for the stomach, causing a depressed feeling and quite a train of disorders, particularly of the intestines and nerves.

"Cereals, such as wheat and oats, can be cooked long enough and well enough to fit them for human use but the ordinary way of cooking leaves them in a pasty condition."

An Indiana man says: "My physician prohibited the use of oats and wheat for I was in a bad condition physically, with pronounced dyspepsia. He said the heavy paste was indigestible but that Grape Nuts, being a thoroughly cooked food and cooked in such a manner as to change the starch into a form of sugar, is very easily digested."

I have become very fond, indeed, of Grape-Nuts and all the uncomfortable feelings have disappeared. I have gained nearly twelve pounds in weight and have none of the distressed feeling after my meals which I had formerly. Grape-Nut food has done the work." "There's a Reason." Education of the Children of Missionaries

By F. E. Meigs

The care and education of their children is one of the most trying problems with which the foreign missionaries have to deal. Fittingly it has been called "the Gethsemane of missionary service," and, notwithstanding the many attempts to solve it that have been made, it still casts its darkening shadow and its crushing weight upon the missionary heart. For the most part, if the children of missionaries receive any education at all, it must be given by their fathers and mothers in their own homes. With most missionaries this is almost an impossibility. They have neither the special training nor the time for this work. Then, too, in the midst of heathenism the children miss the inspiration of companionship with others that produces general development.

Inevitably and all too soon—even though in rare cases the primary instruction may have been fairly well conducted—the time arrives when both the missionaries and their children enter into their Gethsemane experience. The heartstrings begin to pull, for the time of separation is at hand. There is only one relief for the feeling that the missionary's child is not having a fair chance, and that is, that he is torn from his home and sent to school in England, America, or some other land beyond the seas. What these separations mean to the fathers and mothers, and to the boys and girls, can be fully understood only by those who have passed through the terrible ordeal.

This break-up of families is the crux of the problem. Were it possible to picture the scenes of parting, the long anxious years of toilsome loneliness and waiting, the goodbyes that the dragging lapse of time often turns into final farewells; could one describe the chill of an unlit hearth in a heathen land, because of a broken home; could one express the yearning of a missionary mother's heart for the tender child that she has sent far away because she loved it much, and herself tarried in dark heathendom because she loved Christ even more—surely many Christian hearts would be open to our importunate cry.

It may be said, of course, that missionaries when choosing their calling know that such trials await them. But does not this foreknowledge on the part of the missionary emphasize the privilege and responsibility of his fortune-favored brother in the home-land? If Christians are to "bear each other's burdens," we must cease to look upon the missionary as one who has a special right to suffer trials. It is a sound principle of missionary economy that the foreign worker should be relieved of all unnecessary burdens that he may give his time and energy to the special work he is sent to do. The life of the home churches will be enriched and the foreign missionary work materially advanced, if those who live amid the bounty and blessings of Christian civilization, will seek to put as much joy, happiness and sunshine as possible into the lives of the brave men and women who have gone as the heralds of Christ into the non-Christian world.

The establishment of the G. L. Wharton Memorial Home at Hiram, O., will in a large measure lighten the burden of the missionary. It will provide for those for whom no other provision can now be made. Surely a great religious and missionary people like the Disciples of Christ will be swift to respond in making this necessary provision. While thousands will be able to give only small sums, there are men and women among us who could make no better use of the funds intrusted to their stewardship by the Lord than in putting large sums into this tender ministry to child life in aid of missions.

heart foundation has no place in the Disciples' view of the Gospel. Akin to the misrepresentation already referred to is another where Doctor Folk says that the "Campbellite" faith is a "mere historical belief that Jesus Christ is the Son of God", whereas the Disciples of Christ utterly repudiate all these adjectives, "mere historical," "evangelical," "experimental," etc., when they are used to describe faith. The faith to which the Disciple of Christ holds involves everything both human and divine that belongs to a belief which the sinner must exercise in order to his acceptance with God. Again: "the Campbellite does not believe in an experience of grace in the heart." Now this phrase "experience of grace" is a somewhat elastic thing. It has a very different meaning even among Baptists, varying according to the experience of each individual who has felt this experience, as Doctor Folk expresses it. But if Doctor Folk, or any one else, thinks that the average Disciple of Christ repudiates the notion that the truly converted Christian does not apprehend this fact in his own consciousness, or that his own spirit does not testify with the spirit of God that He has passed from death into life, then all I can say is, all such representations are wholly misrepresentations, and have no foundation whatever, in anything written or spoken by intelligent Disciple teachers.

But why continue these quotations? The article in question is a perversion of the facts of the case from beginning to end, and makes it perfectly evident to me at least, that if Doctor Folk represents his brethren, in his statements concerning either our position or the Baptists' position, then undoubtedly union between the two bodies is an impossibility, and furthermore it ought to be an impossibility, if the facts are as he has stated them. The only hope I have in the matter, after reading such a book as the one before me, is that the men who have written with respect to many things in the book, have written without a correct knowledge of the facts, and that if they are good men, as I have no doubt they are, they will be glad to reconsider many of their statements, and especially will Doctor Folk be willing to reconsider what he has said about the Disciples of Christ under the nickname of "Campbellite." If, however, these statements are regarded by the Baptists generally as substantially true, there is no use whatever for any further conference with respect to union between the two bodies. I would not, myself, be a party to any further parleys on the subject; but I do not believe that nineteen-twentieths of the well-informed Baptists will agree with Doctor Folk in his statements with respect to either the Baptists or Disciples. He does not fairly represent the teaching of either one of these religious bodies.

In conclusion, I wish to say, what I have frequently said before, that the first step in order to Christion union is a cessation of misrepresentations. It is no doubt true that in the heat of controversy we sometimes ascribe to our opponents positions which they do not hold; but surely every man ought to be allowed to define his own position. This is one of the rights guaranteed in the courts of law, and is one of the fundamental principles of the Declaration of Independence. Surely as Christians we ought to be as fair as men of the world are.

WHAT'S THE USE?

To Pour in Coffee when it Acts as a Vicious Enemy.

Fasters have gone without food for many days at a time but no one can go without sleep. "For a long time I have not been sleeping well often lying awake for two or three hours during the night but now I sleep sound every night and wake up refreshed and vigorous," says a Calif. woman.

"Do you know why? It's because I used to drink coffee but I finally cut it out and began using Postum. Twice since then I have drank coffee and both times I passed a sleepless night, and so I am doubly convinced coffee caused the trouble and Postum removed it.

"My brother was in the habit of drinking coffee three times a day. He was troubled with sour stomach and I would often notice him getting soda from the can to relieve the distress in his stomach; lately hardly a day passed without a dose of soda for relief.

"Finally he tried a cup of Postum and liked it so well he gave up coffee and since then has been drinking Postum in its place and says he has not once been troubled with sour stomach."

Even after this lady's experience with coffee her brother did not suspect for a time that coffee was causing his sour stomach, but easily proved it.

Coffee is not suspected in thousands of cases just like this but it's easily proved. A ten days' trial works wonders. There's a Reason."

Our Budget

—Church Extension day, September 1!

—Church extension has the right of way through August and September.

—Read what Missouri is doing for church extension. It is not one-tenth what it ought to do.

—Are you loving your neighbor as yourself? There is an injunction to that effect. Think of this in the face of the church extension offering.

—We have "got in on the ground floor" in Oklahoma and the Indian Territory because we followed up the evangelist in housing the new congregations. See what S. R. Hawkins says on page 1072.

—Jamestown! Norfolk! October 11-17.

—Our annual international convention is to be held at Norfolk, and those going will have an opportunity of seeing the Jamestown Exposition and many of the historic and beautiful places around the Atlantic coast.

—The exposition celebrates the 300th anniversary of the nation's beginning. At our convention steps will be taken toward the celebration of the first century of our existence as a distinct movement. Plan to go yourself. Every church should have a delegate. We will be glad to have you join the party going on The Christian-Evangelist Special, via the Big Four and C. & O. from St. Louis, but you can join us en route.

—Our "As We Go to Press" service is crippled by the telegraphers' strike.

—Dr. Charles E. Varney, who recently joined our brotherhood from the Universalists, seems to have been very much pleased with Chalmers McPherson, when he recently met him during a chautauqua in Texas.

—The church at Cleburne, Texas, is still, we believe, without a preacher. This is a town of some 18,000 people and we have a good church. Brown Douglas is the elder with whom correspondence should be carried on.

—W. H. Waggoner has recently closed good institutes at Marshfield, Richland, Buffalo and El Dorado Springs, Mo. Brother Waggoner does excellent work in the way of instructing and inspiring churches.

—The church at Orange, Cal., is reported to be in excellent condition. Its children's day offering was $62, for San Francisco the collection was $70. The resident membership is now 275. A. N. Glover is the minister.

—Oscar Ingold, of Chandler, Okla., writes: "To-night I am to baptize a Methodist who is a prominent citizen of our town. He has been in regular attendance for some time, and has often repeated the promise to unite with us. Last night he made a request for baptism to-night."

—Brother Smither reports the inauguration of a new church in Los Angeles for the colored brethren. We believe that Los Angeles and Kansas City are the two cities where the most mission work is being done at present. At least they seem to report more new causes than any other places.

—The Christian-Evangelist office was favored by calls last week from M. S. Johnson, Litchfield, Ill.; I. H. Fuller and son, of Lamonte, Mo., and J. D. Greer, Laddonia, Mo. We regret to state that Brother Greer was in the city by reason of his wife's serious illness.

—John Williams, pastor of the church at Wayland, Mich., concluded his work there on August 11 and began at Junction City, Kan., last Lord's day. The church at Wayland accepted his resignation with regret, and expressed the utmost confidence in him, regretting that he had to seek a dryer climate.

—Rochester Irwin has returned to his work at Washburn, Ill., after a delightful vacation. His work is prospering. A good offering was made for San Francisco, while for the general home field over $200 was contributed. The average prayer-meeting attendance has been, since the first of the year, 35.

—In another column we publish some biographical facts about N. J. Aylsworth, whose death we have already announced. We regret that we have been unable to present the outline of his life earlier. He was a man of great worth of character and of strong intellectual endowments.

—Up till the end of August there had been during the past quarter 22 additions by baptism, with five persons ready for the ordinance and 24 added by letter or statement, at Leavenworth, Kan., where W. J. Dodge is minister. The church feels that they made a wise selection when they secured him to lead them.

—There is progress in every department at Herrin, Ill., where R. L. Cartwright is minister. Improvements have been put upon the building, a choir organized and song books secured. There have been 24 additions to the membership, missionary offerings taken and a Christian Endeavor society organized.

—George Elmer Hicks, who served the church at Laporte, Ind., with much acceptance for three years, but resigned on account of his wife's health, now finds this so much improved as to justify their acceptance of work again. He would, therefore, like to locate for full time and may be addressed at Rochester, Ind.

—Walter Scott Priest was delighted with our Bethany number, and would like all the pictures—"the best I have seen, in such form that they could be framed together or in a series. I would like to have them in my study." We are glad to note that Brother Priest is well again and was to return shortly to his work at Columbus, Ohio.

—Joseph Gaylor is assisting J. Jones at Green Ridge, Mo. Beginning with September 8 he will be with R. W. Blunt at Monett, and thence goes to Norwood in November. He writes that E. H. Williamson, the living link evangelist of South Street, Springfield, has proven his ability, and churches desiring meetings should write to him at once.

—We regret to learn that J. J. Cole has had one more severe trial to bear. Just after being able to return to his work from a forty weeks' confinement in a hospital and three operations he went to Washington C. H., O., leaving his wife and baby at Corbin, Ky. Two days later he was informed by telegram that the baby had died quite suddenly.

—P. C. Macfarlane says the year's work in California has been a great one in spite of the earthquake. The state convention just held was a splendid one, and Corresponding Secretary Russell was able to give an inspiring report. The financial report, he says, shows that California does more for her state work than any other state in the brotherhood, comparatively speaking.

—A committee on reception of the Kentucky University and Bible College asks us to make known the fact that students coming to these colleges should look out for boys with ribbon badges, who will be at the depot, if they will state what trains they are coming to Lexington on. Address R. T. Carpenter, J. R. Breland or T. A. Houston.

—L. N. Early is just closing a successful year's work with the church at Broken Bow, Neb. An indefinite call has been extended him, with an increase of $200 in salary. During the past year one of the best churches in the society has been erected by our people and in the best location. It was formally opened Sunday, August 11, F. M. Rains assisting in the services.

—Frank Huston, passing through St. Louis, telephoned between trains that he has just been with W. F. Buchanan in an excellent meeting at Lancaster, Pa., with 42 additions. Brother Buchanan remains in that field, while Brother Huston is assisting J. H. Coil at Laddonia, Mo., after which he will return to Lancaster, where the meeting will be continued until the time of the international convention. This is a new church and the effort is to thoroughly establish it.

Church Extension Offering

WHICH ARE YOU GOING TO HAVE?

A lonely slab of stone telling that you are dead—OR

Will YOU help to build a monument filled with life and have it speak in your place?

IS DUE IN SEPTEMBER

ARE YOU READY
to enlist your congregation for Church Extension? Use the best Sunday in September for the offering according to your local conditions.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-EIGHT WORTHY MISSIONS
have asked for aid in erecting buildings since January 1st. Nothing less than ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS will answer these appeals. Inspiration enough, you say, to enlist any Church of Christ in the Annual Offering.

WRITE AT ONCE
Ordering literature and collection envelopes and tell the Board that you will take the Offering. Many other churches would apply for aid if a large collection gave them hope.

ANNUITY MONEY
The annuity feature of Church Extension is profitable to you and the Board. You receive 6 per cent and the Board builds churches with your money. Write for information to G. W. Muckley, Kansas City, Mo., and order supplies by postal card. They will be sent free.

—J. E. Spiegel, one of the family of preacher boys, has resigned at Corsicana, Texas, and the church there will require a minister. The brethren are preparing to build a new house of worship and have already secured a parsonage. Letters may be addressed to J. B. Ambrose. Brother Spiegel will take up his former work of evangelist in Mississippi.

—Baxter Waters, in writing us about the recent Minnesota State Convention, says that among the most interesting sessions was an open parliament on "Christian Union," this subject being presented from the standpoint of Disciples, Congregationalists, Baptists and Free Baptists. A fine spirit prevailed, and many encouraging signs of a better day appeared on the horizon.

—T. N. Kincaid wishes to make a correction which appeared in his advertisement in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on the plans for the Hot Springs work. The statement was: "We will raise $10,000 and borrow $5,000 from the Board of Church Extension." It should have read: "We will raise $10,000 and will try and borrow $5,000 from the Board of Church Extension."

—We regret to learn that W. A. Wherry, late of Commerce, Texas, who for some months was in attendance at Drake University, and preached for the church at Weldon, has been compelled to give up his work in the ministry on account of failing health. Leslie G. Parker, who sends the information, says Brother Wherry had a bright future before him.

—One of our exchanges prints the paper on "The Newest Evangelism," by George H. Combs, and gives credit to the "Preachers' Helper." It is quite probable "The Preachers' Helper" subsequently printed the address of Brother Combs, but THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST secured the manuscript immediately after the delivery of the address and printed it in our special Sunday-school number.

—The First Christian Church at Fort Worth, Texas, has secured its three living-link-men—J. M. Lord, in the Philippines, Ward Russell for city evangelist of Fort Worth, and E. C. Boynton for the home field to work in Huntsville, Texas, where it is thought there is a fine opening. Here is located one of the state normal schools. J. J. Morgan is preaching for both of our Fort Worth churches.

—Reports indicate that while we are not making great numerical increase in Minnesota, our churches are becoming stronger and better equipped. There is a pluck and determination that is admirable. These churches are liberal givers, and if many churches in the center of our people paid their preachers in proportion to their financial strength, these salaries would be from five to ten thousand dollars.

—A directory of the Central Church, Newcastle, Pa., has been printed and hung in twenty-five common places in the neighborhood. On the rally day for the building fund the second $800 note was paid on the debt. During last year there were 91 additions by baptism and 23 otherwise, while the money raised for local work was over $2,700 and for missions $445. F. M. Biddle is the minister.

—We clipped the following from the "Messenger," a weekly bulletin of our church at Milwaukee: "W. C. Kenner, representing THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, last week made a most remarkably successful canvass of our membership, securing sixty-two subscribers for that splendid paper. Most of these were from homes not receiving one of our church papers.

The uplift that will come to these homes and to this church through the weekly visits of The Christian-Evangelist will be of untold value. Brother Kenner is a fine Christian gentleman, and his visit was a great blessing to us."

—A note from Miss Annie A. Lackey tells us that the work goes on as usual at Deoghur. "We are happy in our little corner of India," she writes. "Miss Mills and I are the only workers at present, but we are hoping and expecting others soon. Please pray for Deoghur." She encloses an article, "Glimpses Inside Temple Walls," which will be printed in The Christian-Evangelist.

—J. Boyd Jones has begun a series of illustrated sermons, and the first Sunday night's audience, according to the Marion (Ind.) "Leader," looked more like a midwinter audience with the church work in full blast, than it did like a summer audience with a large number of the people away on their vacations. From the brief outline of the sermon, which was on the "Prodigal Son," it was a very effective one. We are glad to note that a large number of young men were present.

—E. W. Allen, pastor of the Central Church of Christ at Wichita, Kan., has begun a Sunday evening service at the Crawford Theatre, and on the first night there was an attendance of 800, while on the following Sunday evening this was increased. We learn that as many people remained to the after meeting as would have been present at the regular church meeting had the services been held at the church. The work is going along very successfully.

—Evangelist C. L. Organ, who has for almost two years been connected with the State Board of Iowa, has been spending the summer with the church at Clinton. He will continue under the direction of the state board, and those desiring his services in meetings should write him at once, for he is making his plans for the autumn and winter. Address him at 1026 Twenty-seventh street, Des Moines, Iowa, or B. S. Denny, the corresponding secretary, at 1218 Twenty-ninth street, in the same city.

—Lowell C. McPherson is preaching, during the summer, a series of Sunday evening sermons for a "People's Popular Service" on such subjects as "Paganism, Rationalism or Christianity—Which?" "Is Bible Revelation Necessary?" "Sowing and Reaping—Cause and Effect;" "God's Precious Invitation and Your Responsibility;" "Three Thousand Converted — How?" "What Must I Do To Be Saved?" "How to Receive and Enjoy the Holy Spirit's Power;" "How to Meet Doubts and Confusion."

—Here is the way one traveler sees things: "Crossing the Dakota line at Fargo, we could but notice the wonderful difference between Moorhead, Minn., and Fargo, N. D. The Red river separates these towns, forming the line between the two states. Moorhead is a dirty, dilapidated looking place with few good buildings, few churches, no paved streets, but many saloons. Fargo has fine business blocks, paved streets, a Y. M. C. A. building, Carnegie library, magnificent homes, but no saloons."

—F. E. Lindenmeyer has closed his work at Amboy, Minn., to go to Salix, Ia. He reports his late charge as a self-sacrificing missionary band and a fine people to labor with. They granted him a month's vacation. This church will want a preacher who can take three services each Lord's day and drive twenty miles. They can pay $1,000. Correspondents should address A. A. Marks. Churches near Des Moines needing Brother Lindenmeyer's services as a student preacher, may write to him at his new address.

—A note from J. C. Alexander, of Bowling Green, Ky., informs us that a good little church house has just been completed at Rays Branch. The M. E. Church South has a building there. We will organize with about twenty-five members. The purpose is to have an up-to-date church. They will contribute toward all our organized efforts. The cause, we learn, has been greatly neglected there, for the spirit of anti-ism has been prevalent in that county. Several congregations have been broken up and our great plea has been unfairly represented and misunderstood.

—We regret to record the death of Mrs. Nettie McCorkle, pastoral helper of the Lenox Avenue Union Church, New York City, who died in the Skin and Cancer Hospital there after an illness of more than six months. Brother Lichtenberger writes: "She was a splendid worker. Her training in Hiram College and the School of Pastoral Helpers gave her a rare efficiency, and she was competent to work in every department. We miss her greatly for the active service, but treasure her memory. She is mourned by the whole church." She formerly was with the Jefferson Street Church, Buffalo, N. Y. The funeral services were conducted at Garrettsville, Ohio. She leaves a daughter about 17 years old.

—At Denison, Texas, George W. Lee has just celebrated his second anniversary there. According to his custom, Brother Lee gave a resume of the year's work, followed by an appropriate address to his people. It had been, he said, a year full of new experiences, duties, privileges, joys and sorrows. He reported the Sunday-school, under the superintendency of Brother Blackwell, in a flourishing condition, with the Endeavor Societies also doing well. There had been an average attendance of 30 at the midweek prayer service, and the Ladies' Aid had been a great help. There were 48 additions to the membership—16 by confession and baptism—a net gain of 33. Nearly $1,200 was raised.

—At Missoula, Mont., where W. H. Bagby ministers, substantial progress is being made. He recently baptized an English gentleman and his wife, who have seen a great part of the world as war correspondents for leading English journals. They are very intelligent people, and as they propose to make Missoula their home, will be a most valuable acquisition to the working forces of the church. During the past few weeks the indebtedness upon the parsonage has been reduced more than $400. In the regular services audiences and interest are good. The State Convention will be held with this church September 23-26. Prospects are good for a fine convention.

—We have just received "The Story of the Seattle Convention," which is an official report of the Twenty-third International Christian Endeavor Convention, just held at Seattle, Wash. Reports have already been published in The Christian-Evangelist from Amos R. Wells, who is well known to every Christian Endeavor worker, and B. B. Tyler. The official report, however, is a volume of 160 pages, and is well illustrated with pictures of those taking part and of scenes at the convention. Among members of the Christian Church, whose faces we recognize, are: B. B. Tyler, Herbert L. Willett and A. W. Kokendoffer.

—Our latest information is that about $5,000 came in on the offering in July for San Francisco, and probably as much more will reach the home office during this month. This is entirely inadequate and ought to make our brotherhood ashamed of itself. If your church took the offering and has not forwarded the money, this should be sent at once to the American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, Ohio, indicating the specific purpose for which the money is sent. The whole offering ought to have amounted to at least $25,000. We are glad to report that the First Church, San Francisco, has been enabled to make a payment of $3,000 to their contractors, and that work is now going on again. P. C. Macfarlane has examined the building carefully, and reports that it will prove a commodious and effective workshop.

As We Go to Press.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

President W. E. Garrison has been holding a teachers' institute in Aztec, N. M. He took a cross-country horseback ride of forty miles to Durango, Colo., on Saturday afternoon, preaching to the brethren there twice on Sunday, and returned to Aztec Monday morning. There is no church in Durango, but there are about thirty members, most of them from Missouri. The Colorado State Board is to arrange a meeting in October and an organization will be effected.

The Beginners' Lessons.

The up-to-date school separates for recitation the little folks who are under school age from the other primary pupils. They all meet together for the opening and closing exercises, however.

A few years ago the International Lesson Committee prepared a two years' course of lessons for these little tots. We call these little ones the beginners and these lessons the Beginners' Lessons.

We publish this two years' course of lessons. We have recently added a superb set of pictures to our list of supplies for illustrating these Beginners' Lessons. There are fifty-two large pictures, nine by eleven inches, for the use of the teacher before the class. The price of the set is three dollars. The same pictures reduced in size are given to the little folks to take home. The edges are perforated so they can be tied in a portfolio with little ribbons. These little pictures cost twenty-four cents for the set of fifty-two, or six cents a year.

September is the time to begin this course of lessons. In ordering be careful to say which year's lessons you wish, the first or second.

The quarterly for the teacher is twenty cents a year.

Do not lose sight of the fact that this year we have added six new quarterlies, a system of supplemental lessons, a teacher-training course, a new editor and a new department in Our Young Folks. No publishing house can supply the needs of a modern school so satisfactorily as we.

Virginia State Convention

The Virginia convention was held this year at Piedmont assembly grounds, near Gordonsville, July 30 to August 2. Tne convention was full of interest from start to finish, and was counted as one of Virginia's best.

The first two sessions were given to the Ministerial Association. The chief addresses were delivered by R. E. Elmore, on "The Preacher Among His Books and Papers," and by J. D. Hamaker, in a message to preachers. The Virginia ministers have adopted an insurance plan, and already one worthy preacher has been helped by them.

The work of the second day was in the hands of tne C. W. B. M. The chief address was delivered by Mrs. Ivan H. Wise. At the close of her masterful presentation of the subject of missions, an offering amounting to $475 was taken for the Portland Chinese mission. This is to be applied on the Centennial pledge of $1,000 made by the Virginia C. W. B. M. B. A. Abbott and W. M. Forrest each delivered good addresses on C. W. B. M. themes.

The sessions of the Virginia Missionary Society began on Wednesday night, July 31. The president, W. F. Fox, presided and made a few opening remarks. H. C. Combs read the report of the board and H. P. Atkins preached the convention sermon.

Tne report of the board showed that the total receipts were $8,741.85 in nine months. In the receipts were reported $2,700 stock in two good companies. This stock was the gift of E. N. Newman, treasurer of the society. Through the efforts of the state board four churches were organized, and five Sunday-schools were constituted; three houses were dedicated, eight pastors supported in local work, and 62 places assisted. There were added to the church 818 persons, 501 being baptized. When we remember that this report covers only nine months we Virginians feel that this is a time to be greatly encouraged.

Virginia is working on her trust or permanent fund. This fund now has $8,863.47. A brother has just stated his desire to give $1,000 to this fund on the annuity plan. Many others should speedily follow his lead. An effort is being made to reach $20,000 by October, 1909.

R. E. Elmore read a paper on evangelism, which W. J. Wright carried away to some of his institutes of evangelism. E. B. Kemm spoke practically and effectively on "The Cause and Cure of Frequent Changes in Pastorates." These two addresses were discussed by W. J. Wright, B. A. Abbott and J. B. Jones.

The speakers from other fields who helped to make our convention a success, were B. A. Abbott, of Baltimore; W. J. Wright and S. J. Corey, of Cincinnati; E. B. Bagby, of Cleveland, and President J. D. Jones, of William Woods College, Fulton, Mo.

There were thirty Virginia preachers present, nearly all of whom had some part on the program. An address, which called forth much favorable comment and made a deep impression was one by C. O. Woodward on "A Passion for Souls."

The music of the convention was conducted by A. L. Clarke, ably assisted by Miss Jessie Bowman, organist, and Miss Leake, pianist. Mrs. Taylor, of Richmond; Miss Annie Bell, of Wilburn; Miss Sallie Holladay, of Norfolk, and Miss McAlexander, of Gordonsville, sang sweet solos at various times during the convention.
